Where the Profit Goes

THE exhibitor who takes anything in the way of posters that is offered to him, is like the woman who does her shopping over the telephone. She usually gets that merchandise on which the storekeeper makes the most profit. Cheap posters are profitable to the distributor of them. Fine posters are profitable to the exhibitor. As an exhibitor are you working for his profit or your own?

The RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. has been developed to produce fine posters—and nothing but fine posters, for the greatest poster artists and poster printers in the world constitute the organization. Only one thing are we incapable of—the turning out of inferior posters. Being incapable of that, we cannot, and will not, compete for cheap posters. We work for quality and quality only. If the exhibitor wants fine posters he is assured of having them when he gets RITCHEY posters. If he wants RITCHEY posters he should book films with which they are distributed. There are always plenty to select from, among them the best that are being produced. And to be sure of having RITCHEY posters—be sure they show the RITCHEY trade mark!

"JUST wanted to write you informing you that as long as Universal continues making pictures like 'The Devil's Passkey' so long will I use them. You are aware that my house has only 180 seats in a town with a population of 440. I admit that I paid practically four times as much for 'The Devil's Passkey' as I have for any other picture, but I can honestly and truthfully say that my patrons are 100% pleased. Please let me have my dates on 'Once To Every Woman' as soon as possible."

Exclusive Thrills as well as Exclusive News

"FLIRTING With The Undertaker" might be the subtitle for a series of unusually thrilling scenes found exclusively in International News No. 12. The pictures show Capt. Charles Fitzgerald and Lieuts. David and Daughney playing "tag" with Eternity atop a 20-story building in course of construction on Broadway. This is only one more example of the unbeatable Enterprise of International News, just as only one more example of International Service is the airplane tour of the United States soon to be started by Capt. Fitzgerald, during which he will make personal appearances with his stunt pictures at first run theatres showing International News. Enterprise and Service such as this, together with other good qualities that are evident in every issue, help make International News the biggest seat-seller in its field.

Thanks to You—

A glance at the map of the U. S. A. just over the page will show you that there are very few cities in the country, with a population of 10,000 and over, whose leading theatres are not protected by a REALART STAR FRANCHISE. That's something to be proud of—flattering evidence of exhibitors' confidence in Realart.

Thanks to you, we say, for without this confidence—without your hearty and generous cooperation, this record could not have been made.

The season holds wonderful promise. May your share of its successes and its profits be greater than ever!

first original screen story.
(Directed by Wallace Worsley presented by Eminent Authors)

"don't neglect your wife" - a drama of San Francisco Society and New York's Five Points. It is one of the most perfect productions ever made—and "ever" is a long long time.

"don't neglect your wife" is not a hit - or - miss adaptation of a novel. Gertrude Atherton not only wrote the story—she lent her personal co-operation to the production.

AN ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS PRODUCTION

MACK SENNETT

Presents HIS SIX-PART COMEDY-DRAMA,

A SMALL TOWN IDOL

A GIGANTIC ASSAULT on the STRONGHOLDS of GLOOM

Featuring BEN TURPIN, CHARLIE MURRAY & MARIE PREVOST, PHYLLIS HAVER

Breaking All Records

MACK SENNETT'S "A Small Town Idol" is pre-eminently the greatest comedy drama and the biggest box-office success ever produced by the screen's ablest creator of laughter and happiness. First run exhibitors are the authors of this statement. What a Producer and his agents think of a picture makes little difference; what the box-office reflects means everything.

Now in its fourth week of tremendous patronage at the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles. Broke all records at Stillwell's Casino, Spokane. Ready to begin its engagement of two weeks or longer at the Strand, San Francisco. Sought for extended runs by big showmen everywhere who proclaim it as "bigger than 'Mickey.'"

MACK SENNETT in "A Small Town Idol" has delivered everything he promised in advance to the nation's exhibitors. "A Small Town Idol" has comedy in abundance; it has thrills and action; it has love and romance; it is a radical departure from all previous Sennett production standards and newspaper critics hail it everywhere as his achievement supreme.

What Exhibitors, the Public and Newspapers Think

"Lying Lips," the latest Thomas H. Ince release, submitted for the first time for the approval of a New Bern audience, is one of the most idealistic conceptions of screen dramatization it has ever been our good fortune to witness.

The picture teaches the great lesson of the futility of wealth as the goal of human desire, and the desirability of the simple life in the achievement of happiness. But the beauty of the picture itself, the lavishness displayed in its construction, almost equals the work of the very fine artists chosen to portray the character roles. There is not a false note in the production anywhere. The breaking to pieces of the great ship in a great storm, the brilliance of the social gatherings among the elect of London, the awakening of the human instinct in the girl fettered by the desire and the necessity for great wealth, and the sordidness of a marriage without love—All these things are presented with a telling effect and a fine regard for the beautification of the ensemble.

If all the pictures made were as fine as "Lying Lips," as true to life, as beautifully conceived and as artistically constructed, there would be little need for a censorship of pictures in this or any other state. We do not believe there was a person in the audience last night in whose memory this fine picture will not linger long. Ince apparently censors his pictures before they are made.

We predict that "Lying Lips" will delight many thousands throughout the length and breadth of the land as it delighted two discriminating audiences at the Masonic last night. To our way of thinking it is the best picture since "The Birth of a Nation."

"THE SPICE OF THE PROGRAM"

BEAUTY

The scenic pictures made under the direction of Robert C. Bruce are well named the "Scenics Beautiful." They entertain any audience, anywhere—yet they are to the art of motion pictures what the canvases of Rembrandt, Velasquez or Whistler are to the art of painting.

PRE-EMINENCE

For years, Robert C. Bruce pictures have been pre-eminent in the scenic field because they actually tell a story while depicting nature in her most beautiful moods. They entertain, yet they are art.

REGULARITY

Robert C. Bruce is consistent in the quality of his product—produces "Scenics Beautiful" with unparalleled regularity.

Robert C. Bruce's consistency caused the editor of the Exhibitor's Herald to write, "The most remarkable thing about Robert C. Bruce's Scenics, next to their quality, is their regularity of release."

Educational has always released the Robert C. Bruce "Scenics Beautiful."

Motion Picture News

VOL. XXIII FEBRUARY 26, 1921 No. VIII

Let's Talk "Turkey"

THE discord that has just recently arisen between the National Association of the industry and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association is as regrettable as it is uncalled for.

Each association exists for its members' best interests.

These interests are inseparable.

They are inseparable from a purely business standpoint. Whether we have one association composed of producers and distributors and another of exhibitors, whether we have a hundred such associations or one only, the simple fact always prevails that each of the three branches of this industry are closely dependent each upon the other for their trade existence and prosperity.

But we can lay aside all trade questions for the immediate present. Moreover we've got to.

Today this industry stands as one—every branch, faction and individual in it.

WE stand as one against an outside situation of such proportions that the fate and future of the motion picture hangs in the balance.

This a fact—plain and undeniable.

And the issue today is the motion picture—just that, and nothing less.

Are we to control it; or are we to hand over its production and exhibition to outside boards of regulation?

And that simply means: are we to remain in or go out of business, each and every one of us?

ANYONE who thinks that the present all-around attack upon the picture from the allied forces of censorship and Sunday closing is less than ominous is blind to a mass of self-evident facts.

This is a fine time to fight!

A fine time to let the politician and organized reformer look in upon—seemingly—a divided industry.

—A fine time to weaken, through dissension, the greatest force we own—the screen.

—A fine time to fight each other when only an undivided and everlasting fight against the invader can save our skins.

May we point out the homely fact that if internal fighting doesn't cease, and at once, there will be nothing left to fight over?

WE don't know what animosities are involved in the present fracas; and we don't care to know.

We do know that whatever they are they are of no consequence, and decidedly out of place if they jeopardize the main cause today of this industry—which is the perpetuation of the motion picture and therefore the bread and butter interests of every man engaged in its production, distribution and exhibition.

The whole object, we repeat, of an association's existence is the advancement of its members' best interests.

These interests today are as one.

We must present one front—a common one with unity of action. Otherwise success is flatly impossible.

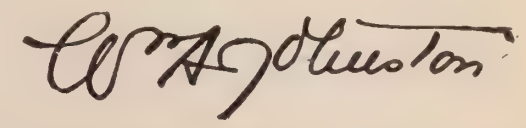
A COMMON front means the coordinated ranks of exhibitors, distributors, producers. Even this is a small and fragile army compared with the highly organized, highly active forces of the opposition.

An organized industry—that is the supreme issue.

This is a time for cool conferences—not fighting; for construction, not destruction of our own potential strength; for coordination, not divided effort; for liberality; for vision in which we see only the common welfare of all the interdependent branches and members of this industry.



Snapshots

By William A. Johnston

Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse. Premier at the Ritz-Carlton. A great picture! Our reviewer says: "Greatest!" A triumphal production. Marks a milestone. Best evidence thus far of an organization made picture. Our congratulations to R. A. Rowland, Marcus Loew, Joe Engel, Rex Ingram, June Mathis, and to each and every one of the direction staff, writers, cameramen and cast—the whole organization army that built this well-rounded, highly finished, vivid photoplay. Opens in New York March 6th. Our review later.

Get This. The 1920 Catalogue of 882 selected pictures reviewed by volunteer committees of National Board of Review is now on the press. Finer pictures classified; also those suitable for children and church use. Date of release, star, number of reels also given. Price, 25 cents. Write National Board of Review, 70 Fifth Ave., New York.

Last of Mohicans. Proving right along that such pictures pay best. Longest life, too. Such pictures will go—till better one of same subject is made. Another fine thing about them—they bring the exhibitor in closer touch with the school, church, women's clubs — entire community. Note that exhibitors are utilizing this fact, circularizing school teachers, giving special matinees, etc. Let's have more such pictures.

Let the Women Work. Note by clipping of Indianapolis paper—courtesy of Frank Rembusch—that in Indiana the women are leading the fight against state censorship. Why not everywhere? Takes education, that's all. Once acquaint women with just what pictures are, how they must develop, how the industry is functioning, what censorship really means —and they're on the right side. And if women don't want censorship, we won't have it. Best advice we know of to give exhibitors is: go to your club women now —before they come to you. Either thing is going to happen.

Nicholas Power. Mighty sorry to record last week the death of this pioneer in the industry. Retired from Nicholas Power Company four years ago, when Edward Earl succeeded him as President. Recall our pleasant association on Board of Trade. Courteous and witty. Always anxious to do something for industry.

E. L. Rogers. Deserves special mention for his introductory advertising in Chattanooga newspaper of Tivoli theatre, one of the finest, plain type ads. One captioned "I Am The Photoplay." Each a tribute; finely worded to the motion picture, its ideals, its power, its opportunities for development, etc. Understand that this advertising won unsolicited response from local leaders and officials against censorship. We will reproduce shortly the advertisements for other exhibitors to use.

The Naked Truth. Good name selected for gridiron dinner of Associated Motion Picture Advertisers. Remember the date, March 4th. Little naked truth won't hurt these days. Suggest little parody about producers who are urging exhibitors to double up their advertising at present time and at same time are reducing their own.

Going and Coming. Note long list of names, in New York Globe, of vocalists from Strand, Capitol, Rivoli and Rialto who have graduated into Metropolitan. Predict that they will graduate again into picture theatres all over the country — when music and the theatre really understand each other.

An Open Letter. We hesitate to use text space to call attention to advertising. But it is a serious matter to producers in a day when every dollar counts. So we hope you'll turn to page 1616 and read "An Open Letter."

Chicago Theatres Victims of Stench Bombs

Forced to action by the epidemic of stench bomb attacks on Chicago motion picture theatres, States Attorney Robert E. Crowe has taken initial steps to reach the persons responsible for the outrages. Between twenty-five and thirty picture houses have suffered from these attacks, five within the last week. In the majority of cases patrons were driven to the open air but in no case were suspects caught.

"I am going to put a stop to bomb terrorization by labor, political or any other sort of clicks," Mr. Crowe declared. "A man who throws a bomb should be hung and I am going to do my best to see that they are."

Allegations have been made that an electric maintenance shakedown, through which theatre owners of Chicago are declared to have been mulcted out of large sums, is back of the bomb throwing and in a search for evidence, the states attorney issued a subpoena duces tecum for Dr. Sam Atkinson, vice-president and business manager of the Allied Amusements Association, who was escorted to the Criminal Court building for questioning. The organization's papers, books and correspondence were also taken by the authorities.

Allied Amusements to Join National Association

The board of directors of the Allied Amusements Association, Chicago, at their meeting on February 11, voted to affiliate with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and sent the following telegram to New York announcing their action:

"F. H. Elliott, N. A. M. P. I.,
"Times Square Building,
"New York City.

"At a full meeting of the Board of Directors of the Allied Amusements Association of Chicago today, Peter J. Schaefer presiding, it was unanimously decided to join the N. A. M. P. I. according to the plans laid down by Wm. A. Brady last Friday. We feel that producers, distributors and exhibitors should present a united front against all opposing forces. We feel that each branch of the industry should co-operate with the others.

"Sam Atkinson,
"Vice-president & Business Manager."

Coast Directors' Ass'n Holds Election

The Motion Picture Directors of Los Angeles held an election on February 10, and William D. Taylor was elected director to succeed Reginald Barker; Henry King, assistant director; Wallace Worsley, technical director; Roy Clements, scenarioist, and Norval MacGregor, treasurer. The association will break ground on March 1 for a $300,000 clubhouse.

Bill to Create Censor Board in New York Introduced

Disastrous Measures Also Before Oregon Legislature: Other Censor News

AN unfavorable report in Committee of the proposed Missouri Censorship and Sunday Closing bills, is the most cheerful news which comes to the industry this week in regard to censor activities, which are now nationwide in scope. The formation of a censor board has been introduced into the New York legislature and the Oregon legislature is considering several bills which would prove disastrous to picture interests in that state.

The New York Bill

A bill to create a motion picture censorship commission in New York State was introduced at Albany on February 16th by Assemblyman Walter F. Clayton, of Brooklyn.

This bill carries with it an appropriation of $50,000. Under its provisions the commission will consist of three members to be appointed by the Governor with the consent of the Senate, each to receive an annual salary of $5,000. They would serve for five years. The headquarters of the commission would be located at Albany.

Under the provisions of the bill the commission is given the power to name its secretary and such other employees as are found necessary. Provided the bill meets with approval and becomes a law, it will become effective on July 1st.

The proposed commission will have the power to examine all motion picture films. All persons producing films within the confines of New York state or bringing such within the confines of the State or releasing the same to exhibitors, will first be compelled to submit each reel to the commission before it can be released for exhibition. The commission is given the fullest power to approve or disapprove of the films submitted. All films which meet with the approval of the board will bear words to that effect, together with the date of approval and the serial number.

Under the provisions of the bill the exhibition of unlicensed films after August 1st next, becomes unlawful and carries with it a fine of not less than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both. Each examination of film carries with it a fee of $3 for each 500 feet, the money received going to the State treasurer. The commission is given the power of a limited approval on any film of an educational or scientific nature, but with the understanding that such film is not to be exhibited except to such societies or associations as may be interested in the subject treated.

Up to the present time the effort on the part of the New York Civic League to keep secret not only the person who was to introduce the bill, but also its provisions have been successful. Rev. O. R. Miller, one of the leading lights of the Civic League, was present in the assembly when the bill was introduced.

Wire Briefs from Coast

Tom Moore and Rene Adoree were married on Saturday of last week. The couple met while taking part in the production of "Made in Heaven," which has just been completed.

The theatrical associations of Los Angeles held a grand Valentine Mardi Gras Carnival at the Ambassador Hotel on Saturday night of last week. More than two thousand participated in the festivities. The Carnival was declared a huge success in every way. A large sum of money was realized. This will be used to combat undesirable legislation. The receipts for the affair are estimated at between ten and fifteen thousand dollars. Those in charge of the committees were Sid Grauman, Fred Miller, H. L. Massey, Theo Newman, Sol Lesser, William Wyatt, Alexander Pantages and Harry David. Charley Murray was master of ceremonies.

Oregon Bills Spell Disaster

Should the three bills concerning motion picture theatre regulation pass the Oregon legislature, Portland film men prophesy within two months every exchange in the city would be closed and exhibitors would be losing money if they were still able to keep open their houses.

The bills provide for a state board of censors; for a law making it illegal to sell tickets when there are no available seats but standing room only, and that girls under 16 and boys under 18 years of age may not be allowed in any theatre exhibiting a film in which any criminal action, any deed of violence or any scene which might have an immoral effect.

The bill providing for a state board of censors would authorize the governor to appoint three persons at a salary not to exceed $1,500 yearly. These persons will have entire say as to the morality or immorality of all films which come into the state, no board of appeal being provided. Their salaries as well as $650 for office rent and furnishings will be supplied according to the bill, by a tax of $2 on every reel of not more than 1,000 feet.

The bill, which would make it illegal to sell tickets where there were no seats available, will, if passed, make continuous performances impossible, it is believed. Its origin is declared to have occurred following the experience of a Portland woman, who having an hour to spare before an appointment, decided to spend it seeing a motion picture. The hour was at the peak of business, so that she bought her ticket and by the time a seat was ready for her, she found that it was time for her appointment. When she bought the ticket she did not ask when she could get a seat, although there was a long line standing before the ticket window, it is declared. When she left, she made no effort to get her money refund.

Theatre men are combating the censorship bill on the grounds that national control of such matters is the only solution. They are stating as proof that state censorship has proved unreliable in Pennsylvania the fact that "The Miracle Man" has never shown there.

The declaration that the people of Oregon did not wish state censorship, aroused enthusiasts of the bill. At the public hearing set for February 8, a special trainload of fathers, mothers, ministers, children and school teachers advocating such a measure will be brought down from Portland, it is alleged.

Melvin G. Winstock of the Associated First National Pictures exchange was appointed by the Motion Picture league of Oregon to remain in Salem looking out for the interests of the cinema industry. At the first hearing of the bills which will come before the public health and morals committee he is to make a lengthy address.

Developments in Indiana

Outstanding features of the war between reformers and the photoplay industry with the Indiana state legislature as the battleground during the past week were as follows:

Representative David B. Johnson of Morgan county, introduced a bill specifically prohibiting the exhibition of motion pictures and the holding of any athletic contests on Sunday for profit, and providing heavy fines for offenders.

A third censorship bill appeared, this one being introduced by Senator Buchanan of Indianapolis and being backed by the Legislative Council of Indiana Women, the organization which is leading the censorship movement. This is the bill which exhibitors expect they will have to fight hardest, since they believe it is the one which will be reported out of committee.

A public hearing was held by the Public Welfare committee of both houses upon the three bills, at which it was disclosed that there is not only a difference of opinion among men in the industry and the reformers, but also a diversion of ideas among the reformers, particularly as to how censorship should be enforced. It also brought to the front some strong

Federated Exchanges Convene on West Coast

Visit San Francisco and Los Angeles; Hold Business Sessions at Byron Springs

MONDAY, February 7th, marked the gathering of the delegates in San Francisco for the semi-annual meeting of the Federated Film Exchanges of America. Convention headquarters was established at the Hotel St. Francis. An elaborately arranged program had been prepared for the entertainment of the representatives. On Monday afternoon, the members were taken by automobile on a sight-seeing tour to places of interest in the city. A grand dinner was served in the private dining room of Tate's Cafe. Cabaret performances were furnished by companies from the Hippodrome and Pantages Theatres.

On Tuesday morning the delegates autoed to Byron Springs, seventy miles from San Francisco. All the business sessions of the convention were conducted at Byron Springs. These terminated on Friday morning.

On Saturday morning, February 12th, the members arrived in Los Angeles, where they attended a lunch at the C. L. Chester Studios. In the evening, the delegates took part in the grand ball held at the Ambassador Hotel under the auspices of the Los Angeles Theatre Association.

On Sunday morning, the Warner Brothers acted as host at an entertainment in the Selig Studios. The first three episodes of the new Selig-Warner serial, "In Dangerland," were shown to the delegates. The members also viewed motion-pictures of the luncheon at the Chester Studios. The five-reel Snowy Baker production, made in Australia, was also projected.

On Monday, the officers of the Special Pictures Corporation acted as hosts to the members of the convention at a luncheon at the Roma Cafe. In the afternoon the delegates visited the studios of the Special pictures organization.

All the component exchanges of the Federated Exchanges of America were represented except Milwaukee and Pittsburgh. The following officers were elected: J. L. Friedman, Chicago, president; Harry Charnas, Cleveland, vice-president; Eugene Pearce, New Orleans, secretary; and Samuel V. Grand, Boston, treasurer. The Coast representatives are D. J. Chatkins and Marion H. Kohn; the New York representative is M. H. Wiley. The board of directors consists of the first four officers mentioned above, together with Ben Amsterdam, Philadelphia; D. J. Chatkins, Los Angeles; Henry P. Baldwin, Montreal; Sam Werner, St. Louis; and Abe Warner of New York. The advisory directors are Al Kahn, W. G. Underwood, and A. G. White.

An increase in the capital from one hundred thousand dollars, which was fully paid up, to two hundred thousand dollars was fully subscribed. The convention ratified the contract made with C. L. Chester in January for fifty-two single-reel comedies, thirteen two-reel Nookey comedies and thirteen two-reel Parlor comedies.

The Canadian franchise was sold to Ernest Ouimet and Henry Baldwin, who conduct exchanges handling Pathe output. Six additional exchanges will be opened to handle Federated's business. The exchanges in all cities are to be renamed "Federated Film Distributors." The policy established at the convention provides for the purchase scenics, cartons, comedies, specials and features. The directors have now under consideration twelve propositions from producers which await immediate action.

Announcement was also made on Tuesday of this week that a contract had also been closed between Federated and Walter Green and Fitzpatrick and McElroy for twenty-six five-reel feature productions during the coming year. These are to be produced by the three parties mentioned above or purchased by them from producers. The first subject will be one directed by Allan Dwan, the maximum cost to be seventy-five thousand dollars. Each feature is to be subject to the O. K. of the board of directors of Federated Exchanges.

In addition to the exchange-men and their wives who attended the convention at Byron Springs, were the following: C. L. Chester, president of the C. L. Chester interests; A. K. Weinberger, general manager of the Chester organization; Edward Boons of the C. L. Chester publicity department; Andrew Callahan; C. B. Greiver of Russell, Greiver and Russell, Chicago; Kenneth Fitzpatrick of Fitzpatrick and McElroy, the Ford distributors, Chicago; George Newberger and C. C. Craig of Special Pictures; Irving Lesser, Western Pictures Exploitation Company; A. L. Hart and H. J. Roberts of the Hart Productions Company, Los Angeles.

Fight Launched on Foreign Discrimination

National Association Seeking Enactment of Retaliatory Measure at Washington

THE National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has launched a movement which has as its object governmental protection against discrimination, boycott and film embargo measures on the part of foreign markets against American-made motion-picture productions. The brief filed with the House Committee on Ways and Means at Washington, D. C., on February 10, by Saul E. Rogers, chairman of the committee on taxation and tariff of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, requests the enactment of a "measure of reciprocity that will react similarly on the product of a nation which is found to discriminate against similar American products."

The reasons for the recommendations made are set forth in the brief as follows:

"A condition of actual embargo at present exists in one of the European countries which at present is a partial embargo, and which originally was an absolute embargo. Under that embargo measure, as we now understand it, there may be imported into that country approximately only 600,000 feet of film per year on condition, however, that the persons who import film into that country shall for each foot imported export an equivalent footage. The 600,000 foot limitation is supposed to represent 15 per cent of the native production of that country during the year 1918. Taking into consideration that the average length of a motion picture production is between five thousand and six thousand feet, this would mean that the country in question would admit from the rest of the world only between 100 and 120 motion picture productions per year. When one takes into consideration the fact that there are produced annually in the United States approximately 820 productions, not counting short productions, by which is meant one-reel and two-reel subjects, and that the rest of the civilized world is producing motion pictures in large quantities, it can be readily seen what a small portion of the American product will be admitted into that country under the embargo measure now in force. While this embargo measure is operative against the American motion picture product in that country, we are allowing the product of that country to freely enter the United States without any limitation whatever, except the payment of the rather nominal duty which is now levied on developed negative and printed positive. In fact, that country has already sent several sensational large motion picture productions into this country and is preparing to send a very appreciable number of large productions to compete with the American product in this country. By reason of the difference in exchange it is a very simple matter for that country at the present time to bring her product into the United States and after the payment of a very small duty easily compete with the American motion picture films. In addition to being afforded the opportunity of compet-

William A. Brady Continues Tour and Addresses Big Meetings

Statement Issued by Sidney Cohen; Deposit System Causes Discussion

WILLIAM A BRADY, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, continued his national tour during the past week and addressed gatherings in various cities of the Middle West on the questions of censorship and blue-laws. The breach between Mr. Brady and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, arising over the motive of the national tour undertaken by the National Association's president at this time, remained unchanged. In Milwaukee, a keen fight was waged over the question of the deposit system, the more belligerent of the theatre-owners carrying the discussion of the problem to Mr. Brady's suite at his hotel. During the week Sydney S. Cohen issued a statement from the headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association of America. This statement follows:

"In view of the events at the hearing before the Judiciary Committee of the Common Council in Chicago, on February 3rd, it has become clear that the campaign against Censorship and against the enactment of Blue Laws has been entrusted into the wrong hands. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners seeking cooperation with the other branches of the industry, entered into a conference with the manufacturing and distributing interests in this city, with a view to working out the best possible plans.. It is now a matter of history that these conferences failed because of the bad faith on the part of the manufacturing and distributing interests, which were represented in the National Association.

"The exhibitors have always protested and recent events cause them to lend new vigor to their protests, that the producers of motion pictures should be absolutely kept out of the fight against Censorship. It is a notorious fact that the manufacturers have been on both sides of this question. At a caucus of the National Association, three prominent manufacturers advocated submission to Censorship, and at the hearing before the House Committee on Education at Washington, various attorneys representing manufacturing groups appeared to speak on the Rev. Craft's side in favor of Federal Censorship. Censorship with the manufacturers is and always has been a question of dollars and cents.

"Now it is very clear that the profits of the manufacturers will never be considered by any intelligent Legislative committee or by any representative public forum on the question of Censorship. Whether censorship is a source of profit or a source of loss to the men who produce motion pictures is entirely irrelevant. It will be remembered that very little sympathy was wasted on the brewers and distillers in the memorable campaign for prohibition.

"The question of censorship is one of principle. It involves the recreations and liberties of millions of American citizens. These citizens must conduct the campaign. The Industry can furnish them with the facts and data which may be required from time to time, but the battle itself must be carried forward by them.

"The first thing necessary, therefor, is to retrace the false steps heretofore made; to recall the spokesmen of the manufacturers and to interest men and women prominent in public life and distinguished for their participation in civic affairs. The press particularly must be enlisted in this campaign, not by a beggar's appeal for free space but on the higher level of a community of interests between the press and the screen.

"The exhibitors have worked out a complete campaign based on these lines, and purpose to go forward with it immediately. We request all exhibitors who may have Censorship troubles of any kind to address themselves to the Headquarters of this Organization where their needs will be supplied to the best of our ability."

The following account was received by wire from Pierre, S. D., concerning the appearance of Mr. Brady before the House of Representatives:

"William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, was given a tremendous reception this afternoon, when he appeared before the House of Representatives and later before the State Senate here in opposition to a bill providing for the censorship of motion pictures. It is believed that this is the first time that any man not holding a high public office was honored by having both the House of Representatives and the State Senate recess for more than half an hour each during an unusually busy session to listen to a speaker.

"Previous to Mr. Brady's appearance the House of Representatives unanimously agreed to report in favor of State Censorship. Mr. Brady was urged by the exhibitors of this state to appear before the legislature. A recess of ten minutes was arranged in the House of Representatives and Mr. Brady was allowed to speak for more than half an hour. A number of senators who were present requested Mr. Brady to make a similar address to the Senate. This was arranged and Mr. Brady spoke for more than thirty minutes.

"Mr. Brady declared that he had found in the western states a well organized group of reformers who were using the same arguments in nearly every state against the motion picture industry. He pointed out the great educational advantages of the motion picture and what it had done for the people in the country, towns and cities, especially in the great west. He was loudly applauded from the floor and also from the galleries which were packed. Governor William H. McMaster sent for Mr. Brady and spent more than an hour in conference with him.

"There has been an unusually active lobby in this state in favor of motion picture censorship. Forty-two women's clubs and thirty-five ministers have been present for three weeks at the State Capitol urging a censorship bill. The exhibitors fight has been conducted under the directorship of J. E. Hipple of Pierre, a well known exhibitor and proprietor of a daily newspaper. A dinner was given to W. A. Brady and Jack S. Connolly, who is accompanying Mr. Brady, by the exhibitors of the state. Mr. Brady will speak before the Montana Legislature at Boise City. A hearing has been arranged at Olympia, Washington, Monday, and at Salem, Oregon, on Wednesday. From there he will proceed to Sacremento, Calif., San Francisco and Los Angeles, Salt Lake City and Denver."

Kansas City was also touched by Mr. Brady in his transcontinental trip. Here to, he addressed a large gathering on the questions of censorship.

"The muzzling of the motion picture industry is in no way different from the muzzling of the press," William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, told a gathering of motion picture exhibitors in Kansas City.

"In certain states," continued Mr. Brady, "the censor has the power of a czar. In Kansas we are not even allowed the right of appeal that is given to the convicted murderer or any other criminal. Censorship is regulated by a federal law that prohibits the making and selling of so-called immoral pictures. That should settle it, but the censors, three in each state, try to tell us that they have a monopoly on morality, and that in the pictures complying with the federal law there can be immoral scenes which must be cut out. The idea recently discovered, that motion pictures are responsible for the crime wave, is ridiculous. Governments who forget the injunction. 'Thou shalt not kill,' are the ones really responsible."

Mr. Brady did not claim perfection for motion pictures, as the industry is yet in its infancy. He asserted that faults are to be found in the ministry and other lines of endeavor and suggested that the reformers "clean their own house first."

In speaking of the campaign for censorship of pictures, Mr. Brady stated that while on a recent tour in Nebraska he was questioned by women members of a reform movement, who asked, "If you would not allow immoral women to teach your children in the schools, why do you permit them to teach from the screen?"

Answering this query, Mr. Brady said: "My wife, Grace George, and I are members of two of the oldest theatrical families in the United States. My daughter is Alice Brady, the motion picture star. That is my answer."

Before continuing his journey to California, Mr. Brady found time to attend a session of the Kansas board of motion picture censorship in Kansas City, Kan. He was invited to remain and see a few of the "cut outs," but declined, saying a dis-

Successful Convention Held in Baltimore

Blue Laws Are Public's Fight; Hampton's Article Condemned: Other Conventions Scheduled

THE motion picture theatre owners of the State of Maryland, representing every part of the State, assembled in a convention which was held in the afternoon of February 15th, at the Southern Hotel, Baltimore.

About 100 exhibitors were present, when the gavel of the chairman fell calling the convention to order. Immediately after the opening of the convention, Sydney S. Cohen, President of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, was invited to occupy a seat beside the chairman.

F. H. Durkee, Chairman of the committee on resolutions, reported after President Eugene B. McCardy had been elected temporary chairman. The first resolution offerred by Mr. Durkee read as follows:

"The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Maryland, in convention assembled, desire to express their belief that the fight against motion picture censorship and the enactment of the Blue Laws is a fight of the American public.

"This convention believes that the campaign against censorship and Blue Laws should be conducted by the public whose recreation and liberties are directly threatened by the narrow and fanatical enactments planned by freak legislatures."

The resolution was adopted by the unanimous vote and without discussion.

The second resolution which precipitated some discussion, was offered by Mr. Louis A. DeHoff, of the New theatre. The resolution read as follows:

"That the exhibitors of the State of Maryland in convention assembled this day, do hereby protest against the article of Benjamin B. Hampton in a monthly magazine, in so far as they seem to convey the impression that the theatre owners here and elsewhere, are in a way responsible for the making, titling and exploiting of any picture which is offensive to our patrons."

The resolution was adopted unanimously amid considerable applause.

Another resolution also adopted unanimously, renewed the allegiance of the Maryland Exhibitors to the National Exhibitors body and expressed complete confidence in its present leadership. An invitation signed by Mr. Carl Laemmle and printed in the Universal Weekly, calling upon exhibitors to join the so-called Exhibitors' Division of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, gave rise to some lively denunciations. It was unanimously resolved that the convention denounce the letter of Mr. Laemmle in the Universal Weekly and that Mr. Laemmle be notified of the action of the convention.

The last resolution adopted commended the M. P. T. O. of A. on their action in the case of Mrs. Dodge of Vermont.

Sydney S. Cohen was then called upon to address the convention. In the course of his remarks he covered a number of subjects, principally the question of deposits of uniform and equitable contracts, the film rental tax, the so-called music tax, censorship, the Blue Laws, and antagonistic legislation generally.

The elections resulted as follows: President, Eugene B. McCurdy; vice-president, Thomas Goldberg; secretary, William E. Stumpf; treasurer, Frank A. Hornig.

The following Board of Governors was also elected: Consisting of the following members: Thomas H. Burke, Cumberland, Md.; William Frey, Brunswick; J. E. Cahill, Centreville; Wm. Insley, Salisbury; John Marvill, Easton; Wm. Boyer, Hagerstown; O. H. Fisher, Frederick; Frederick Osborn, Westminster, Md.

The quota of $1,800 which the Maryland organization was to raise for the national treasury, under the apportionment adopted at Cleveland, was subscribed to the last cent in less than ten minutes.

Other Conventions Scheduled

Three more state conventions are now scheduled, announces the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. A call has been issued to every motion picture theatre owner in the state of Pennsylvania to come to Harrisburg on Tuesday and Wednesday, the 8th and 9th of March. The convention will be held at the Penn Harris Hotel and temporary arrangements are in charge of the executive committee members from Pennsylvania, Henry Poke and John S. Evans.

In West Virginia a convention will be held on the 14th and 15th of March, the place not being definitely decided upon but the probabilities pointing to Charleston.

The first preparations are under way for the state convention of the New York organization at Rochester, which will be held the early part of April, probably on the 4th and 5th, though these dates are subject to change.

Statement Is Issued on "The Kid" Contract

FOLLOWING recommendations, emanating from the headquarters of the New York Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, regarding the compliance of its members with the terms and conditions of the contract with First National for the Charlie Chaplin picture, "The Kid," the following statement was issued during the week from the home office of Associated First National Pictures in New York:

"Associated First National Pictures, Inc., has no intention of doing anything but live up to the letter of existing contracts for the Chaplin production, 'The Kid,' if the exhibitors insist upon it after the unfairness of such requirement is made plain to them.

"But with the box office value of 'The Kid,' a six-reel production, already proves it to be far in excess of any previous Chaplin picture, First National feels that such a recommendation as that made by the New York Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce to its members, is an insult to any exhibitor's sense of square dealing and fair play.

"Scores of exhibitors throughout the country have cheerfully agreed to waive existing contracts. These exhibitors have accepted a price in keeping with the additional box office value of the picture to them, and the unusually heavy cost of 'The Kid' to Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

"As a matter of fact, B. S. Moss, Nicholas Schenck, acting for Marcus Loew, and Ben Levine, for William Fox, agreed, in the presence of Ralph H. Clark, manager of the New York Associated First National exchange, to new price arrangements for their respective circuits of theatres. This, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Loew, Mr. Fox and Mr. Moss are designated as members of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce which made the recommendation referred to.

"It might also be said in passing that neither J. D. Williams nor Mr. Clark had received a copy of the recommendation of this committee, though they were given out to the trade press and published without being communicated to First National.

"It is impossible for First National to believe that the exhibitors of Greater New York have any less keen sense of justice and honesty than the exhibitors of any other section of the country.

"These recommendations are as follows:

"The New York Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, represented by a committee appointed for the purpose, after having investigated the request of First National conveyed to it by J. D. Williams, recommends to its members that they comply with the terms and conditions of the contract with First National for the Charlie Chaplin picture 'The Kid,' and call upon First National to do likewise, and further recommend to its members that as a matter of co-operation with First National they play additional days at contract prices wherever possible.

"The plain facts of the situation are these:

"The original contract with Charles Chaplin called for a specific number of pictures (eight) of a specific length (two reels) for a specific price per picture—$125,000.

"Four Horsemen" Takes New York By Storm

By J. S. Dickerson

A DISTINUISHED audience, composed of literary folk, newspaper and magazine editors and reviewers, artists, people prominent on stage and screen, and other notables of the theatrical world, gathered in the ballroom of the Ritz-Carlton hotel, Thursday evening, Feb. 10th, for one of the real events in the history of the fifth industry, the initial showing of Metro's long-heralded production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," adapted from the novel of the same title by Vicente Blasco Ibanez.

Expectations were high, since all those present knew that a picture was to be shown which was destined to mark an epoch in picture making not only in the amount of money that had been spent, an honest-to-God eight hundred thousand and better, but which represented the ideal in photoplay production, the combined work of many experts, director, author, players, scenario writers, down to the smallest employe of a modern studio.

Those who came, most of them, would not have been present at a less notable occasion. Stars whose salaries eclipse that of a president, statesmen, and famous literary lights, men who head great film companies of their own, musicians of great fame, editors and publishers whose written words wield an influence of untold power, were there, all attracted by this grown-up brother of the once despised "movie." Some, perhaps, hoped to be able to scoff. Others, possibly, not fully having outgrown their once confident belief that the motion picture was but a cheap diversion for primitive people, expected to be bored. Reviewers, newspaper men and dramatic critics with whom the occasion was bound to, more or less, just another part of the day's work, no doubt hoped for the best, but at the same time thought of some new caustic phrase with which they might condemn another much exploited feature, that demonstrated not how great the motion picture had become, but rather how much money could be spent with so little accomplished.

But for whatever they had assembled, whatever their hopes relative to what they were to view, the "finis" of eleven or so reels of celluloid found an audience of half a thousand or better of one mind. "The Four Horsemen" had won them. Three hours had slipped by as but a few fleeting moments. Eyes had been glued to the silver sheet as if by a giant magnet. Tears had been furtively wiped away by strong men. Reviewers who have looked at a thousand pictures with the cold, hardened eyes of the critic, voiced enthusiasms. "The Four Horsemen" had gone over with an audience as hard boiled as New York could produce. It was a triumph for the fifth industry. A day of rejoicing for Metro. A moment when the fruits of great achievements taste sweetest for Rex Ingraham, director, and his staff of technical experts.

Credit for this goes to Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld, managing director of the Criterion, Rialto and Rivoli theatres, who had been called in to write the musical score and originate the prologue and other presentation artistries. Lack of space and of knowledge of music forbids any great information relative to this score. As to the presentation, this is worthy of description in detail.

After an overture by a special orchestra, the Ritz ballroom lights were dimmed and a spot thrown on a small alcove over the heads of the musicians and at the right of the picture screen, where a figure made up and garbed to represent the Biblical character of John the Baptist was disclosed.

Then was related the prophecy of John relative of the "four horsemen of the Apocalypse," with explanations in modern language as to the meaning of the sentences translated from the Bible. The actor told how John predicted the wars of history even to the World War that began in 1914. He explained the meaning of the "four horsemen," "Conquest," "War," "Pestilence and Famine" and "Death" with reference to the allegorical manner in which the figures have been used in the picture that was to be shown.

At the end of the reading, the spot was killed and the main title of the picture thrown on the screen. Projection of the picture was unbroken until the end of the episode devoted to the pre-war story and into a title naturally dividing the feature into two parts and announcing the declaration of war by France, when the lights were turned on and an intermission of some five minutes declared.

Before the picture was resumed another presentation number was given. With the lights down, the orchestra drummer struck into the familiar roll of the snare used in by-gone days during burial services for soldiers. This was a solo for a few moments, and then the roll was taken up by a second drummer off stage, the first player gradually reducing the volume of the beat while the second instrument was being increased. With the orchestra instrument stilled, a figure garbed in the dull gray shroud of death, and with a face mask of a skull and carrying the drum heard off stage, made its appearance in front of the audience from a door at the right of the hall. Slowly, beating time as described above, the figure marched across the room to make an exit at a door to the left of the screen. On the drummer's exit, the orchestra instrument again took up the roll, with the first war scenes of the picture flashing on the screen.

Soon after the second part of the picture is begun, and following the action of the scenes presented, the orchestra played the "Marseillaise." Then as a sequence is screened showing the anthem being sung in a Paris café, with a soloist draped in the French colors featured, the number was rendered by a talented soprano facing the audience, the effect being as if the screen figure was giving the selection.

Near the close of the feature, a mixed chorus off stage sang "De Profundis," accompanied by the orchestra.

A review of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" is not included in the assignment of which these words are a part. Yet eulogy of the production, certainly deserving, may not be out of place before it officially receives critical attention in the regular department for reviews, following its public presentation on Broadway, which begins early in March.

"The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," as presented at the Ritz-Carlton, comes into the class of the few immortal pictures that have been produced. It has the dramatic strength and audience appeal of "The Birth of a Nation," the intimate touches and bits of delightful comedy of "'Way Down East," the technical achievements of "Civilization," and the careful attention to costuming and atmosphere that characterized "Kismet." It is a great spectacle and heart-interest drama in one. It is a picture that shows war scenes only as incident in developing the story, but in a way that has never been accomplished previously, and when these sequences have been viewed, there will be brought home to the spectator in full force the words of General Grant, "War is Hell." It has been enacted by a cast of great players and of wonderful types. It has been produced by a genius, or perhaps to give credit where credit is due, a corp of geniuses. It is a picture that will live far beyond the life of any but perhaps one production. It is a picture that will play every city and town in the United States, even if it does not get to some of them for years. In Europe, all but Germany, it will be hailed with as great acclaim as in America.

The production has cost close to a million dollars but it will prove a money

Film Notable Will Attend A.M.R.A. Banquet

Many of the leading figures in the organization and development of the motion picture industry in America will be present when the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers stage their annual formal "Naked Truth" dinner which is to be held at the Biltmore Hotel, March 4. Although the committee is withholding all names until a complete list has been obtained of the many leaders of the industry who will be present, it is practically assured that when President Paul Lazarus takes his seat at the head of the banquetting tables the attendance will include men whose names are a by-word wherever the motion picture is known.

Representatives from the producing ranks will include the organizers from some of the largest companies in the field. The executives who have signified their intention of attending so far comprise many of the pioneers in the motion picture field and the executives of leading companies in the producing field today. Exhibitors' interests will be represented.

Chairman Tom Wiley, who is in general charge of arrangements, has announced that because of the general demand for tickets, admission will have to be limited to the seating capacity of the private dining room, preference being given to A. M. P. A. members and a few invited guests.

Victor Shapiro has arranged the entertainment, comprising professional talent in addition to "home brew" skits by members of the association.

Important Appointments Made by Paramount

S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announced last week at the convention of Paramount district managers, the appointment of George Schaeffer as district manager in charge of the Boston and New Haven Exchanges, with headquarters at Boston. This is the post recently relinquished by H. G. Ballance, now general sales manager.

At the same time, Mr. Kent announced the appointment of Paul J. Swift, as office manager at the New York Exchange, succeeding Mr. Schaeffer. Mr. Swift has been Branch Manager at Omaha and Herbert Krause is named to succeed him there.

John W. Hicks to Manage Australian Company

John W. Hicks, Jr., assistant sales manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been appointed managing director of Feature Films, Ltd., distributors of Paramount Pictures in Australia and New Zealand, according to an announcement made by E. E. Shauer, in charge of the foreign department of Famous Players-Lasky. Mr. Hicks will succeed Alec Lorimore, resigned. With Mrs. Hicks, he leaves on February 17th for San Francisco, where he will board the Ventura, which sails March 1st for Sydney.

Mr. Hicks is one of the Paramount pioneers, and his appointment to this important position is declared to be a fitting recognition of the services he has rendered the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the last four years. The new Feature Film executive began his film career with General Film in 1914 under George Kleine, remaining with that organization in several capacities until 1917.

To Act for National Ass'n in Washington, D. C.

Charles C. Pettijohn, chairman of the legislative committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, has gone to Washington to represent the association during the next few weeks in all important matters which may arise there affecting the industry.

He will make his headquarters in the offices of the National Association, 820 Albee Building, and will co-operate with Harry M. Crandall and George W. Fuller, President of the Exchange Managers' Association.

International Affiliation for A.M.P.A.

Before returning to England this week, Miss Leila Lewis of the Organization Committee of the Film Press Club of London, addressed a communication to Bert Adler of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers of New York asking whether the latter body was serious in wishing to link up with the Press Club of London. Mr. Adler immediately placed the letter before the A. M. P. A., who voted for such an affiliation which will likely be consummated at the first meeting of the Film Press Club of London, following Miss Lewis' arrival home.

Jesse Lasky Goes West; To Remain Six Weeks

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, has left for Hollywood, where he will spend six weeks at the Lasky studio.

Mr. Lasky on his arrival at Hollywood will make preliminary arrangements for the production at the Lasky studio of "Peter Pan," Sir James M. Barrie's masterpiece. Sir James will come to this country in July, Mr. Lasky said, and will devote several weeks to collaboration with the director and continuity writer on the scenario for the production.

"Shortly after my arrival in Los Angeles," said Mr. Lasky, "Thomas Meighan will come East to do Booth Tarkington's famous story, 'The Conquest of Canaan.' He will be directed by Roy Neill, who has won the congratulations of the officials of the company for his splendid work in directing Dorothy Dalton in 'The Idol of the North.' Following 'The Conquest of Canaan' Mr. Meighan will do 'Peter B. Kyne's famous story 'Cappy Ricks,' which, of course, is known all over the country, both in its novel form and as a play produced by Oliver Morosco.

"I forecast that exhibitors and public will receive one of the treats of the season in William DeMille's production of Barrie's 'What Every Woman Knows.' Not only is this a faithful reproduction of Barrie's play, with all of Barrie's sure sense of drama and his inimitable charm, but it also is one of the greatest women's pictures I have ever seen."

Loew House in Indiaapolis Opens

Loew's State theatre, a million dollar vaudeville and photoplay house, was opened in Indianapolis on February 14th, with elaborate ceremonies accompanying the dedication. Mr. Loew brought many celebrities with him and the members of the party participated in a parade to the State House and the City Hall, where they were greeted by Governor McGray and Mayor Charles W. Jewett. They attended a Kiwanis Club luncheon at the Claypool Hotel at noon and stayed in the city until Wednesday, when they journeyed to Dayton, O.

The new house runs continuously from one until eleven, the seats, all of which are unreserved, being fifteen and twenty-five cents in the afternoons and thirty and forty cents in the evenings.

Those with Mr. Loew were Hope Hampton, Lillian Walker, Helen Davis, Montague Love, Kenneth Douglas, Crauford Kent, Zeena Keefe, Marguerite Marsh, Gladys Coburn, Ruth Roland, Emily Chichester, Helen Flint, Lois Meredith, Mabel Pierson, Mary Gormally, C. E. Danforth, Jules Brulatour, Will Morrissey, Jack Lamont, Lady Tenmie, Bon Rotheim, Lieut. Walter Hinton, and Lieut. Louis Kloor, the lost baloonists.

Capital Film Co. Enters Blue Law Fight

Capital Film Company of Chicago, has entered a fight against blue Sunday propaganda now being circulated throughout the country and have devised a small sticker which they are pasting on the back of all mail leaving their offices bearing the words: "Keep The Sun In Sunday."

W. D. Russell, general manager of Capital, says regarding the anti blue Sunday sticker: "There is only one way to combat propoganda and this is with more propoganda. This little sticker is merely our first bullet in the campaign. The blue Sunday laws will effect motion pictures much more than anyone realizes at a passing glance and it is up to us to get together to remind each other to keep fighting."

The Capital Film Company has arranged for a supply of blue Sunday stickers large enough to accommodate other needs than their own.

Pavlowa Assists Oregon in Hoover Drive

"Pavlowa, the Incomparable," assisted the Motion Picture League of Oregon in making a success of its big midnight matinee, given January 29, in the Liberty theatre, Portland, Ore., under the management of Paul E. Noble for the Hoover-European Relief fund. In addition to the 1,800 seats sold at $2.50 each and the 200 loges seats ranging in price from $5 to $10, nearly $2,000 was raised from an auction, which constituted one of the acts of the vaudeville programme.

On the same day as the midnight matinee, special benefit shows for children were held in every suburban theatre in the city.

Eugene Zukor Leaves for Europe on Business

A mission of far-reaching importance that will extend the exportation of American motion pictures in European countries, is that of Eugene Zukor, assistant treasurer of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who sailed Thursday on the Aquitania for Europe.

Mr. Zukor, in extending the distribution of American films, will investigate the possibility of entering into reciprocal agreements with foreign producers. Mr. Zukor will go into foreign studios, consult with directors and outline to foreign producers plans for producing motion pictures of the quality demanded by American audiences.

"European producers cannot expect to distribute their pictures in this country unless these productions measure up to the American standards," said Mr. Zukor before sailing. "We shall more than welcome, however, foreign productions that will satisfy American motion picture patrons and shall give these productions every opportunity for extensive distribution through our organization throughout the United States."

Minneapolis Theatrical League Elects Officers

President William A. Steffes was voted $10,000 a year and expenses.

Lubliner-Trinz Chicago Theatre Opened

A tremendous crowd attended the opening of the Senate theatre, Chicago, the greatest and most magnificent of the extensive line of Lubliner & Trinz houses, on Saturday and crowded the streets outside, as well as the great flower-decked foyer of the new house.

The feature for the opening was Arbuckle's new picture, "Brewster's Millions" and the music was furnished by the splendid Senate Symphony Orchestra of forty pieces, directed by Warde Johnstone, and a second band of musicians, entitled the Senate Syncopaters.

The Senate theatre is located at two section lines, Madison street and Kedzie avenue, the theatre center of the west side, and contains 3,310 seats, 2,300 of which are located on the ground floor. This theatre covers more ground area and has larger ground floor seating capacity than any theatre outside of the loop district in Chicago.

The theatre has been appraised by artists as a most perfect example of architecture in the Adams style, both pertaining to the interior and exterior. Particular comment has been made in regard to the gorgeous twenty-nine foot diameter jewelled window, forming the main motive over the entrance. The interior of the auditorium is capped off with an enormous Tiffany dome, sixty feet in diameter, illuminated by indirect polychrome lighting.

Comfortable seating arrangements have been obtained by means of barrel backed box and loge seats, arranged in accordance with the most scientific knowledge of sight lines.

In this theatre there has been more yardage of draperies employed in the interior scheme of decoration than has heretofore been used in any of the other theatres.

Elaborate arrangements have been made in the form of wash rooms and rest rooms for both men and women, a nursery for children under the attendance of competent maids. At the end of the grand foyer, a forty foot Italian marble staircase leads to the one balcony, which again has its elaborate lounge and rest rooms.

The ventilating system of the Senate is considered a masterpiece of engineering.

The theatre was designed and constructed under the supervision of Walter W. Ahlschlager, architect, who has designed all of the large Lubliner & Trinz houses.

Shauer, Accessories Sales Manager.

Mr. Kent and Mr. Croswell are now making preparations for the third class, which will open within a few weeks.

Banning of "Passion" Still Interests Canada

Another of a series of sensations in moving picture theatre circles of Toronto, Ontario, occurred when official protests were made by local organizations against the presentation of "The Romance of Lady Hamilton" as "the English version of 'Passion'" by the Allen theatre, Toronto, following the attempt by that theatre to offer First National's "Passion" as an attraction until the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors recalled the feature.

When the Allen theatre interests were called upon to forego the presentation of "Passion" because of protests against the origin of the production, it was decided to offer the British feature, "The Romance of Lady Hamilton," in order to capitalize the widespread publicity which had been gained for the condemned "Passion." As soon as an announcement was made, however, that the British "version" would be presented during the week of February 14, there was another outcry. This time the Navy League of Canada and the Imperial Order of the Daughters of the Empire passed resolutions of complaint on the ground that the English feature was "an insult to every loyal British subject and true Canadian" because, it was alleged, the picture dishonors the memory of Lord Nelson of Trafalgar fame.

Intimation has been made by First National representatives in Canada, that the recalling of "Passion" will be fought in the law courts of Ontario on the ground that the Province of Ontario is responsible for damages through the condemnation of the feature after it had been once approved for public showing in Ontario.

Drastic License Bill Proposed in Pennsylvania

Drastic new legislation that would impose heavy additional financial burdens on both distributors and exhibitors of motion pictures in Pennsylvania and distort the original purposes of the Board of Motion Picture Censors into a bureau for the collection of license fees from distributors, is proposed in a batch of new bills introduced in the legislature this week.

A measure offered in the House, by Assemblyman A. C. Schaeffer, of Schuykill county, is sure to meet the opposition of all the big distributing concerns. It requires that licenses for film distribution must be obtained from the Board of Censors, for which the fee is $50, and gives the board power to refuse to issue censorship certificates for any films handled by distributors refusing to comply with the law. But what is a far more objectionable feature of the same measure is the provision that every distributor shall keep on deposit with the board an amount, not less than $1,000 in cash or approved securities, equal to the amounts of deposits made with the distributors by exhibitors who have contracted to exhibit the distributor's films.

A measure introduced in the House by Assemblyman Clinton A. Sowers, of Philadelphia, materially increases the license fees now provided under the law, that owners of motion picture theatres and other places of amusement must pay to the state. While the existing act of 1895 provides license fees of $500 for theatres in what are designated in Pennsylvania as "first-class cities," such as Philadelphia, the proposed new law would require theatres in such cities to pay according to the seating capacity. While a theatre seating 1,000 persons would not be required to pay more than the present $500, those with 1,000 to 1,500 would have to pay $750; 1,500 to 2,000, $1,000; 2,000 to 2,500, $1,250, and all over 2,500, $1,500.

A third new measure hostile to motion picture interests, is that introduced in the House by Assemblyman A. M. Blumberg, of Philadelphia, which would prohibit motion picture and other theatres from charging higher prices for shows on one day than on another.

10 Percent of Sunday Receipts for Charity

Under a scheme which has been adopted by the Avon theatre in Watertown, N. Y., 10 per cent of the receipts on Sunday evening go to local charities. The plan was tried out for the first time three weeks ago, and has proved most successful, serving to attract larger audiences, smother adverse criticism, and at the same time bring a substantial benefit to worthwhile organizations. The plan has the backing of the chamber of commerce, which names each week the organization which is to receive the benefit. Last Sunday's percentage went to the Jefferson County Orphanage Asylum.

New York Performers Preparing Attack

Dr. Henry L. Bowlby, national secretary f the Lord's Day Alliance, spent one day his week in Albany, N. Y., appearing be-ore a hearing in connection with the Dick-tein bill, but really paving the way for he introduction of certain bills, which if passed, would make the New York Sun-lay the bluest kind of a day. Following Dr. Bowlby's appearance in Albany, it eaked out that he will really be the father f bills introduced at this session, seeking o repeal the law which now enables each ity in the state to settle the Sunday movie uestion for themselves, through their own overning body.

Every effort is being made to keep secret he identity of the legislator who will in-roduce Dr. Bowlby's bills. It is con-ended that should the identity of this per-on become known, pressure would be rought to bear which might result in the ntroduction of the bills being delayed or ossibly thwarted. It is possible that these ills may be sprung on the legislature next eek without a moment's warning.

Car Strike Benefits Residential Houses

While the street car strike, now on in lbany, N. Y., is no doubt cutting into he attendance receipts in the downtown heatres, residential houses are doing a ca-city business these days. Hundreds of ersons who would under ordinary condi-ons go downtown to witness a first-run cture are now contenting themselves ith an evening's entertainment in the naller houses. The street car strike in lbany extends to four adjoining cities, ch of which is feeling its effects. Jitney rvice is provided at regular intervals uring the day, but at night it is not of e sort that tempts many from their mes.

New Tivoli a Revelation in Beauty

AFTER sixteen months of strenuous work, Balaban and Katz's magnificent Tivoli theatre, situated in the great South Side district of Chicago, opened its doors to the public on Wednesday night of this week. "The finest theatre in America," was the verdict of the veterans of the movie men present, including J. D. Williams and C. L. Yearsley, of First National, who came on from New York for the opening.

The doors opened at five o'clock and at seven it was necessary to call the police reserves to handle the crowds. At eight o'clock the box office was closed to prevent the throngs from wrecking the theatre as hundreds packed the huge lobby, which has never been equalled in theatre architecture.

Constance Talmadge, in "Dangerous Days," and a symphony orchestra of forty under the direction of Nat C. Finston, won applause. The cost of the theatre was two million dollars. It seats forty-five hundred persons. The main foyer towers six stories high and is large enough to accommodate fifteen hundred people. The Chateau Verseilles is the architectural inspiration. Rapp and Rapp were the architects. The stage is one hundred twenty-five feet by thirty feet in depth. A magnificent sun burst is a feature of the ceiling and dirigible dome. The magnificence of the decorations and the lavish furnishings astonished everybody. That the Tivoli theatre puts Chicago in the lead as a center of moving pictures and caps the record for achievements made by Balaban and Katz, is the opinion of the local press and public. Full details of this beautiful theatre and its construction will appear at a later date in Motion Picture News.

ing with the rest of the world under conditions most favorable to that nation she shuts her own market against the rest of the world so that her own producers will have the monopoly in their own country. America will be the dumping ground of the foreign product, other producing nations would be encouraged by this step and the industry in this country will be demoralized.

"Regardless, however, of the fear of the spread of this conduct, it is eminently unfair to admit the product of that country without limitation into this country, and to have the American product almost totally excluded from that country.

"There seems to be a tendency to-day in other countries to inaugurate propaganda against American films. This movement seems to take on the aspect of insidious criticism directed against the American films, and, in fact, this has been carried so far that some foreign writers and critics are attempting to point out to their nations what they deem to be the fear that the American films will act as an 'Americanizing influence' on the youth of their country."

The recommendation submitted by the National Association follows:

"The recommendation of this Association is that power be granted to the President which shall sufficiently and adequately protect this industry against such embargo measures, discrimination and boycott. The placing of a very high ad valorem or specific duty would not help the situation because with the present rate of exchange almost any ad valorem duty will be paid, because it would mean merely bringing the negative into this country and then printing in this country so many positives as would be required for distribution and exhibition in the United States.

"The only practical weapon would be the enactment of a measure which would place in the hands of the President the power to issue a proclamation or inaugurate and set in motion any other machinery that would result in a retaliatory measure in this country similar in form, scope and operation as that militating against us."

Poster Censorship in Kalamazoo

Enforcement of a Michigan State law regarding poster exhibitions, which has been interpreted to include motion pictures, advertisements and displays, will be started in Kalamazoo, Mich., soon, according to an announcement of Chief of Police Taffee.

Protests have been made against some of the films exhibited here in recent weeks after the conviction of several youthful criminals, who said they had been led to careers of crime through a desire to imitate the deeds of some of the popular picture stars. A State law, passed in premovie days, to forbid the exhibition in picture form of any costume or act which would be illegal in real life was taken to the chief of police by a delegation of clubwomen, with the request that it be used to tone down movie exhibitions.

The order will result in closing of the theatres, according to the managers, who declare that a strict compliance with it would prevent them from showing anything besides travelogues, weeklies, and church films. They declared it will even prevent them from showing pictures of a speeding automobile or a mere fistic encounter.

An Open Letter to PAUL LAZARUS

President, Associated Motion Picture Advertisers

Dear Mr. Lazarus:—

An audit has been made of the Circulation of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

This audit was published in full in our Feb. 19 issue, and is now in the hands of the members of the A. M. P. A.

May we call the attention of your members to the following facts:

This is the first audit of circulation to be published in this field; it is the only one, thus far, published.

We assume that other audits will follow. There is no valid reason why they should not. A sworn statement of circulation is not an audit. The simple question follows: Why not an audit?

There are three steps to take in securing an audit of circulation.

First an application is made by the publication to the Audit Bureau of Circulations. This gives the publication a membership in the Audit Bureau of Circulations (A. B. C.), But it is not an audit. An audit, in fact, may never be made.

Secondly a Publisher's statement is made to the A.B.C. This is not an audit.

The third and final step is the audit itself. Only this counts.

The audit then should give a classification of circulation —how many exhibitors, how many exchanges, studios, operators, free list, newsstand, unclassified, etc. This is imperative.

Newsstand circulation with a motion picture trade paper is all waste to the advertiser. So is unclassified circulation. Consider alone the waste in costly insert advertisements.

What is the theatre and strictly trade circulation? That alone is the circulation the advertisers are buying.

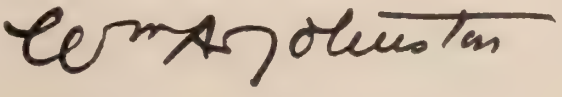
We have claimed right along that MOTION PICTURE NEWS has practically twice the theatre circulation of any other trade publication. Our audit will prove this. As for reader interest make any test or ask anyone who has made a test and you will find the circulation value of the "News" very much higher still.

There is little difference in advertising rates between the trade publications in the field. The question now arises: Do you then think it fair to the advertiser or the publication to put all upon an equal basis of advertising value?

Isn't it the fair thing, from every standpoint, to pro rate your advertising right along according to the audit statements, these statements to be made every six months and enforced by a test for reader interest?

That will yield advertising value and genuine trade paper competition.

Sincerely yours,



Censor Bills Arrive on All Sides

opposition to censorship, both from prominent Indianapolis women who favor indorsement and a plan of working with exhibitors and from women from other parts of the state, notably those representing the parent-teachers clubs of the state.

The Rev. W. F. Fleming, the Chicago pastor, who started the recent rumpus in the Windy City over Charlie Chaplin's picture "The Kid," appeared in Indianapolis and joined the censorship lobby. He started making speeches in various parts of the state.

The Morgan bill, to make the exhibition of pictures on Sunday an offense, provides a fine of not less than $250, nor more than $500 for each offense. The present "blue laws" of Indiana, if strictly inforced would prohibit the theatres from operating on Sunday, but they are liberally construed in most places. The proposed law would give officials no other option than to shut the movie houses up.

The Buchanan censorship bill is similar to the bill of Senator Steele, excepting that the former provides that the state board of education shall act as the censoring body, where the latter provides that a censorship commission shall be appointed. Supporters of the Buchanan bill were urging its favorable reporting by committee because they said it would put the censorship in the hands of a non-political board. All of the bills are in the hands of the public morals committee of the respective houses in which they were introduced.

Leo M. Rappaport, attorney for the Circle theatre, Robert Lieber, vice-president of the Circle, and Frank Rembusch, head of the Rembusch string, represented the exhibitors at the public hearing. D. B. Johnson, a professional reformer, representing the Indiana State Civic Union, backed the Steele bill, claiming that it was the only one of the proposed measures which was constitutional, while Mrs. S. C. Stimson of the Legislative Council of Indiana Women, spoke for the Buchanan bill, on the ground that it provided for non-political censorship. C. H. Winders, executive secretary of the Church Federation of Indianapolis, which Federation incidentally is not backed by all of the protestant churches, including one of the largest Methodist and one of the most influential Presbyterian bodies, spoke for the Buchanan measure.

Opponents of censorship among public spirited women who have been indorsing films for the past six years was vigorous and telling. Mrs. Chic Jackson, wife of a humorist-cartoonist on the Indianapolis Star, compared movie censorship with muzzling the press and said that obscene films are already illegal and all that is necessary in case objectionable films are to be eliminated is to inforce the present laws.

Many other prominent women denounced the stand of the professional reformers.

The Legislative Council of Indiana Women claims to have received letters from persons and organizations in many parts of the state favoring its censorship plans.

Brady Tour Continues a Stormy One

play of a reel of the worst parts in pictures all thrown together would not be a fair viewpoint to judge pictures from.

"I could take the Holy Bible and cut out certain parts which would not pass any censorship," he said.

In a meeting filled with interruptions and verbal clashes, William Brady talked on blue laws to Milwaukee exhibitors and exchange men Saturday, February 5th, and incidentally endeavored to bring the Milwaukee theatre men into the fold of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, of which he is president. Although all newspaper men and the representative of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS were barred, it later became known that the ill famed deposit system became the center of action at the gathering.

At the session at which Mr. Brady spoke, some exhibitors demanded to know from Mr. Brady how a joint association such as he proposed would take care of the exhibitor on the deposit system. Even at the close of the meeting the more belligerent of the exhibitors carried the discussion to Mr. Brady's suite at the hotel. The entire argument though turbulent was remarkably free from personal animosity and though he was assailed numerous times by the Milwaukee exhibitors, it was merely on his position and not on personal grounds.

The extension of Mr. Brady's tour takes the National Association's president to Helena, Montana; Seattle, Washington; Portland, Oregon; San Francisco, Sacramento and Los Angeles. He will also make stops at Salt Lake City, Denver, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Columbus, Wheeling, West Virginia; Pittsburgh, Buffalo and Rochester, according to word from the national association's headquarters.

Censorship measures are pending in practically every state which will be visited by Mr. Brady. In many of these, hostile measures have already been introduced in the legislatures, in others organizations and individuals, which are active in endeavoring to restrict the freedom of the screen, are preparing to introduce measures calling for state censorship.

maker for both exhibitor and producer. Critics may find some faults with it as a whole. Some may say that it's war episodes open old sores, renew racial hates that should be forgotten, that it waves the flags of allied nations, that it is too long to hold sophisticated audiences, but these will not be showmen who know what the public calls entertainment and drama. These will not be the men who are going to pay their dollars for the privilege of playing it or the millions of patrons of fifteen thousand picture houses who are going to flock to their favorite theatres and pay their money, advanced prices without a doubt, to see it.

"The Four Horsemen" is a picture that will be responsible for a new watch word. No longer will the film salesman claim that his latest special is as big as "The Birth of a Nation." The new slogan will be "as big as 'The Four Horsemen.'"

"When 'The Kid' in six reels was presented to Associated First National Pictures, it was instantly recognized that to expect Mr. Chaplin to deliver this picture to First National on the term of the original contract would be manifestly unfair to Chaplin, and at variance with the spirit animating First National as an exhibitor organization—namely, the spirit of offering all possible encouragement, in the form of an open market, to independent producers at all times to make the best product of which they are capable.

"Believing that it was the desire of its exhibitor members to obtain, first of all, the best pictures possible, and realizing that in 'The Kid' Chaplin had produced one of the greatest money-makers in the history of motion pictures, First National agreed to pay Mr. Chaplin a price for 'The Kid' which would be fair to him, and which—as is being demonstrated at the box offices of the theatre where it is being shown—the exhibitors could afford to pay because of increased volume of business 'The Kid' would bring to their theatres.

"Associated First National Pictures is not making the individual exhibitor do anything which it has not been willing to do itself as shown by the fact that its franchise holders have agreed to increase rentals on 'The Kid.' It is merely asking the exhibitor to observe the same spirit of fairness and justice in regard to the rental price of the picture that its purchasing committee exercised when obtaining the production for the benefit of its franchise and sub-franchise holders.

"In the case of 'The Kid,' it constitutes a feature in itself and makes it unnecessary for the exhibitor to book anything else on the same program, with the possible exception of a short subject.

"As a feature, therefore, its added value cannot be expressed in terms of a percentage of the other Chaplin productions, which could only be regarded as short subjects. Its real value and the fairness of the price the exhibitor ought, and in most cases, is willing to pay for it, must be arrived at by regarding it as a feature, and formulating the price in a special manner.

"No exhibitor would expect to obtain any six-reel feature at a rental price equivalent to twice what he would pay for a two-reel comedy."

Music and The Picture

"Wanted: Certain Important Developments and Other Things"

By Charles D. Isaacson

BEFORE it is forgotten, we must record what the conference indicated as essential —things, men, ideas, developments that are wanted.

Musicians are wanted—wanted badly!

(In the avalanche of material which appeared in last week's Musical Supplement, there was so much, that nothing could be seen in its true perspective of importance. So I purpose to lift out and discuss individually some of the outstanding demands.)

Yes, musicians are wanted—listen to William Brandt's plea:

"I want to sound a note of warning—the exhibitors are progressing faster than the musicians—that the small neighborhood houses cannot get proper musicians. The exhibitor is perfectly willing to spend fifteen or twenty thousand dollars for a good organ, but he cannot get a good organist to play it! I am talking from experience—and I know for a fact that the musicians are not keeping pace with the exhibitors."

Mr. Brandt is the president of the New York Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, which has a membership of five hundred theatres. He, himself is the biggest theatre owner in that association, and he knows whereof he speaks. Many of his houses are the equal, he says, of the Rivoli, Rialto, Strand, Capitol. Even in the ghetto of Brooklyn—in Brownsville—there is a theatre called The Stadium, which is as large and beautiful as any theatre in the country.

"We rate music to a good picture as forty to sixty per cent" said Mr. Brandt, "and music to a bad picture as ninety-five per cent. Hence you can see how essential music is in our programs. We find it very difficult at times to get musicians from the unions—especially the right musicians. Oftentimes our costly organs are still because there is no organist to play them! We are trying to give the best in music, and even if we can only have a small orchestra, we want that to be of the best and to play the best.

"Would that the world were full of Riesenfelds," Mr. Brandt ejaculated. While Mr. Brandt was making these remarks, fortune so had arranged matters, that no less a personage than Joseph Weber, President of the American Federation of Musicians was present. . . . He fumed and fretted while Mr. Brandt spoke, and when he took the stage, Mr. Weber was trembling and infuriated.

But what he said after declaring that the union was not on trial and demonstrating that the American Federation had done more for art than any other single force in America, was to substantiate the point I make in this article.

"We all agree that the motion picture industry has been in the making for the last ten years; now it is a certainty. Before this time, the organist and other musicians had no call from the motion picture theatre. The motion picture theatre has been developing, but not the motion picture musician. He must be given time to develop. You cannot be furnished with the finished article before the demand is shown.

Bulletin of the Association of Motion Picture and Musical Interests

Following the resolutions adopted by the Conference of January 1921, as temporary chairman of the association, I have the honor to report that I have named the following gentlemen to act upon the

COMMITTEE OF FIVE TO PREPARE THE CONSTITUTION AND BY-LAWS AND TO APPOINT AN EXECUTIVE BOARD.

Joseph Carl Breil, Composer.
Edward Lutz, Director Loew Circuit.
Hugo Riesenfeld, Managing Director.
Samuel Rothapfel, Managing Director.
C. M. Tremaine, Bureau for Musical Advance.

These gentlemen have accepted, and the first meeting is scheduled to be held on the afternoon of February 24th, in the offices of the Motion Picture News. The account of the findings of the committee will be sent to the general field at large. It is anticipated that the Executive Board will be completed before March 15th, with a full working organization elected and operating.

CHARLES D. ISAACSON,
February 10th, 1921.

It is true that the motion picture musician is out of step, but give them a little time and there will be more musicians and organists in the market than the theatres can use. . . . The question of musicians will be solved as far as the American Federation is concerned."

Well, well, if there is such a demand for musicians and so few to supply the demand, every musician ought to have an easy time now, in making unusual connections.

Don't say anything to musicians who turn up their noses at the film. Let them continue to snub the field—because when they decide to enter the field, you'll have had your choice. Don't tell them to think of the famous men now in the picture theatres—that might convince them that the best musicians are none too good. Don't tell them that Wolfsohn Bureau is now in the competition to sign the picture houses and are going to route their international artists through the motion picture industry. Don't tell them that musicians like Bodanzky, Polacco, Stransky and even Toscanini are slated by fate to be guest conductors in picture houses within a year or two.

Organists, here's your opportunity. What is the American Guild of Organists going to do to relieve the conditions? What the National Association of Organists?

Something else:

Wanted: A Samuel Johnson of the Film World, a man (or group of men) to compile a dictionary of musical emotions. It is desired to make it absolutely easy for any musician anywhere to turn to his book for suggestions ad lib for any situation that ever might come up. The conference has urged the appointment of a committee to investigate the possibilities of undertaking such a tremendous venture.

But isn't it possible that some musician who reads this, will get busy and become the Samuel Johnson of the film-music world?

When old Samuel Johnson decided to make a dictionary of the English language, Dr. Adams said: "How can you do it? In France, forty members of the Academy took forty years to complete such a work as you anticipate doing in a few years." Old Dr. Johnson paused and remarked: "Let me see: forty times forty is sixteen hundred. As three years to sixteen hundred, so is the proportion of an Englishman to a Frenchman."

Now, if Dr. Johnson could essay a tremendous task such as the making of a dictionary of the English language in three years, I am wondering if there is anywhere in the United States, Canada, Europe, or Africa, the person who will make a dictionary of music.

I don't mean a glossary of musicians, terms or such matters. Rupert Hughes has done that well enough and so have several others.

This is something different. I am referring to an encyclopedia which will analyze the music of the world into its emotional, picturesque and moody significance.

Thus: (To start it off.)

Abandon: (Music of utter despond) with indications here of varying compositions, indicated by bar and bar, in their most potent moments.

Abasing music:

Abashment:

Abbey: (Suggesting the atmosphere of the cloister.)

Abeyance: (A state of suspense, expectation.)

Abhorence:

Abide:

Aboard: (Sailor songs, etc.)

And so on through the whole language of emotions, pictures and moods.

Why is such a book needed?

Every motion picture in the world needs this book, would pay any price for it. This was one of the most emphatic conclusions of the Motion Picture-Musical Conference and men from the Rothafel-Riesenfeld type down to the little theatre men, offered up prayers for the coming of such a venture, backed by such an indomitable spirit as Dr. Samuel Johnson.

Let us look for the Dictionary of Musical Expression.

Something else:

Wanted: Schools of motion picture musical instruction, or special courses for the same.

What a musician, trained in the best traditions of the art, is not necessarily equipped to play in motion picture theatres, is a piece of knowledge which has been admitted by students of the new art, and which more recently was made a matter of record in the proceedings

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

Jacob S. (Jack) Grauman, well known to exhibitors and all branches of the industry in the Chicago and Milwaukee territories, has affiliated with the Doll-Van Film Corporation, it was announced this week by D. M. Vandawalker, president of the company. He will be vice-president and treasurer.

The most recent venture of Mr. Grauman, for more than a year manager of Metro's Chicago office, previous to which he represented that company in Milwaukee, was his association with Saxe Brothers in the purchase and sale of the Boston, Rose and Alcazar theatres in Chicago's loop district.

His first activity will be a trip to the west coast in the interests of the company where he will make a survey of conditions in the independent production field with a view toward obtaining additional features for distribution in the Illinois and Wisconsin territory. He will be gone about one month.

"With Mr. Grauman coming into the firm," said Mr. Vandawalker, "our policy of expansion will continue as rapidly as consistent with good business. Mr. Grauman has the friendship and confidence of the exhibitors in this territory, and I am greatly pleased with the affiliation."

At the same time it was announced that a number of prominent exhibitors in Chicago and Milwaukee had become interested in the company, and it is understood that this total will be increased in the near future.

The Milwaukee exchange which will be opened by the company early in March will be under the management of L. H. Guhl, now with Metro in the Wisconsin city. It will be located at 408 Toy Building. Frank Kamp, at the present Wisconsin road man for Metro, will join the Doll-Van force at the same time.

J. B. Ohrt, controller of Universal, presided at a meeting of district travelling auditors from all parts of the United States in Chicago this week. The purpose of the conference was to perfect cooperation between the auditing and sales departments with a view to improving, wherever possible, the service to exhibitors. Mr. Herman, one of the managers of the big U exchange in New York, was also visiting Universal's Chicago headquarters, going over plans for the new Chicago exchange, which will be located at 833 S. Wabash.

Harry Berman, who has been holding conferences with the managers and sales forces of several central state exchanges, arrived in Chicago this week enthusiastic over the splendid results achieved during Universal's "Harry Berman month" which he declares was the best in the history of Universal. Mr. Berman stated that Universal, to date, had not been affected in any way by business depression, and that he will be more than satisfied if business continues on the same as it has for the past two or three months.

An important event of the week was the opening of Balaban & Katz's magnificent forty-five-hundred-seat theatre on Wednesday night. The Tivoli is not only the largest motion picture theatre in Chicago to date, but is one of the handsomest and most costly theatres in America. A program in keeping with the importance of the house was arranged by Balaban & Katz for the premier performance.

Harry Reichenbach is in the city putting the finishing touches on his plans for the exploitation of "Outside the Law," featuring Priscilla Dean, which will have its first Chicago showing early in March.

Harry Lorsh, Chicago, district publicity representative for Goldwyn, and John Rankin, coast publicity representative for Goldwyn, with headquarters at Los Angeles, left Chicago for Boston this week where they will handle the publicity and exploitation on "Earthbound" when it opens at Shubert's Majestic theatre for an indefinite run.

Reports reaching the Chicago headquarters of Creation Film Company from J. Hoddy Milligan, who is traveling through the South disposing of that company's picture, "For the Freedom of Ireland," are to the effect that he has sold the following territories: Louisiana, Mississippi and Arkansas, Southern States Film Company of New Orleans; Alabama and Georgia, Southern States Film Company of Atlanta; Florida and South Carolina to the Southern States Film Company of Jacksonville; and Texas and Oklahoma to the Southern States Film Company of Dallas.

Another new exchange will soon be added to Chicago's already long list of independent film marts. The Wabash Film Exchange will early in March be established and ready for business at the corner of Eighth and Wabash Avenue. The new exchange, which will be located on the third floor of 804 South Wabash Avenue, will be fully equipped to serve exhibitors with a complete line of new and reissued one and two-reel comedies, two-reel western productions and five and six-reel special features of society, Western and popular comedy drama types. The Wabash Film Exchange will specialize in popular priced productions and will make this their big talking point. The personnel and officers of the newly formed exchange will be made public as soon as arrangements have been completed for the opening of the new offices.

"Lying Lips" has broken all house records at Barbee's Loop Theatre during its first week's run, and Manager Barbee has kept it for a second week. A very excellent prologue has helped to put the feature over in a big way.

Manager Aschman, of Pathe's Chicago exchange, was host to critics and representatives of the press at a very pleasant luncheon at the Auditorium Hotel on Monday, followed by a private screening of "The Devil," the splendid feature starring George Arliss, at the new Pathe projection room. Mr. Aschman is scheduled to leave Wednesday for New York on company business.

Joseph H. Gilday, veteran of the film business, and a former exhibitor, has been appointed district manager for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to have jurisdiction over the Chicago territory. Mr. Gilday came to Chicago this week from New York, with Harris P. Wolfberg, who is retiring as district manager to become vice-president and general sales-manager of the Lake & Export Coal Corporation. Messrs. Gilday and Wolfberg will relinquish the reins at the Chicago Paramount office as soon as Gilday has become acclimated.

Mr. Gilday has been branch manager of the Famous Players office in Kansas City, his home town, for the last year. He is one of the pioneers of the moving picture business. He was the first man in Kansas City to convert a legitimate theatre into a cinema palace—having the old Willis Wood theatre in that city. He was very successful as an exhibitor. He had the first neighborhood theatre and the first open-air theatre in Kansas City. "Joe" Gilday is known in the film industry as a man of pleasing personality and unimpeachable integrity. He understands the exhibitors' problems and is known for the deep, personal interest he takes in seeing to it that the exhibitors in his territory are aided to prosperity.

Mr. Gilday had a striking introduction to Chicago last Saturday when a few hours after his arrival in town he was whisked out to the Senate Theatre which Lubliner & Trinz were opening with the Paramount picture, "Brewster's Millions."

It is a coincidence that both Gilday and Wolfberg, whom he succeeds, are Kansas City men—and in the years agone, Gilday and Wolfberg were neighbors in Kansas City, and Wolfberg, when a youngster, attended Gilday's movie house at Twenty-third and Troost Avenue.

Scores of exhibitors are visiting the Famous Players exchange to bid welcome to Gilday and farewell to Wolfberg, whose departure from the film business caused a sensation when announced in this publication ten days ago.

Aaron Gollos, president of Gollos Enterprises, Inc., which controls the Illinois and Indiana rights to "The Hidden Light," starring Dolores Cassinelli, announces that this production will have its initial Chicago showing at Barbee's Loop theatre, opening on March 13, following which it is booked to play the Lubliner & Trinz circuit, the Woodlawn theatre and others.

Celebrated Players has organized a non-theatrical educational department in direct charge of Henry C. Friedman. The large variety of subjects released by Celebrated peculiarly fits them to serve this field in a broad and complete way. Celebrated is also completing arrangements for the marketing of the New Zenith Portable Projector for use in private homes, schools, lodges, etc.

H. M. Belford, sales manager of the Independent Films Association, is in New York for a ten days' stay with headquarters at the Hotel Claridge. Mr. Belford is in New York to close foreign rights and Eastern territory for the Ray Gallagher series of two-reel Westerns.

Herman Black, publisher of the Chicago American, Mrs. Marshall Field, III., and Major Frederic McLaughlin, were guests of honor at the regular bi-weekly luncheon of the Motion Picture Press Club at the Stratford hotel on February 11. The club, through President Dan Roche, pledged its aid to Mrs. Field in procuring screen publicity for the wrestling matches she is promoting for the benefit of the crippled children of Chicago. A committee was appointed composed of Harry Rice of Independent Films Association, Al Parker, Rothacker Film Company; W. L. Hill of Universal; Ralph Kettering of Jones, Linnick & Schaefer, and L. H. Mason to take charge of this matter and arrange for the making of a trailer of Mrs. Field for distribution in theatres of Chicago. Watterson Rothacker offered to make the trailer without cost and his offer was accepted by Mrs. Field and the Press Club with thanks. In the course of a brief address Mr. Black declared news of pictures and motion picture theatres was of great interest to readers of newspapers and stated that his paper was glad to get live and interesting publicity on various phases of the industry.

Average production and business was about as usual. (West.)

Idols of Clay—

Very big production, excellent puller. Fine business. (East.)

This feature was badly cut by censor. Went over big. (East.)

Forbidden Fruit—

They were terribly disappointed with this. Did not think it lived up to "Something to Think About" and "Why Change Your Wife?"

Broke the attendance record. Greatly talked about. Continued for a second week. (Middle West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Passion—

One of the best pictures ever shown in this city. Forced to start half hour earlier each day to accommodate crowds. New box office records reached. (East..

Going over tremendously. Talked of everywhere. Praised and condemned, but everyone in town wants to see it. (East.)

Rated by critics as one of the greatest pictures yet produced. Hundreds of patrons turned away during the first week, and still drawing big crowds at 40 cents top price during the second week. (Middle West.)

This picture brought good business and was considered a fairly good feature.

Love, Honor and Obey—

A good picture but did not pull at this house, consequently business was poor. (East.)

Was only fair picture which brought fair business. (East.)

The Kid—

Played twelve shows a day to excellent business. Consider it a knockout. Immense. (East.)

Good second week. Picture caused a world of comment. (Middle West.)

This picture went over big. Had two week's run. (West.)

Dangerous Business—

Went over well, as is always the case with a Talmadge picture in my house. Some of the older folks thought it went a little too far in some scenes, and others frankly characterized parts of it as "raw." But it got the money, and that's the acid test, I suppose.

Harriet and the Piper—

Drew fairly well all week, but failed to make a "hit."

The Perfect Woman—

Fair picture to fair business. Not Connie's best. (East.)

The Branded Woman—

Business very big, though it played in another theatre here a couple of weeks ago. (East.)

The Devil's Garden—

Great picture and it sure did go big. (Middle West.)

GOLDWYN

Earthbound—

Although an excellent production this feature went over the heads of the audience. Too deep for patrons. Fair business for week's run. (East.)

Bunty Pulls the Strings—

Too fragmentary to please majority of patrons. Artistically done, however. (Middle West.)

The Penalty—

A winner. Filled house for two consecutive weeks, playing even to capacity at matinees. (Middle West.)

Officer 666—

A good picture. Many were attracted by the star, Tom Moore. (East.)

The Great Lover—

Fair picture of an excellent play. Nothing to make a fuss about. (Middle West.)

The Girl With the Jazz Heart—

Not Kennedy's best. Fair business. (East.)

ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS

Lying Lips—

A splendid picture with well sustained suspense and beautiful photography and settings. Will make thousands of new friends for Florence Vidor and please the admirers of House Peters. Did record business for one week and we are holding it over for second week. (Middle West.)

A real picture and a splendid entertainment. People went out of their way to comment favorably on it. (Middle West.)

Love—

A fairly good box office attraction. The plot is nothing new, but the scenery and settings make the picture worth while. (Middle West.)

Good picture which brought more than usual business. (West.)

Last of the Mohicans—

An entertaining picture of real historical value. School children appealed to in advertising. Good business for seven day run. (East.)

METRO

Polly With a Past—

Good entertainment, but not a great picture. As an opening attraction, a great success, because light enough to please, and dramatic enough to be exciting in a mild way. (Middle West.)

Passion Fruit—

Average production. Business fair. (East.)

Cinderella's Twin—

Interesting picture which brought good business. (West.)

UNITED ARTISTS

The Love Light—

Drew well for about three days and then fell off considerably. Even Mary's large following in this city did not all turn out to see it. Newspaper reviewers characterized it as "poor" and it was dubbed as "rotten" by many of little Mary's adorers. (East.)

The Mark of Zorro—

Opened to approximately 14,000 people on Sunday, and keeping up the good work all week. Everybody likes it immensely. (Middle West.)

Rich Girl, Poor Girl—

A fair picture which brought average business. (West.)

SELZNICK

Broadway and Home—

Only fair. O'Brien draws fairly well and the picture was fairly good and business was just about fair. Nothing to rave over. He pleases best in more virile roles—such as "The Wonderful Chance" and "His Wife's Money." (East.)

The Man Who Lost Himself—

Not by any means a knockout, but played to excellent business, in house catering to "limousine trade." Doubt whether it would go so well in the neighborhood houses, but a picture that pleases the blase, sophisticated people. (East.)

EQUITY

Hush—

Somewhat different to the usual Young pictures, but pleased about fifty-fifty. Consider it her best, but my patrons didn't agree with me. She was not as pretty as usual, but far more interesting. (East.)

JANS

Love Without Question—

Until about the middle of the third reel, held them tense. Then it became funny. Title drew well and star pleased. Only a fair program picture. (East.)

REALART

She Couldn't Help It—

One of the best things this little star had done. She is a real hit with the younger set and this is just the sort of thing they like her in. Played to excellent business. (East.)

VITAGRAPH

Trumpet Island—

Marguerite de la Motte and Wallace MacDonald pleased hugely. Picture went over well and all seemed to like it. Business was good. (East.)

UNIVERSAL

Outside the Law—

Record houses on this picture. Very entertaining. (East.)

Once to Every Woman—

Average picture which brought fair business. (Middle West.)

ROBERTSON-COLE

One Man in a Million—

Plenty of atmosphere. Plenty of action. Big business, as much because of personal appearance of George Beban. But they liked the picture enough to go away and speak well of it. (Middle West.)

Kismet—

Certainly went over big and brought big business. (Middle West.)

A Cure For Those Examination Blues
MACK SENNETT presents
February 3-4-5
EVERYBODY has heard of the beauty of the Mack Sennett Girl. She has become an institution in the land—an abstraction meaning beauty of face, symmetry of form and grace of person.
ALL the Mack Sennett Girls will be there—and then some! In one scene alone 600 beautiful girls participate—their harmonized presence being headed by Marie Prevost.
AND Ben Turpin will be there also. His will be the title role—a small town idol. All the woes that have ever been allotted him in a Sennett plot will seem like items in a perfect day compared with the calamity that follows him as the hero.

PHYLLIS HAVER
February 3-4-5
"A SMALL Town Idol" is Mack Sennett's seventh picture in six reel proportions. It is his latest and greatest. It is a comedy that will put dimples in the cheeks of the world.
FIVE hundred beautiful girls participate in one of the scenes of this picture. Three of the number of future screen stars that are going to be seen in that feminine array.
NO comment that appeals is omitted by this wizard of the screen. In his astounding fashion Mack Sennett has blended such perfect combination as attempted by any Producer. Be sure you see it.

Calvert's "Passion" Prologue

Capitol Theatre, St. Paul, Presentation Adds Greatly to Film's Pulling Powers

ONE of the most novel and distinctive prologues to be evolved for enhancing the presentation of "Passion" was that staged by the Capitol theatre in St. Paul, Minn. The theatre, the finest in the Middle West, since its opening last September has slowly but surely progressed in the art of presenting special scenic and musical numbers until it has reached the pinnacle of presentation.

The prologue for "Passion" drew favorable written comment from the St. Paul Art Institute, a society of artists that abides in one of the few cities of the Middle West that consistently supports grand opera and the Russian ballets. The art society letter to Messrs. Finkelstein and Ruben, owners of the theatre, said the prologue to "Passion" was the best thing scenically that St. Paul has seen since the Daghileff ballet some six years ago.

Managing Director Lowell V. Calvert, who designs and stages the scenic numbers at St. Paul's Capitol theatre, took the three striking episodes in the passionate life of Madame Du Barry as the theme for his prologue. In the center of the stage, before a futuristic drop, stood a tall candelabra with three lighted candles.

Mlle. Desha, who went to St. Paul especially for this engagement, direct from the Criterion theatre in New York, presented the dancing numbers in the prologue. The parted curtains revealed Desha bathed in scarlet light, dancing before the candelabra. The dancer presented the "Dance of Passion" as her first number, typifying Du Barry's passionate infatuation for Louis XV, King of France. The conclusion of this dance was marked by the snuffing of one candle, depicting the death of the King.

The second dance interpreted Du Barry's real love for Armand and was called the "Dance of Love." Mlle. Desha in this number worked in a deep blue light, her dancing subdued from the mad whirl of the passionate dance which preceded it. The dance ended with a second candle being extinguished, indicative of the tragic end of Armand, with a bullet in his head.

The next unit was the "Dance of Death," in which the dancer appeared shrouded in black, with but a tiny point of white light playing on her features from one side, and a deep scarlet light from the other. Slowly her movements grew less passionate, and the light faded, until she dropped dead at the foot of the candelabra, leaving the stage in total darkness as the third candle went out, showing the audience that Du Barry had at last paid the penalty of her excesses and extravagance, on the guillotine.

The number closed with a rosy light slowly creeping from the floor to the top of the back drop depicting the dawn of a new France, while the audience showed its appreciation with thunderous applause. The Capitol Symphony orchestra and the grand organ accompanied the dancer, and broke into the thrilling strains of the "Marseillaise," as dawn rose on the imaginative picture of a France reborn.

Hyman Staging Prologue for "Isobel"

Managing Director Edward L. Hyman of the Brooklyn Strand theatre, is staging a prologue for "Isobel, or the Trails End," the feature on the bill this week at the Strand.

The scenic set for the prologue is a snow-bound tract with a log cabin to the left, with the ruddy light from a fire shining through. The Mark Strand quartette garbed in cold-weather attire, even to mackinaws, sing Bullard's colorful "Winter Song." The lights are silver and red, ebbing and flowing as to intensity at the proper points.

Fine "Earthbound" Prologue

Salt Lake City Theatre Stages Original Presentation Number

THE Salt Lake theatre, Salt Lake City, Utah, recently played "Earthbound," with the presentation of the film a featured part of the showing.

For the prologue the stage was dressed in blue cheese cloth. It was opened by dimming up blue footlights in an absolutely dark house. Then a harpist played "For All Eternity" very softly, swelling in volume to the chorus, which was picked up by the orchestra, with harp and orchestra continuing until the end. The entire song was repeated by a quartette back stage, with full musical accompaniment from the orchestra pit. As the quartette started the song, the front curtain rose very slowly, disclosing a cross on the left of the stage. As the curtain rose, the blue border lights were dimmed up. At the conclusion of the song, a halo appeared at stage right and then a voice back stage spoke the following:

"It is written that until you have purged yourself of your earthly sins, until all those you have sinned against forgive and send you on your way with their love, you will be earthbound. And now there remains but one, she who will be your mate through all eternity."

As the voice finishes speaking, the halo fades out. At the beginning of the voice, a girl dressed in mourning had entered the stage and knelt by the cross. As the halo is dimmed out, a spotlight is thrown upon the kneeling girl; she rises and extends her arms towards the spotlight, speaking:

"Oh, Dick, I do love you and want to send you onward. So go, my beloved, go!"

Then all lights out amid the rumble of thunder and the flash of lightning which continue until the first title is thrown on the screen, when the orchestra comes in with a heavy selection from "Forza del Destino" on the last thunder crash. As the first scene in the picture comes on screen, polychrome cathedral candlesticks are turned on, showing sparks of light.

Fire Department Aids in Putting Over Comedy

A new way to turn a comedy into a feature was demonstrated recently by Manager Nobel Hearne of the Superba theatre, Los Angeles, when he used the Century comedy "Fire-Bugs" to show the fallacy of attempting to fight fire when you do not know how, and members of the Los Angeles Fire Department to lecture and give practical suggestions along the proper lines of preventing disastrous conflagrations.

The week's bill was advertised as "Fire Prevention Week" and twice each day a big fire engine with complete staff drove at break neck speed to the front of the Superba theatre. Here Chief Scott and his men spoke to the crowd on the street, giving important instructions as to the proper way to fight fire and later from the stage of the theatre gave practical demonstrations of their instructions. Manager Hearne secured the co-operation of all members of the Fire Dept. and equipment for display in the lobby and theatre. Each patron was handed a fire prevention instruction card which gave the gist of Chief Scott's daily remarks.

Nobel Hearne recently became manager of the Superba theatre after serving as assistant manager for more than a year and following considerable experience in this work with the Saenger Amusement Company of New Orleans. For the past several months he has been in charge of arranging lobby displays and special features for the program, and his successful work led to his promotion to manager.

On this page are two cuts illustrating the exploitation related. Note the fire hose draped about the lobby. This is an idea that can be utilized in any city.

Radiophones in Theatres

Rialto at Omaha Makes One Orchestra Do For Two Theatres by Use of New Invention

By using radiophones for orchestration in two houses under one management, John Loveridge, of the Rialto Theatre, Omaha, Neb., established an innovation for motion picture theatres and added another chapter to the growing list of exploitation devices by which the public can be enticed into a motion picture theatre.

The stunt, which was worked in co-operation with the exploitation campaign planned and executed by R. C. Gary, exploitation representative for the Omaha territory of Paramount Pictures, created a distinct sensation. The radiophones were installed from the stages of the Rialto Theatre, which was showing "Heliotrope," and the Strand Theatre. Amplifiers had been connected to every seat in the two houses.

The orchestra played alternately at the two theatres, but by means of the radiophones and amplifiers it was possible for both audiences to hear the music constantly, first directly before the seats and then from the other theatre.

The big value of the idea, of course, lay in the exploitation possibilities of such a novelty. Manager Loveridge and Gary had discounted this in advance and their paper and newspaper advertising for days in advance had played up the fact that this would be the first time such an experiment had been tried in a theatre in Omaha. The novelty angle alone brought large crowds to the house.

Despite the fact that the radiophones were largely an experiment they proved a veritable success under the direction of Fred Swain and Wilbur Cramer, two young wireless operators who directed the mechanism.

The radiophone exploitation was supplemented by paper and extensive advertising. Postcards of prominent thoroughfares in New York and Chicago were obtained and addressed to the theatre's mailing list with the message: "Have just learned that Heliotrope Harry is out and will be at the Rialto Theatre, Omaha, Jan. 16." These cards were despatched to Chicago, New York, or whatever city they were supposed to come from; and remailed to the theatre's patrons from there.

A cartoon teaser campaign was used in the Omaha World-Herald, News and Bee. Gary, who had previously demonstrated his abilities as a cartoonist, so that his "motion picture exploitation cartoons" were being run as news by the various papers, ran a cartoon a day on "Heliotrope," concentrating on the mysterious "Harry," until the final cartoon, the day before the picture's opening, gave away the secret and tied up the series with the picture and the Rialto Theatre.

The campaign was rounded out by heliotrope-scented sachet packets, which were distributed to patrons of the Rialto Theatre the week before "Heliotrope" had its run. From an exploiteering angle it was one of the most successful campaigns ever conducted, as well as being one of the most unique. Manager Loveridge, who was responsible for the introduction of the radiophone system, was so elated over its success that he has declared his intention of using it again at the first opportunity he has to tie it up with Paramount picture exploitation.

Ties-up with Hardware Store for MacDonald Picture

Good results were obtained by Manager C. P. Murphy of the New Garrick theatre, Minneapolis, during the showing of "My Lady's Latch Key," in a tie-up with the Warner Hardware Co.'s store.

Mr. Murphy arranged with the hardware people to give away to lady patrons of the New Garrick, a ticket good for a duplicate latch key when presented at the hardware store.

A very effective window display was arranged with the hardware store in which a three sheet cut-out, star portraits and stills were used to good advantage in connection with a display of locks, keys, revolvers and other things designed for the protection of the home. A card announcing the distribution of the free key tickets and another reading: "Love laughs at locksmiths but convention demands a latch key. You can get the latch key here. The love and laughter at the New Garrick this week," also formed a part of the display.

A tie-up was also made in the advertising used during the week by the Warner people.

This is the first time co-operation of this kind with a hardware store has been secured in Minneapolis. It was the second tie-up secured by Mr. Murphy during the week. "The Toonerville Trolley" was a part of the New Garrick program for that week and the Minneapolis Tribune, which publishes the Fox cartoons, gave daily editorial comment on the comedy.

Hyman's Chinese Musicians

Brooklyn Strand Stages Fine Prologue for "The First Born"

For the prologue used in connection with the showing of "The First Born," Managing Director Edward I. Hyman of the Strand theatre, Brooklyn, first scoured New York's Chinatown for a Chinese orchestra and succeeded in landing a small troupe of so-called musicians.

Then the other more orthodox parts of the prologue were gotten together. A stage setting as illustrated in the cut above was provided. Other musicians and singers were secured and rehearsed in a carefully prepared program.

With the opening of the curtains, a soprano in the female Chinese costume sang "The Chinese Lullaby" from the music show, "East is West." Toward the end of the song, which was accompanied by a male quartette from off-stage, the lights began to come down, and the end, when the scene was absolutely darkened, and without parting the curtains, scene number one was lifted, and the red and blue border and footlights coming up revealed a Chinatown scene. On the left, the Chinese orchestra was pounding away, and before the lights even defined the players, the audience knew what it was and it got a big laugh. Then a young Broadway dancer, who makes a specialty of Oriental dances, did a bona fide geisha.

The Strand Male Quartette, in costume sang "So Long Oolong," There was another short dance and then the tenor of the quartette took the stage to sing "The Chinese Lullaby," and the rest of the quartette assisting from offstage. The last notes of the song were carried into the picture which was shot on the screen, after the stage was darkened and the screen had been lowered. The novelty of Hyman's prologue was in the fact that at the end, while the tenor was singing, the little chinese boy shown in the cut ran out from the fly, and the tenor took the kid up in his arms while finishing the song. A perfect roar went up as the kid ran across the stage.

Rothafel's "Saphead" Prologue Number

The Capitol theatre is presenting a prologue in connection with the showing of "The Saphead," the feature attraction on the bill for the week.

Mr. Rothafel has taken a cue from the picture itself in staging his specialty number.

A dancer attired as Buster Keaton in the picture, silk hat and frock coat, carrying a cane and a bunch of flowers, is first seen wandering around after the manner of the above-mentioned star. The stage setting is a street scene with lamp post at center and set buildings on each side. The backing is white muslin draped with the lighting all from the rear, bringing the figure into silhouette. The performer is joined by a girl in summer street dress. After some eccentric pantomime the two present a novelty dance.

Slipper Window Display for "Cinderella's Twin"

A window display of ladies slippers was used by Manager Edward J. Weisfeldt of Saxe's Strand Theatre, Milwaukee, as an advertising hook up for Viola Dana in Cinderella's Twin. A woman's dress slipper completely covered with rhinestones was secured from the Walkover Shoe Company and displayed in their Milwaukee store window as the $1,800 Cinderella slipper alleged to have been worn by Viola Dana in the film production. The slipper was placed on a cushion directly under a nitrogen lamp and its startling brilliancy attracted hundreds of persons to the window.

Criterion Prologue Number Sets New Presentation Standard

"Buried Treasure" Given Atmosphere by Musical and Ballet Specialty

A SPANISH garden laid in an orange grove with the fruit bobbing over the old walls, a playground for native singers and dancers, while the sun plays on the ancient chateau and the farms and mountains in the distance, is the colorful prologue prepared by Hugo Riesenfeld for the showing of "Buried Treasure," which began an extended engagement at the Criterion Theatre on Sunday, February 13th. Josef Urban, the European master of stage investiture, designed the stage gem as a frame for the singers and dancers in the prologue, and Josiah Zuro, director of the New School of Opera and Ensemble, arranged the music and dance numbers which, with the setting, have received unstinted praise from the press and public.

An old garden wall, pierced with a barred window, stands at the left. At the right stands another wall. Long settles of stone run along the walls and oranges peep over the tops at the quiet enclosure. At the rear rises a majestic tree throwing its branches over the entire garden and further in the distance lies the sleepy valley at the foot of the white-tipped mountains. A chateau, bristling with spires and studded with windows, reposes in the valley.

Singers and dancers, a mandolinist and a guitarist, sit about on the long settles or stroll about the enclosure. Dark eyes flash from over the tops of fluttering fans and mantillas are flung about pretty faces to accentuate their charm. The figures on the stage are in fluid motion, flirting, teasing and playfully quarrelling.

The unseen orchestra, plays "The March of the Toreadors" by Tarvan-Marchetti and the soloists and ensemble, numbering a score, sing for the quartet of native Spanish dancers—Clarelina, Esperanita, Coralita and Anita—who dance with dash to the rattle of their castanets, the singing and the orchestral music.

From off-stage is heard the voice of Edorardo Albana, baritone, who sings a popular old Spanish folk song, "Serenade de Murcia," and is joined on his entrance by Susan Clough, mezzo soprano, and the ensemble. The final chords of the folk songs serve as an introduction to a spirited dance duet by Vera Myers and Paul Oscard, which, in turn, resolves itself into another pretentious song number, a "ballade" from Carlos Gomez's "Il Guarany," sung by Albano and the ensemble to an accompaniment by the orchestra and the solo instrumentalists.

"In a Spanish Garden," as the prologue is known, is reminiscent of the best moments in the popular "Land of Joy," the production which was brought from Spain a few seasons ago. The colorful atmosphere of the land of the toreador and troubadour has been recreated with charming effect on the Criterion stage, and, in the course of the prologue, some of Spain's best and most characteristic music and dances are presented, including "La Sota" from "Dolores," "Maja Goyescas" from "Panaderos," a "Habanera" and "Lor Andaluse."

The Spanish atmosphere of the prologue reflects the principal theme in "Buried Treasure" which blends the modern society story with that of the Spanish Main of four centuries ago.

With his usual modesty, Mr. Riesenfeld gives the credit for the Criterion prologue to Messrs. Zuro and Urban. It is due to the training by Mr. Zuro, who is the director of the New School of Opera and Ensemble, that singers of the calibre of Albano and Miss Clough and the finely trained ensemble, and dancers like Miss Myers and Oscard appear on Riesenfeld programs, and point to even greater successes in the future. "In a Spanish Garden," pretentious as it is in motion picture history on Broadway, is but the beginning of a series of spectacular musical and dance productions.

For the past two years Mr. Zuro has been training singers and dancers, teaching them the art of the stage and encouraging them through practical work to strive for greater art. It is impossible to engage exactly the type of singers and dancers required for the specific motion picture theatre entertainment and for that reason the school was founded by Mr. Zuro with the support of Mr. Riesenfeld. Quietly and without pretence, the school continued its work through the many months to reveal its first representative effort in the Criterion prologue, "In a Spanish Garden."

While it is true that the Riesenfeld theatres on Broadway, the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion, are motion picture theatres, they have not only been a strong influence in creating a better taste in photoplays, but have been responsible for the development of several correlated fine arts—the dance, music, both vocal and instrumental, and stage settings.

The musical history of the theatres has been an impressive one, despite the fact that the oldest of the trio of theatres, the Rialto, is not yet five years old. In this brief span the theatres have introduced or encouraged singers who have gone into more pretentious musical work, some of them reaching the highest rung of the ladder, grand opera.

Putting Over "The Kid" at St. Louis

Skouras Brothers Inaugerate Great Campaign for Chaplin Film

SOME critics maintain that all that is necessary to attract record-breaking throngs with Chaplin's "The Kid" is to announce the date of the feature in the local newspapers. But Skouras Brothers, who began a week's run of the famous comedian's latest film endeavor at their two leading first run houses, the New Grand Central and the West End Lyric theatres, St. Louis, have an entirely different opinion.

"Exploit every worth while production, regardless of circumstance or star," has been their ideal motto, and in accordance they have gone so far with their methods of exploitation of "The Kid" that everyone within a few hours' ride of St. Louis has learned of the picture, its date of showing, and something by which to remember it.

The stunt began two weeks before February 7, the date set for the premiere in this city of Chaplin's latest release. A mailing list of several thousand St. Louis fans and suburbanites received their weekly letter, at the bottom of which appeared the bland statement—"We are not Kidding you, but 'The Kid' will get your goat."

Then the newspapers came out with displays of various sizes for the two weeks preceding the opening. Cuts of Chaplin and little Coogan were profusely interspersed with the "copy" of the advertisements; pictures of the Tramp and the sophisticated window-breaker were placed on large sign-boards all about St. Louis and the surrounding vicinity, and interest was running high.

The private review of the feature which was given at the closing banquet of the convention of the Missouri Theatre Owners was spoken about in the daily press as early as January 20. The local motion picture critics are severely independent and their favorable comment on the production created tremendous good-will among the theatre-goers.

Then Skouras climaxed their advertising with a most humorous bit of exploitation. Several young men were advertised for, their only requirement being that they could "make up" to resemble either Charlie Chaplin or Micky Coogan. Well, every school-boy who ever had an ambition to appear on the screen in imitation of their comedy idol came with a battered derby, a delinquent pair of trousers, and the conventional Chaplin foot-wear. And with them they brought their little brothers, or cousins, or friends attired in baggy pants and a slouched cap the visor of which was drawn far over the right side of the neck.

The five best imitations were employed. They were each given beats about the city and suburbs and told to go the limit. At Grand and Olive, the center of night life in this city, hundreds of persons blocked the streets to watch the antics of a Chaplin and Coogan who directed traffic during the absences of the traffic-officer. The Chaplin imitators were given implicit instruction not to let go the hand of their little partner, and as a result every move that the actors made was in perfect accord. If Chaplin crossed the street he dragged the little boy with him.

In the business districts where a pair of the imitators were stationed, thousands of office-workers appeared at the windows of the large buildings to gain a few moments of amusement.

To say that an exploitation stunt was so successful that persons spent considerable time watching the antics of the participants in preference to hurrying to the admission door is describing it as it actually took place. The New Grand Central and West End Lyric smashed every previous house record in the history of the two houses for opening day. A pair of the clowns were stationed in each of the lobbies and entertained the crowds who had already bought tickets but were waiting from one to two hours to gain entrance.

"The greatest pulling card we've ever had," said Spyros Skouras.

Stars Sell Tickets as Exploitation Stunt

The originality of Sid Grauman was demonstrated recently during the showing at his Rialto theatre, Los Angeles, of "Midsummer Madness." The cast in this production, includes Lois Wilson, Lila Lee, Jack Holt and Conrad Nagel.

Mr. Grauman arranged to have each of these stars sell tickets to the crowds, one each evening from 7:30 to 8:30 o'clock. Proper exploitation and publicity of this unique idea brought additional crowds to the playhouse, and the stars themselves enjoyed the experience greatly.

The feminine luminaries were delighted with the enthusiastic reception the ticket buyers gave them. Each had a brief chat with the patrons. The women buyers proved to be the most talkative, and scores of unusual questions were asked.

Borrows Toys and Doll Furniture for Lobby Display

A clever little bit of exploitation which cost absolutely nothing, was Manager George Schmidt's lobby display for "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," when it played a two-day engagement at the Alamo No. 2, Atlanta.

From a local toy-shop, he borrowed a set of doll furniture—and fitted up three rooms—parlor, bedroom and bath. This, mounted on a pedestal properly draped, caught the eye instantly. A tiny celluloid doll was in the bath-tub; two other dolls, to represent the society reporter, and the "boob-hero," were in the living-room, and still another doll, to represent the flighty wife, was in the bed in the bedroom.

Over this was a sign reading—"Not 'A Doll's House'—just 'Parlor, Bedroom and Bath'".

Effective Prologue Given in Newark

The Rialto theatre, Newark, N. J., staged a very effective atmospheric prologue for "The Last of the Mohicans," last week's bill at the Rialto.

Following the overture, the last notes of which were those of a flute playing a weird melody, the curtains parted, showing Grace Morton, mezzo soprano, in Indian costume. Miss Morton rendered "The Land of the Sky Blue Waters," with a scenic showing streams, mountains, etc., projected during the song.

The singer first appeared in semi-darkness. Then a baby spot was thrown on her feet, after which the lights went up revealing a forest backing by Urban.

At the end of the song, the lights dim out and the titles of the feature were screened.

Grombacher Does Things for "Kismet"

Elaborate staging, with impressive prologue, was given the performance of "Kismet" which had a week's showing at the Liberty, Spokane, Wash. One bizarre scene from the production, showing the beggar in his borrowed finery in the harem, was done in the prologue, with five taking part. An oriental effect throughout the house was achieved in the decorative scheme and the girl ushers wore gay harem costumes. Manager Ray Grombacher did a record business with the show, running it till midnight on Saturday.

Attractive Setting for Showing of "Polly"

A simple but attractive setting for a song number offered in connection with the showing of "Polly With A Past" was arranged by Manager Edward J. Weisfeldt of Saxe's Strand Theatre, Milwaukee. A wooden ring covered with black velvet was suspended a few feet above the floor of the stage and on it was perched a giant scenery parrot of brilliant colors. The young lady vocalist was attired in a brilliant red costume which provided a pleasing contrast to the black circle. A conventional lantern on either side completed the setting.

New "Forbidden Fruit" Stunt

Majestic Theatre, East St. Louis Originates New Exploitation Stunts

HERE is an exploitation stunt which was executed at the Majestic Theatre, East St. Louis, by Charles Raymond of Famous Players, and which set the entire city talking about "Forbidden Fruit."

For several days preceding the opening of the De Mille production, Raymond ran a teaser campaign in the East St. Louis daily newspapers. The displays, which were small, but scattered throughout each edition of the papers, read: "In Adam's Day the Apple was Forbidden Fruit, but in 1921 Who Wants to be Ancient?" Of course such a bland question thrown at the public from the several pages of a paper, naturally aroused their interest. The curiosity grew until the day the production was announced for the Majestic Theatre.

On opening day a large barrel was placed conspicuously in front of the lobby. It bore a sign which informed its readers of "A look back to the beginning of time." At the bottom of the barrel and in such a position as to make it visible to all was placed a Jonathan apple with a bite taken out of it. Another sign with the words, "Adam's Apple—Forbidden Fruit" was placed next to the apple. This display attracted much attention and passers-by during the entire run of the picture were peering down into the bottom of the barrel to see what it contained and why it was stationed in the theatre lobby.

Then to top off his stunt, Raymond had several hundred stickers printed bearing this admonition:

In Adam's Day
The Apple Was FORBIDDEN FRUIT
But in 1921 who wants to be ancient?
Partake generously of De Mille's Forbidden Fruit.
It is a pleasant sensation.

These stickers were pasted on apples and distributed by a neatly but sparsely clad young lady, who was stationed at the entrance to the auditorium. It is merely putting it lightly to say that the stunt sent people home talking; what actually was done was the equalling of all previous house records for attendance during the run of a single feature.

O'Hare Sends His Patrons Valentines

S. O'Hare, live wire exploiter out at Clarinda, Iowa, had booked "Everywoman" for Valentine's day and wanted something novel to advertise it, so he got out a four-page herald, the front cover of which was a full fledged valentine.

"Just for You," read the text on the cover. Page two said "To my valentine," while page three had a rhymed review of the picture.

The picture played at the Armory, one of the two theatres which Mr. O'Hara manages.

Carroll's Presentation of "Kismet" Meritorious

Howard Carroll, manager of the International theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y., has recently put over a knockout exploitation campaign for "Kismet."

Carroll's campaign began with full page newspaper ads. a new idea for Niagara Falls. Tie-ups with music and talking machine stores were used to good advantage.

Through his tie-ups with the music stores Howard had everybody in town buying "Kismet" records and the whole village whistling the song. He also engaged Jack Nicoloff, a native of the Falls, to garb himself as Otis Skinner in "Kismet," and walk about the streets giving out cards advertising the showing at the International. Nicoloff does not claim to look just like Skinner—but it was close enough for the purpose. "Kismet" Billboards were placed all over town and special stories were published in the newspapers.

A cut showing the International's "ballyhoo" man appears on this page.

Gets Newspaper Cooperation for Toonerville Releases

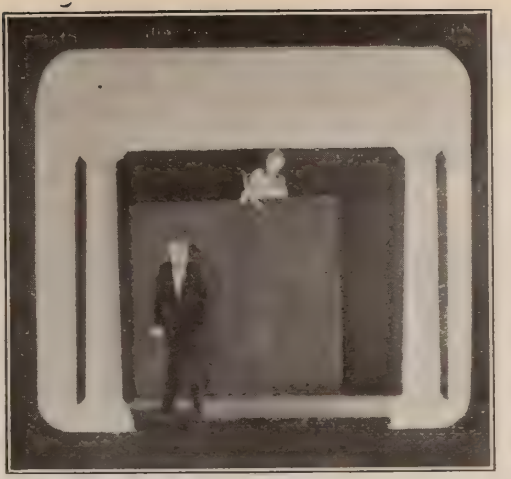
Here's one of the prize bits of co-operation up Minneapolis way during the past few months and it netted the New Garrick theatre of that city a lot of extra business and gave him opportunity to get a line on future tie-ups with the Minneapolis Tribune to mutual advantage.

The Tribune publishes Fontaine Fox's Toonerville cartoons and is proud of it. Manager C. P. Murphy of the New Garrick shows the Toonerville screen productions. So Murphy went to the Tribune and asked if the Tribune would run a line calling attention to the films at the New Garrick on the bottom of the newspaper cartoons providing he added a trailer saying, "Adapted from the Fox cartoons appearing exclusively in the Tribune" to his reel. The Tribune agreed and ran not only captions on each cartoon during the week of Murphy's exhibition but ran editorials on the entire Garrick show and ran two special one column stories about the film illustrating each with a single column cartoon of the Skipper and "the trolley."

Never before in Minneapolis has any newspaper so directly tied up with a short reel motion picture as in this instance. The stunt appears worthy of a trial in other cities.

Hyman Featuring Bela Nyary, Cymbalist

Coincident with the opening in Brooklyn of its new school of music, the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre added importance to the event by introducing to the city for the first time Bela Nyary, the Hungarian discovery, who plays without knowledge of notes the rare Hungarian orchestral instrument the cymbalon, and who is able to play the most difficult numbers perfectly upon the unique harmony-maker.



Novelty specialty act which Phil Gleishman, manager of the Broadway Strand theatre, Detroit, staged as told in the story appearing on this page

Instead of offering Nyary in the nature of a special novelty, Managing Director Edward L. Hyman made him part and parcel of the overture. In other words he was the star of the overture for the week.

Nyary and his cymbalon had a place among the members of the symphony orchestra and played a solo part of Liszt's "Sixth Hungarian Rhapsody" as rendered by the Brooklyn Mark Strand symphony orchestra. During the progress of the rhapsody the orchestral music halted and Nyary revealed his genius. The applause indicated that the soloist and the innovation in overtures had pleased.

Cox Makes Children's Attendance Special Feature

That children are the best advertisers a picture can have seems to be the belief of Joe Cox, manager of the Palace theatre, Cape May, N. J.

Mr. Cox booked "The Soul of Youth" for his theatre for January 28-29th. Then he sent out postcards to school children announcing a special showing of the picture.

The invitations read: "Don't you always enjoy a motion picture that has some boys and girls in it more than a picture with just grown-up actors and actresses? We think you do and so we want every boy and girl in Cape May to come to the SPECIAL MATINEE AFTER SCHOOL ON FRIDAY, January 28th.

"The picture that you will see," continued the message, "is 'The Soul of Youth.' Lewis Sargent, the boy who was 'Huck Finn' and the snub-nosed Ernest Butterworth, whose face you are familiar with, and charming little Elizabeth Jones, to say nothing of William Collier, Jr., and the lovely Miss Lila Lee are all in this picture, besides a whole orphan asylum of other children and the cutest little black boy that was ever 'bawn.' There is a whole afternoon of fun for you when you see them in this film. Remember the date and don't miss this treat."

The picture proved to be an unusual attractive feature for the children and Mr. Cox's unique exploitation resulted in excellent business for the entire run.

Packs Oranges on Stage

Grauman Gets Local Color in Presentation Specialty

Presentation of prologues to motion pictures has become a fine art.

In the leading theatres of the nation, they have become a fixed adjunct—they have won and held a place in popular favor hard to estimate, but readily understood.

And showmen of the country have given their audiences bits of city streets, glimpses of great metropolises, interiors of homes and castles; views of oceans and lakes—but it remained for Sid Grauman of Los Angeles, an outstanding genius in this type of entertainment, to transplant an entire orange orchard, with the trees laden with their golden fruit, and a packing house in operation, to the stage.

He showed such a setting recently, preceded by films showing groves, methods of picking and handling, highly instructive and entertaining. With the interest of the audience thoroughly aroused, the curtain rises on a packing plant. Four pretty girls, actual packers in the California plants, obtained from the crews of the California Fruit Growers' Association, staged a contest.

In front of them were racks holding an empty box. To their right were ample supplies of the golden globes. At a word from the starter, the girls began. Deft hands wrapped the oranges, one at a time, in tissue paper and packed them in orderly rows in the boxes. Faster and faster their nimble hands flew, while audiences leaned forward in tense expectation.

By actual time on a stop watch the winner of one contest packed a box in exactly three minutes and eleven seconds.

Newark Theatre Presents Elaborate Overture

On this page is shown three cuts illustrating the specialties introduced by the Newark theatre, Newark, N. J., in connection with last week's overture number "The Evolution of Dixie."

Interpreting the different phases of the composition, the Rialto management presented the three acts which will be seen explanatory under the titles of "Dance Aboriginal," "The Minuet," and "The Spirit of '76."

The "kiddies" also added to their number by waltzing in rag time, the music being drums and also pretending to assist in playing the overture by using two long horns with banners, braid and cord, as trumpets when the final notes of the number were sounded.

The idea for the number was worked out by Managing Director, H. E. Fintor Resident Manager Sid Lawrence and Musical Director Mart Sanig.

Drake Builds Lobby Display for "Heliotrope"

When Manager William M. Drake of e Strand Theatre, Newark, N. J., played Heliotrope," he followed out the suggesn given by Abner C. Robinson, exploition representative for the New York rritory of Paramount Pictures, who coerated in the campaign. Having used jail exterior for the theatre in exploiting The Jailbird," Manager Drake again pitalized the publicity value of this stunt decorating the exterior of his house to semble a jail,—only he went his original int one better.

The entire theatre front was covered th a canvass exterior, painted in drab, ay squares, exactly like the front of ng Sing, Leavenworth or any other well own involuntary resting place. To furer carry out this effect the ushers were essed in convicts' suits.

The copy on the front of this design ad: "Heliotrope—A Story as Big as manity's Heart" and was accentuated a drawing of Heliotrope Harry, the ncipal character of the picture, holding his hand the photograph of the daughfor whose happiness he gave his life.

Even now the stunt was a sure fire hit the crowds that gathered around the eatre; but Manager Drake, being an ist in the exploitation line, decided that illusion must go on perfectly or not at So to complete the details he had the ors to the theatre altered to resemble son gates. Although the accompanying otograph does not include this detail, it es an idea of the atmosphere created the picture by these settings.

Inside the lobby, decorations of heliope colored ribbons and plaster receptas filled with heliotrope perfume were ng on the wall. If one of the three eat principals in salesmanship consists arousing interest, the Newark manager alified on the first count.

Krupa Originates Another Clever Lobby Display

George M. Krupa, manager of the Hamilton theatre, Lancaster, Pa., was able to build the lobby display illustrated above by using the center of a 24-sheet on "When New York Sleeps," and mounting it on beaver board with each center of painted peacock feathers cut out and electric light globes of different colors inserted and attached to a flasher hidden back of the velour setting.

The display was not expensive, much of the material being borrowed and the result was something novel that attracted many a dollar to the Hamilton's box office.

Franklin Gives "Passion" Artistic Presentation

One of the most artistic programs in the history of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, was presented last week by Managing Director Harold B. Franklin.

In addition to presenting "Passion" in gala fashion, Mr. Franklin celebrated Lincoln week with a striking stage setting featuring a reproduction of the famous painting "Lincoln's Gettysburg Speech," unveiled as the symphony orchestra played "The American Patrol." The setting was placed in the center of a series of Colonial arches with Old Glory hanging in the background on each side.

Following the Lincoln part of the program, Mr. Franklin presented an excellently staged prologue to "Passion," reproducing the guillotine scene from the picture. A dozen or more members of a local dramatic society appeared in the number attired in colorful costumes of the Louis XV period such as shown in the picture. As a tableaux was unveiled Redferne Hollinshead, the soloist, sang "La Marseillaise."

The production itself follows and the orchestra uses the same score as that played by the Capitol theatre ensemble during the New York premiere of "Passion."

The marque of the Hippodrome was covered with silk American flags and red, white and blue bunting in honor of Lincoln's birthday. This week's program marks an artistic milestone in the history of Shea's Hippodrome.

Mr. Franklin increased the size of his usual small hand drawn ads for "Passion" and billed the picture in an extravagant way. The presentation and exploitation, it is judged was instrumental in increasing the business materially.

Owensboro Theatre Presents Attractive Prologue

An attractive prologue was arranged by the Bleich theatre, Owensboro, Ky., for the showing of "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway."

A special garden drop had been brought on for the occasion and an archway built with fencing on either side, giving the idea of an entrance to a rose garden. A local singer dressed as Mary, the chief feminine character, seated on a bench in the archway, sang the theme song, "Mary's a Grand Old Name." As the closing lines of the song were sung, the feature was flashed on. Throughout the picture, as scenes between Kid Burns and Mary were shown, the theme song was played by the house orchestra of five pieces.

Gets Cooperative Advertising for "Silk Hosiery"

"Silk Hosiery" had a pre-release showing at the Waldorf theatre, Akron, Ohio, and furnished Fred Walters, exploitation representative at the Cleveland Exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, a splendid opportunity. The exploitation man recognized the appeal of Enid Bennett's pictures for feminine audiences and saw the immediate opportunity for a tie-up with the title. Combining the two he arranged with the Ben Maiz Co. for a window display on Akron's most prominent street.

A striking array of silk hosiery constituted the piece de resistance for the tie-up. Clocked socks, long socks, colored socks, weave- socks—all of them silk socks—adorned the window display.

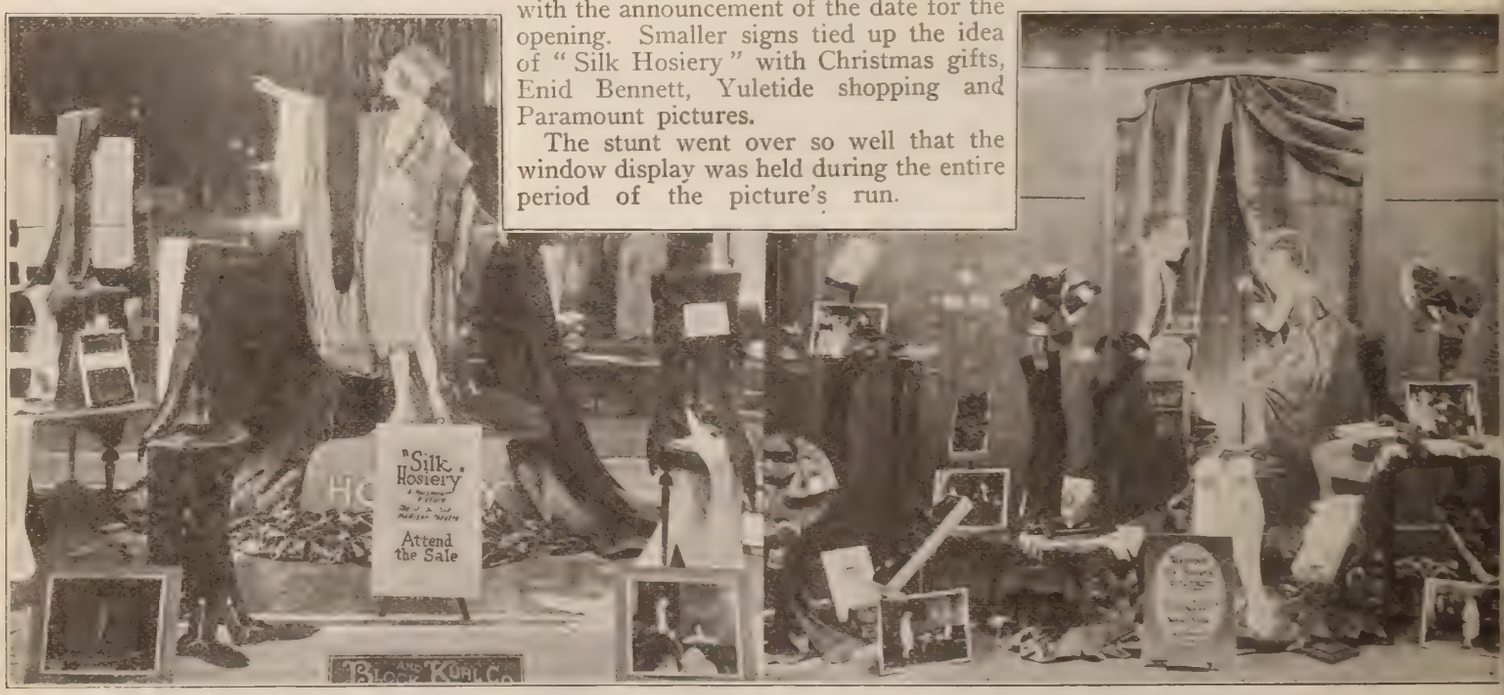
The center-piece was a sign advertising "Silk Hosiery" at the Waldorf theatre, with the announcement of the date for the opening. Smaller signs tied up the idea of "Silk Hosiery" with Christmas gifts, Enid Bennett, Yuletide shopping and Paramount pictures.

The stunt went over so well that the window display was held during the entire period of the picture's run.

Jockey Advertises "Th County Fair" in Philly

Staid old Chestnut street, Philadelph was very much interested during the we of January 31, by the appearance of mysterious jockey, in a yellow and bla suit, who appeared at the noon hour a rode nonchalantly up and down the stree It was not until he passed that the casu observer understood why he was the: For the back of his blouse bore in b black letters the words "The Coun Fair" and a liberal spirit of bill poster a newspaper advertising had advised mo denizens of Philadelphia that on Febr ary fifth, the film play of that name w to open at the Metropolitan Opera Hou

The stunt was a simple one and not pa ticularly new, but it aroused considerat interest and curiosity that reacted on t box office when the show opened.



Two of several window displays secured for "Silk Hosiery" when this picture played the Madison theatre, Peoria, Ill.

Baltimore Uses Novelty Float for "Earthbound"

An original exploitation stunt that started all Baltimore to talking about "Earthbound," was pulled for the New Theatre in that city by W. L. Ferguson, traveling exploitation representative from Goldwyn headquarters:

The huge globe which he had constructed for the Washington, D. C., showing of the drama, was taken to Baltimore and put to a new use. It was placed on a dais, covered with white cloth, on a large, flat, horse-drawn truck. A man dressed in black, standing on a rostrum in front of the globe, was bound to the globe by three long white streamers which completely encircled it, the streamers bearing the three phrases which formed the philosophy of life of two of the principal characters in Mr. King's photodrama, "No God," "No sin," "No future life." The man's arms were extended in a pleading gesture. In front of the man, partly concealing him, was a large oil painting of Wyndham Standing and Naomi Childers, two of the chief actors in the picture.

This float was drawn through the principal streets of Baltimore when the traffic was heaviest and no one could see it without looking close enough to see what it was all about and learning from the banner which concealed the sides and the wheels of the truck that "Earthbound," was to show at the New Theatre.

In addition to a special newspaper advertising campaign, to the house and billboard publicity, a black card bearing an arrow with the word "Earthbound" on the shaft of the arrow was placed on fences and posts leading into the city; door and taxi windshield tags were used; many excellent window displays were obtained; and the photoplay was shown with a special musical presentation.

Barbee Pulls Clever Stunt for "Lying Lips"

An animated sign under an awning stretched to the street drew considerable attention at Barbee's Loop Theatre, Chicago, during the run of "Lying Lips." Apparently, there were three pictures in the frame before the box office; but as pedestrians passed three more appeared. This trick isn't new as far as stores go; bnt it has never been done by a theatre before. Each duplex still was of a different color—green for the marine shot, amber for the ball-room scene, and black for the straights of House Peters and Florance Vidor; and each was lettered with a short, snappy catch-line.

Barbee's drew business through this simple display as they never could have through screaming posters. It was dignified without being dull; its shifting scenes linked up admirably with "Lying Lips."

New York Neighborhoc House Uses Novel Ballyhoo

The police in the neighborhood of t Mount Morris theatre on 116th St., N York City, were given a scare the oth day when on all the highways and bywa near the theatre began to appear mask figures in such number that the local began to take on the appearance of rendezvous of the Ku Klux Klan.

It was due to a unique ballyhoo, devis by the Mount Morris management, whi consisted of sending out in the streets masked man in immaculate evening dre wearing on his mask an advertisement f the engagement of the William Fox seri "Fantomas," at the Mount Morris the tre. A boy, also masked, followed t man giving out masks to everyone on t sidewalks, and it was not long before t procession was augmented by the presen of almost every kid in the neighborhoc wearing one of the "Fantomas" ads, a proving the strength of this unusual e ploitation idea.

Unusual Accomplishment Claimed for "Hush" by Equity Pictures

THE fifth Clara Kimball Young production released by Equity 'Hush' from the pen of Sada Cowan, is breaking many house records. In one week, twenty-one first-run houses ran 'Hush' and eleven have thus far reported that it has brought more box-office receipts than any former Young picture and many program-pictures. In five cases, the house-records were smashed. With thirteen box-office records previously excelled in other first-run houses, the total accomplishment of 'Hush' to date is eighteen box-office conquests, announces Equity.

"Hush" had its release amidst very trying circumstances. Its first run began when the country was sinking in depression, and motion-picture attendance was beginning to slacken. Quite a number of first-run exhibitors, says the Equity statement, suspended their booking schedule and made room for "Hush" in the hope that this independent production would draw heavier than their program booking. Many exhibitors, unable to prolong the showing of "Hush" beyond a week, due to previous booking contracts, have reserved additional time for a return of the fifth Young release.

The secret of the success of "Hush" is laid by Equity to the lavishness of the production, in addition to the dramatic performance of Miss Young herself. The nature of the action is such that extravagant sets are necessary, as the environment of the story is laid in the exclusive circles of aristocratic society.

The ease with which "Hush" lends itself to exploitation is another factor that explains why this picture has broken house-records repeatedly. At the Detroit Madison and Liberty—two Kunsky houses, the teaser campaign based on the use of the phrase "Hush money" brought thousands of curious fans to see "Hush." The dignity of "Hush" is another element that made high-class exploitation, in prologue and lobby display a logical conclusion. Tom Moore, of Moore's Rialto in Washington, D. C., is said to have enjoyed a sensational profit with "Hush" because of the elegance and richness of the Young production.

Comedy Series Is Offered

"New-Wed Comedies," Distributed by Dominant, Ready for Release

THE "New-Wed Comedies" is the name of a new series of screen farces which are now available for exhibition purposes and which will be exploited on the independent market by Dominant Pictures Corp. The stories, seething with the domestic troubles of a couple of newlyweds, of which the Mr. and Mrs. Drew comedies were a successful prototype, are light and frolicsome and are said to offer a pleasurable contrast to the burdensome and "sexy" feature. In this connection the series of New-Wed Comedies can be recommended to the exhibitor who is desirous of rounding out a well-balanced program, states Dominant.

Rosemary Theby, who played with Otis Skinner in the Robertson-Cole special production, "Kismet," is the featured star in the new series of New-Wed Comedies. She was specially engaged to essay the role of the "better half" from among a dozen other applicants because of her pulchritudinous charms and histrionic ability. Miss Theby, who will be remembered for her work during the old Reliance and Majestic days when she was a member of the D. W. Griffith forces, does the best work of her long career, it is said, in the present series of comedies.

In the series of New-Wed Comedies, Miss Theby is assisted by a cast of well-known screen favorites who furnish good foil for the comedienne's capabilities.

The comedies are said to reflect good taste on the part of the director, who has seen fit to embellish the stories with picturesque backgrounds. In this connection, no expense has been spared in the erection of settings in an attempt to inject the proper domestic "atmosphere" into the series.

A complete line of motion picture advertising accessories, including one, three and six-sheet posters, slides, lobby display, press sheet, electros, photographs and additional exploitation material have been prepared in connection with the series of "New-Wed" Comedies. The accessories are available at your local exchange.

THE first release of "Gasoline Alley" is scheduled to be screened about February 15th for the first time. Frank King, the cartoonist, has been in constant attendance at the studios suggesting drawing and supervising the work on the pictures and great effort has been made to make this five hundred foot release a knock out.

According to Russell-Greiver-Russell, "Gasoline Alley" will differ greatly from any other cartoon now on the screen, inasmuch as it will be a human document instead of a series of animated funny pictures. Each five hundred foot release contains as much story as usually is found in a much longer vehicle, it is said.

"Gasoline Alley" has received widespread comment in the newspapers now syndicating the cartoon.

Salient Expects First Feature to Be Ready for Showing Soon

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by Salient Films, Inc., that the filming of the interior scenes for the first production starring Muriel Ostriche has been completed, and that it is expected the exteriors will be made this week. Immediately on the completion of this, work will be started on the cutting and assembling and Salient hopes to have the picture completed and ready for trade showing within the next two weeks.

Reports from the studio indicate that this picture will prove an unusually attractive production from the independent standpoint, for the reason that an exceptionally able cast has been selected to portray the principal parts and the settings are unusually elaborate. The photography of Paul Allen is said to be remarkably fine. The picture was directed by J. Chas. Davis, 2nd, who was assisted by Jack W. Brown. The principal roles are in the hands of Muriel Ostriche, Walter Miller, Harold Forshay, Jack Hopkins, Helen Courtney and a number of other well-known artists.

Immediately upon completion of work on Salient's initial production, the filming of the second picture will be started. This story will be from the pen of a well-known novelist, and it has appeared in book form where it is said to have had a wide circulation. The title of the first picture has not definitely been decided upon, and the picture was produced under the working title of "The Shadow." It relates the story of a young girl who, after her marriage, finds that she has married the wrong man and when the right man enters her life, she finds herself shackled by the bonds of matrimony. How this love story is straightened out is said to make a most interesting story. It is an original story written specially for Miss Ostriche.

Priest Picture Interests

"The Supreme Passion," Just Announced, Attracts Wide Attention

"THE SUPREME PASSION," which is being released on the state rights plan by Robert W. Priest, president of The Film Market, Inc., has attracted wider attention than any picture Mr. Priest has ever handled, according to an announcement just issued. Great stacks of letters and telegrams have been received by Mr. Priest at his office in the Times Building.

The majority of the inquiries state that they were made on account of the magnetism of the title, "The Supreme Passion," but a large percentage was undoubtedly due to the names of the authors—Robert McLaughlin, author of "The House Without Children" and Charles T. Dazey, author of "In Old Kentucky."

It is said that the box-office value of the title, "The Supreme Passion" is enormous. Mr. Priest states that he was offered $5,000 for the title alone by a producer who wanted to use it for his own picture, but Priest refused to consider the offer because he realized the value of it and because it so aptly fits the theme it will herald. Seventy odd titles were considered before "The Supreme Passion" was finally hit upon.

"The Supreme Passion" is a title that it is said perfectly fits the theme and treatment of Messrs. McLaughlin and Dazey's big human interest sory.

Kinograms Cover Dog Show in New York

For what is said to be the first time in screen history, Kinograms established a complete photographic studio at Madison Square Garden, New York, during the holding of the annual dog show this week, for the purpose of taking pictures of the prize winners and their owners. In the past it has been found that the use of flashlights alarmed the canine exhibits and therefore this method was not permitted, but with its regular studio lights Kinograms was able to get unusual results. Much publicity was gained by according staff photographers of the New York dailies use of the studio.

We have just received from the Coast the newest Hallroom Boys Comedy called "HIGH AND DRY." It has been reviewed by many of the leading exhibitors in New York, and been pronounced by them the greatest two-reel comedy they have ever seen. We made Independent history with "A DOG-GONE MIX-UP" when it played a record-breaking week at the Strand Theatre, New York. Three of the largest theatres in Boston, the Boston Theatre, Loew's Orpheum, and the Star; the Olympic in Pittsburgh; the Victory in Providence, and many other large theatres gave this Hallroom Boys Comedy a week's run. Now watch and see what "HIGH AND DRY" will do. We guarantee that it will break all records. Go after it when you see it advertised. If you're not booking Hallroom Boys Comedies, you're missing a good thing.

HALLROOM BOYS PHOTOPLAYS

Poe's Poem Is Picturized

"Annabel Lee" to Be Released by Joan, is a Wholesome Love Story

MUCH interest centers this week about the announcement of the release by the Joan Film Sales Co. to the state-right market of Joe Chapple's five-reel production, "Annabel Lee." This is a screen version of Edgar Allan Poe's work, fictionized by Olive Briggs and then adapted to film form by Arthur Briliant, William J. Scully, Joe Mitchell Chapple and Paul Sarazan.

The filming of "Annabel Lee" is said to be the second experiment in the adaptation of a poem to motion pictures. The first attempt, which created a sensation in filmdom some months ago, proved a pronounced victory. This was the screen version of Will Carleton's poem, "Over the Hill."

The fact that "Annabel Lee" is a poem of sentiment that is familiar to every American household, already assures the picture of country-wide popularity, states Joan. Few authors to-day carry as much prestige or following as Edgar Allan Poe, whose poems are still fresh in the hearts of the public, and none of his poems are as familiar and as beloved as the simple love-story of a fishing hamlet told in "Annabel Lee."

It is well known that "Annabel Lee" is a story of a wholesome affection between a wealthy girl of aristocratic American pedigree and a poor fisher-boy. There is no sex suggestiveness or sordid passion in it. When the Joan Film Sales Co. acquired the world rights to "Annabel Lee" it pointed out that "Annabel Lee" struck a new note in picture production—a departure from the common run of "smut" and vulgarity that is now the bane of the industry. The opinions expressed on the subject demonstrate that Joan has taken the right stand in sponsoring a clean, wholesome, unadulterated picture-poem. That Joan, in releasing "Annabel Lee" claims that it is striking a blow for decent pictures, was the consensus of opinion.

The star of "Annabel Lee" is Lorraine Harding in the title role. Jack O'Brien is the male lead, and the director is William J. Scully. The locale is the New England coast, where the quaint fishing hamlets of a century ago are reproduced with mellow charm. The landscapes introduced in "Annabel Lee" are said to be among the best bits of filming ever obtained on the screen.

C. B. Price Picture to Be Roadshowed

"Your Daughter—And Mine," the Pricefilms Productions which was adapted from the famous Stanley Houghton stage play "Hindle Wakes," and which was endorsed by the Drama League of America when it was presented on the stage by William A. Brady, will be offered in its picture form as a road show by the state right buyers.

Mr. Price feels that to offer it as a program feature would be to realize only on a small percentage of its earning power.

First Texas Guinan Ready

"I Am the Woman" to Be Released by Victor Kremer on March 1st

VICTOR KREMER announces that the first of the Texas Guinan series of eight five-reel western dramas will be released on March 1, having been completed during the past week.

This picture, "I Am the Woman," from the pen of Tex O'Reilly, will include in the support of Miss Guinan, Francis Ford, who also directed the production. From the point of view of an evening's entertainment it will satisfy the most exacting of that class who seek rough riding, skilled marksmanship and the usual attributes that are part and parcel of all the denizens of the Great Golden West, states Mr. Kremer. For those who ask more in the way of dramatic technique, action and suspense it will be found in this particular picture, for while Mr. O'Reilly has put plenty of red blood and local color in his work he has not exaggerated nor has he dwelt upon deeds of daring alone to build the wonderful story he tells in this first story of his.

Mr. Ford is aptly cast and most competently portrays the character of "Sloe Gin" Charlie, a man who finds himself and makes good under the influence of a woman. Miss Guinan as the heroine of the story does excellent work. Despite the accident she met with some weeks ago while in the saddle, Miss Guinan goes through the most daring of riding stunts and does not show either fear or trepidation.

Eastern atmosphere has been introduced wherever it could be logically interpolated so that there is not the sameness that so characterizes the usual Western story.

The second of the series, "The Flower of the Range," by Eugenie Kremer, is well under way and should be completed in ample time to be released on April 15. To follow this will be another story by Eugenie Kremer, "The Girl Sheriff."

The services of the manager of one of the largest and most successful theatres in New York are available. He has had extensive experience in all branches of the business—advertising, production and management. His references are excellent. He may be reached through me.

Art. Brilliant Scenarizes "Annabel Lee"

The continuity of the feature soon to be released by Joan Film Sales Co., "Annabel Lee," is the work of Arthur Brilliant, who proved equal to an emergency of turning out a carefully developed continuity in the required time. "Annabel Lee" is from a story based on the poem of the same name by Edgar Allan Poe. It is a romantic comedy drama and is said to contain a goodly amount of heart interest and well sustained interest.

Mr. Brilliant, in answer to a request of the producer, took up the work at a moment's notice and by careful effort, turned out the finished product on schedule time.

Urban Subjects Shown to Scientists

Some of Charles Urban's Kineto Reviews, of "The Living Book of Knowledge," were exhibited at a meeting of the Academy of Natural Sciences Tuesday evening at the Academy of Natural Sciences in Philadelphia. They furnished the illustrations for a lecture delivered by Arthur H. Fisher, entitled "An Animated Photographic Journey Through the Philadelphia Zoological Gardens."

These Kineto Reviews were photographed by Mr. Fisher and edited personally by Mr. Urban. They are fascinating animal studies of the famous Philadelphia Zoo, and are among the choicest reels in "The Living Book of Knowledge."

Second "Comedy-Thriller"

C. B. C. Announces "High and Dry" to Follow "A Dog-Gone Mix-Up"

A NEW Hallroom Boys Comedy, under the title "High and Dry," is announced for early release by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation. While this comedy is really the sixth on the release schedule for the new 1921 series of Hallroom Boys Comedies produced and released by this company, it is the second of the big "stunt" comedies on this series, and is said to be a follow-up to "A Dog-gone Mix-up." It was this latter comedy which earned for the Hallroom Boys series the coinage of a new characterization—that of "comedy-thriller," and which made State Right history by playing a record-breaking week at the New York Strand.

"High and Dry" has been pronounced by all those who have seen it in pre-release showing to be even funnier and more of a thriller than was "A Dog-gone Mix-up," states C. B. C. In this comedy, it is said, the lines laid out by "A Dog-gone Mix-up" have been carried even further, and the stunt and comedy combination is given free rein. Sid Smith, who tickled the risibilities at the same time he made the spectator gasp at his daring in the earlier release, is also featured in "High and Dry," and, as the title suggests, he is given ample opportunity to perform some of his amazing exploits, seemingly in the thin air.

"'A Dog-gone Mix-up' was something of an experiment," said Jack Cohn, who is responsible for these comedies. "It was our first step in an attempt to get away from the 'single-track' type of production. Things have been labeled for too long 'comedy,' 'tragedy,' 'thriller,' 'romance'—divided off patly into nice little cubby-holes and made to follow a single narrow track. This is especially true of comedies. In producing 'A Dog-gone Mix-up' our idea was to get away from this. A comedy can get its laughs from something more than mere slapstick, and if you give people two things they want in a single picture, you are going over doubly strong. People love to be thrilled—why not, then, let them be thrilled in a comedy as well as in anything else?"

Kineto's Animal Subjects

Ditmars, of N. Y. Zoo, Makes Short Reels for Urban's Movie Chats

AN announcement of importance in the field of short subjects is made this week by Charles Urban, president of the Kineto Company of America., in announcing the purchase of a considerable amount of negative material from Raymond L. Ditmars, curator of New York's Zoological Park and a famous producer on his own account of plant and animal films.

Mr. Ditmars has for a long time been a notable figure in the film world on account of his fascinating studies in motion pictures.

Mr. Urban in acquiring some of the Ditmars' pictures names two series of particular interest to motion picture exhibitors.

One is a lengthy series, entitled "Modern Truth from Old Fables." These are tales illustrating the fables that children have read for generations. The action is all with the animals that Mr. Ditmars undersands so well.

These fables will all be incorporated into the Charles Urban Movie Chats. Detailed information as to the particular numbers of the Movie Chats which have them, will be given at a later date.

Another noteworthy series Mr. Urban has secured from Mr. Ditmars is the Series of the Four Seasons: Spring, Summer, Autumn and Winter. Each season is depicted in plant and animal life in one reel. This series will be made part of the Kineto Reviews, "The Living Book of Knowledge."

An arrangement has been entered into between Mr. Urban and Mr. Ditmars whereby the Kineto Company of America, Inc., has first choice on all new subjects Mr. Ditmars makes.

Mr. Urban intends to personally supervise the editing of these pictures.

Specialty Photoplay New State Righters

M. Slutzker, president of Specialty Photoplay, Inc., has announced the entry of his company into the State right field. To date he has been confining his activities to conducting a New York and New Jersey exchange, but he will commence national operations at once.

Specialty Photoplay, Inc., has already purchased the world rights on several negatives. These are at present being cut and titled and made ready for marketing.

"I will aim to give the independent exchanges a series of good pictures," states Mr. Slutzker, "at figures low enough to guarantee them sure profits. I have the first picture in preparation now, and a full line of accessories are in the works. As soon as these are completed I will announce my first release."

Many Schools Eager to Show "Heidi"

Schools throughout the country are arranging for showings of "Heidi," the first dramatic story presented in colors, for their Easter-week celebrations, it is announced by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, through whom this picture is being distributed to the state right market. Since this picture, which, reviewers declare, stands as a distinct achievement in motion pictures, was presented at the Capitol theatre, New York, during Christmas week, it has attracted wide attention in that it is the first dramatic story to be presented in colors and marks the first real indication that black and white photography may, in time, be superseded by colors for dramatic subjects.

Aaron Gollos, president of Gollos Enterprises, Inc., which controls the right to "The Hidden Light," starring Dolores Cassinelli, for Indiana and Illinois, announces that this production will have its initial downtown showing in Chicago at Barbee's Loop theatre. The picture goes into the Monroe street house March 13th for an indefinite run, following which it is booked to play the Lubliner and Trinz theatre circuit, the Woodlawn theatre and other first run theatres.

45,000 See "Midchannel" in Shea's Hippodrome

Shea's Hippodrome, of Buffalo, was the scene of one of the most enthusiastic receptions ever accorded any of its film offerings last week. The occasion was the showing of "Midchannel," the fourth Clara Kimball Young production released by Equity. On the evening of the very last showing, hundreds of Young fans were turned away. Despite all efforts to hold the picture over for an additional week, Franklin, manager of Shea's, was obliged to yield to previous booking arrangements and close the run of "Midchannel."

A simultaneous showing at another theatre was necessary to accommodate the overflow. Shea's Cort theatre, another of Buffalo's foremost screen temples, housed "Midchannel" for half a week at the same time that it ran at the Hippodrome. It is estimated that approximately 45,000 people paid the Hippodrome's admission-prices, which are the highest of any motion-picture house in Buffalo, to see "Midchannel."

Urban Subjects in Four Broadway Theatres

Urban Popular Classics, published by the Kineto Company of America, Inc., are to be found in four theatres along Broadway this week. At the Capitol is a Kineto Review, "The American Fleet at Panama," illustrating the trip through the Canal when the Atlantic and Pacific fleets effected a juncture.

At the Strand is "Thrills," also a Kineto Review, playing there its second successive week on the program with "The Kid." The Charles Urban's Movie Chats are occupying a place on the Rivoli and Rialto Pictorials.

Olga Printzlau Adapting Knoblock Story

Olga Printzlau, talented scenarist and playwright, who has achieved marked success in her screen adaptations for William De Mille productions, is preparing the scenario for the Edward Knoblock story, "The Lost Romance," which will be a Paramount picture with a cast consisting of Jack Holt, Conrad Nagel, Lois Wilson, Fontaine La Rue, Maym Kelso, Robert Brower, Mickey Moore, etc.

National Exchanges' First

To Release "Welcome Children," a Drascena Production, Shortly

ARRANGEMENTS have just been made by Charles M. Conant, president of Drascena Productions, Inc., of Los Angeles, for the release of "Welcome Children," the first feature to be completed by that company, through National Exchanges, Inc. The picture which has just been received at the home offices of National Exchanges, Inc., 398 Fifth Avenue, is now being titled and cut.

"Welcome Children" is a five-reel comedy. It was directed by H. C. Matthews. A strong cast was assembled for the picture.

In confirming announcement from Los Angeles regarding the distribution of "Welcome Children," through his organization, Hunter Bennett, vice president and general manager of National Exchanges, Inc., spoke enthusiastically of the feature. It is his opinion that it will prove one of the outstanding box office attractions of the year, and he places it in the same class with "Mickey," as a matinee puller.

"In 'Welcome Children,'" said Mr. Bennett, "I am certain we have a rare find. It seems to me to have every quality to make it bring maximum box office results for the exhibitor.

"Welcome Children," continued Mr. Bennett, "is a most unusual human document. It has pathos and with it delirious comic relief. It brings tears to the eyes one moment and dries them the next with gales of laughter. Underlying the whole there is a story of absorbing interest and of universal appeal

"I'll challenge any man, woman or child to see 'Welcome Children' and not carry the memory of the picture for days after. Its story grips one from the very start and holds the interest tensely to the end.

"It has been my privilege to have been connected in the past with a number of pictures which had exceptional box office merit. None, however, exceeded the possibilities of 'Welcome Children.'

"We have laid out a most comprehensive exploitation campaign for 'Welcome Children.' We look to see it rival 'Mickey' and other features of similar character. We are certain that for entertainment value, 'Welcome Children' is going to prove a big winner."

Cast of Box Office Value

"Servant in the House," Federated Release, Has Many Notable Actors

"THE SERVANT IN THE HOUSE," the latest release of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, has a cast of rare box office value to the exhibitor, announces the distributors. Practically every player has a following that will mean business to any theatre.

Clara Horton, who plays a prominent role in this Charles Rann Kennedy story, has been well known for her work on the screen. One of her most recent successes was in the part of Youth in "Everywoman." Jean Hersholt, who creates the part of Manson in this picture, is a noted actor of Denmark, who has toured this country extensively in Ibsen plays. The past work of Claire Anderson, Jack Curtis, Edward Piel, now with D. W. Griffith; Harvey Clark, Zenaide Williams, John Gilbert and Anna Dodge, is well known to motion picture fans and exhibitors alike.

Hugh Ryan Conway, who has recently announced that Conway Productions are soon to be placed before the public, directed "The Servant in the House," and it is said to be better than any of his previous efforts, notable among which are his many excellent pictures for Triangle.

The story is not a preachment, but it carries a clear and forceful presentation of a theme that has always been of greatest interest throughout the civilized world. The production has been carefully made with a view to retaining all of the qualities of the original play that have made it one of the greatest road shows that America has ever known.

Bookings for extended runs that are now being received from all parts of the country would seem to indicate that the exhibitors agree with the distributors in their estimation of the feature.

Child Screen Stars in "Screen Snapshots"

In "Screen Snapshots," No. 19, it is shown that it is careful, intelligent, and, above all, sympathetic direction that brings out the best ability in children, and the spectators see Director Irwin Willat tenderly directing the work of some of filmdom's most famous youngsters. "One must be a child at heart to direct children intelligently," says Mr. Willat, and he declares that his own fountain of youth has been the real secret of his success with them.

In this same release is seen Harold Lloyd taking his leading lady, Mildred Davis, for a joy ride on the five-fifteen. "Screen Snapshots" is a C. B. C. release.

ROBERT W. PRIEST, president of The Film Market, Inc., has changed the title of the feature picture by Robert McLaughlin and Charles T. Dazey, originally named "The Grand Passion," to "The Supreme Passion."

He made this change for two reasons, he states. It was learned after the announcement was first made, two weeks ago, that about four or five years ago a program picture was published under the title "The Grand Passion." While recent court decisions would have upheld the use of this title by Mr. Priest, it is said, the story and locale of scenes being entirely different and original, this information led to reconsideration and adoption of the title "The Supreme Passion" as more accurately reflecting the motive of the plot.

The original title, "The Grand Passion," it was thought, would also be taken to indicate a distinctively sex production and might irritate the sensibilities of censors.

Hodkinson Dates Changed

Readjusts Release Dates on Some of Its Forthcoming Productions

DUE to certain changes in conditions the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has been compelled to readjust the release dates on several of their forthcoming productions. The new dates are announced herewith:

"Partners of the Tide," March 20th; "East Lyne," March 27th; "A Certain Rich Man," April 10th; "The Other Woman," April 24th; "Keeping Up With Lizzie," May 8th; "The Man of the Forest," May 22nd; "The Light in the Clearing," June 5th, and "A Huge Ballin Production," June 19th.

"Partners of the Tide" is the new Irvin V. Willat production made from Joseph C. Lincoln's famous sea story. As regards "East Lynne," it is expected to prove one of the greatest box office attractions the screen will see in 1921, and Hugo Ballin, who produced it, says that it represents his greatest achievement thus far. "It will assuredly create for itself a unique place in the annals of screendom," declare Hodkinson officials.

"A Certain Rich Man" is Benj. B. Hampton's screen version of William Allen White's far-famed novel to the picturization of which he has brought all of his screen technique, while "The Other Woman," a J. L. Frothingham production directed by Edward Sloman, is a screen adaptation of Norah Davis' famous novel.

"Keeping Up With Lizzie," the Rockett Film Corporation's second comedy-drama for Hodkinson release is being directed by Lloyd Ingraham and Enid Bennett heads a good cast. "The Man of the Forest" is another Benj. B. Hampton production made from Zane Grey's novel.

"The Light in the Clearing" is under process of construction on the West Coast. It is an Irving Bacheller novel, and T. Hayes Hunter,—the man who directed "Earthbound,"—is responsible for this picture.

Eddie Polo Back on Coast

Returns With His Company from Cuba; Historic Spots in Serial

EDDIE POLO, the Universal serial star, and his company, have arrived at Universal City from Cuba, where he has been filming episodes for his forthcoming serial, "The Seal of Satan," word comes from the Coast. The Polo company, headed by J. P. McGowan, veteran Universal serial director, has been in the West Indies for eight weeks.

The star's visit to Cuba and other parts of the Antilles was due primarily because the plot of his newest chaptered photodrama is laid mostly in that part of the world, but also because of often repeated requests by exhibitors and fans that Polo make public appearances in the Spanish - speaking countries of America. It is expected that Polo's trip to the West Indies will be supplemented later by a tour of South and Central America.

Scenes for "The Seal of Satan" were made in such historic spots as Morro Castle, San Juan Hill, Cabannes Castle and in Havana Harbor. Wherever the Universal serial company worked, it was surrounded by admiring natives, who regard Polo as a marvel of physique and daring. Polo is one of the screen idols of Latin America.

"The Seal of Satan" was written by Anthony W. Coldewey. The author accompanied the serial star to Cuba and contributed much to the direction of the intricate twists and turns of the plot.

Polo's leading women are Madge Lane and Inez McConnell. Among the members of the technical staff of the Polo company were David Brandman, as business manager of the expedition; Jay Marchant as assistant director; Charles Roberts, technical director, and Cecil Myers and Jean Perkins, cameramen.

Malcolm St. Clair Will Direct Keaton

That Malcolm St. Clair, well-known comedy director, had been signed by the Comique Film Company, producers of the Buster Keaton comedies, released through Metro, was the announcement made last week by Lou Anger, production manager of the firm.

St. Clair will alternate with Eddie Cline in sharing directorial honors with the frozen-faced laugh-maker. The trio will collaborate in the preparing of the stories.

12th Chapter of "Velvet Fingers" Set

Suspense continues to mark the dramatic sequences of Pathe's "Velvet Fingers," the serial starring George B. Seitz with Marguerite Courtot. The twelfth episode of the play presents as many exciting incidents as any one of its predecessors, which those who have followed the serial will consider high praise for "Into Ambush," which is the title of the episode to be released February 20th.

"U. P. Trail" Scores in Allender Houses

J. W. Allender, head of the J. W. Allender, Inc., wires the Hodkinson home-office to the effect that "The U. P. Trail," which is released by the Hodkinson organization, has scored a "Knockout" during its recent showing at the various theatres of the Allender circuit. In addition, Mr. Allender say that the circuit's new theatre, Colfax, Washington, played the picture at its opening performance and "in spite of inclement weather stood them in the streets."

Loew Theatres to Run Hallroom Comedies

The Loew interests have booked the Hallroom Boys comedies for their theatres in Atlanta, Knoxville, Nashville, Memphis, and Birmingham from Arthur C. Bromberg Attractions of Atlanta, Ga., who have the territorial rights on these comedies for Tennessee, Georgia, Florida and Alabama.

"These 1921 Percy Ferdie Comedies which are being offered the State rights' market by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation of New York have made a decided hit wherever they have been shown. Reviewers have proclaimed them the best comedies so far issued," stated Jack Cohn who is producing them.

Special Tinting Used in Lubin Western

"West of the Rio Grande," the five reel western feature starring Allene Ray and Harry McLaughlin, and announced by Bert Lubin as his second state rights release, will contain many beautiful tinted effects, according to Edward Roskam, film expert, who has been engaged by Lubin to prepare a special color continuity for the film.

"West of the Rio Grande" is said to be a fitting sequel picture to "Honeymoon Ranch." Allene Day's first starring vehicle. Harry McLaughlin, the dare-devil aviator whose sensational stunts in the first picture were favorably commented on by all critics, performs many new "tricks" in this picture, under direction of Robin H. Townley.

Many Exhibitors Like "Screen Snapshots"

C. B. Co. Film Sales has received many letters of praise from exhibitors who are booking "Screen Snapshots," the one-reel of intimate "shots" showing screen stars at work, at play, in their homes, etc.

Letters from state rights buyers and exhibitors all over the country have come pouring in commenting upon the reel. Manager Wolf of the Adelphi theatre, New York, says: "The only trouble with 'Screen Snapshots' is that it isn't released often enough. It has made such a hit with my audience that I wish it was being released once a week instead of once every two weeks."

Vidor Joins Ass'd Producers

To Do Four Special All-Star Pictures During 1921

KING VIDOR will make a series of special productions under a contract for distribution with the Associated Producers. By this arrangement, he joins forces with the organization comprising Thomas H. Ince, Marshall Neilan, Maurice Tourneur, George Loane Tucker, Allan Dwan, Mack Sennett, C. Gardner Sullivan and J. Parker Read, Jr.

King Vidor's status as a full-fledged producer is assured; he owns his own five-acre studio, "Vidor Village," and has an organization that is the result of three years of selection and elimination.

Vidor Village is equipped to handle two producing units concurrently and is ultra-modern in its equipment and facilities. The studio village is at the same time poetic and inspiring.

Vidor's first work in the silent drama was the writing and direction of comedies and satires; a little later he directed the Judge Willis Brown boy picture plays. Then came "The Turn in the Road," which established King Vidor's prestige as a capable director.

Following "The Turn in the Road," King Vidor wrote, directed and produced "Better Times," "The Other Half" and "Poor Relations," all clear-cut delineations of human characters, against backgrounds of open fields, fragrant flowers and humble homes.

As King Vidor was quietly proving his worth the First National Exhibitors offered him a releasing contract, which he accepting, making for them "The Family Honor," "The Jack-Knife Man," and recently "The Sky Pilot." The latter picture was acclaimed by representative film men, at a preview in Los Angeles, as having every element necessary for a huge box-office success.

King Vidor who will release through Associated Producers shortly

Mr. Vidor will make four special productions, with all-star casts, for Associated Producers distribution during 1921. The first of these stories will be known as "Love Never Dies," and will be somewhat of a spectacle as well as a photo-drama; it is an adaptation of Will N. Harben's startlingly realistic novel, "The Cottage of Delight." King Vidor has completed the writing of the scenario, and production will begin almost immediately. Carrol Owen, who titled "The Jack-Knife Man" and "The Sky Pilot," has been engaged to write the subtitles for "Love Never Dies."

In connection with the filming of "Love Never Dies," the King Vidor company will soon journey to New York for scenes in Washington Square, up Fifth avenue and Riverside Drive. However, Vidor Village and adjacent California "locations" will suffice for the rest of the story, wherein the locales are Tennessee and North Carolina.

"I believe the Associated Producers represent in the aggregate the highest artistry, intelligence and purpose of all, and constitute the most constructive force now functioning in the motion picture art-industry," says Mr. Vidor.

"I feel very inspired by the conditions under which I shall be enabled to operate and by the general policy of the Associated Producers. They are neither involved in exhibitor or distributor entanglements, and sell each picture on its individual merits. They are according me perfect freedom in the selection of vehicles and casts, and I am not to be limited in expenditures; in this latter respect, I will be enabled to secure casts that are all-star in the truest sense. This is all in accordance with the Associated Producer policy of allowing each man his own individual art expression."

What Is a "Perfect Picture"?

J. S. Woody of Realart Gives Ideas on Interesting Question

JOHN S. WOODY, General Manager of Realart, has some very definite ideas on what constitutes "the perfect picture," which are well worth more than cursory consideration.

"We have arrived at a time now," said Mr. Woody, "when the general public patronizes, views and approves a picture on its general merit. The era when the success of a production depended solely upon the personal popularity of some single member of the cast, is past.

"A careful scrutiny of present-day conditions shows that the organizations which are succeeding in a large way, are those which are directing their efforts toward one hundred per cent. productions and which recognize fully the importance of all factors of the art; the story, direction, cast personnel, and general production quality.

"Given the foundation of an excellent story; possessing those desirable traits which lend themselves readily to exploitation; adapted to the screen by experts in scenario construction and continuity; portrayed by casts of which every individual is an artist of real ability and proven popularity; directed by men who are thoroughly in sympathy with their work and past masters of screen expression; clothed in settings which, in every way, preserve the illusion of the story;—given all these components, plus high quality photography and laboratory work and you have what nearest approaches a perfect picture.

"In signing up such well known writers and playwrights as Elmer Harris, Avery Hopwood, and others, Realart has evidenced its recognition of the necessity for handling only the highest type of stories obtainable. The casts for every picture released by Realart have been most painstakingly selected and each part is portrayed by some artist especially selected because of his or her ability to render an exceptional characterization.

"Our directors are all of established reputation with the stamp of success indelibly inscribed on their productions, men with the rare talent for bringing to the screen the full artistic possibilities of every story they undertake. Without such directors, good stories and finished artists would avail us nothing. And, finally, we spare no legitimate expense in general production cost; not waste, understand, but legitimate, necessary expense.

"One of the angles which a great many producers seem to overlook is the vital importance of attractive business-getting titles. Of course, where these titles are simply repetitions of the names of famous books or plays, the producer assumes no credit because of their attraction value, but Realart has been particularly fortunate in most of its titles, for example, 'The Furnace,' 'Something Different,' 'Oh Lady, Lady,' 'Ducks and Drakes,' 'She Couldn't Help It,' etc.

"The big, broad gauged manager of today is very close to his patrons and is quick to sense the trend of popular opinion, no matter where it may lead, and it is due, in a large measure, to the good judgment of these exhibitors that the most successful organizations have adopted the policy of producing pictures which register close to 100 per cent. in every department.

"Realart has built its pictures with this in mind. We have selected our actresses to carry the roles for which they are best suited. The casts are chosen to help the star interpret the story. Direction settings and other essentials are all employed to the same end—the finished screen story. That, we believe, is what people demand.

"The Nut" Due March 13

Slight Injury to Fairbanks Will Not Affect Original Release Date

DESPITE the fact that Douglas Fairbanks was injured in the making of his next United Artists' production, "The Nut," there will be no change made in the release date, which Hiram Abrams, president of the corporation, announced for March 13. The picture is finished and the most glowing announcements of its ultimate success have been received by Mr. Abrams from friends in California who have seen the first prints. Mr. Abrams himself saw a portion of the picture when in California recently, and declared it to be a greater picture than "The Mark of Zorro."

Bennie Zeidman, of Hollywood, after having seen the picture run for the first time, wired Mr. Abrams, "Just saw Doug's new picture, 'The Nut,' with permanent titles. It is a knockout. I have always been very frank with you, so you can believe me when I say it will top all of Doug's successes, especially following the wonderful records being made by 'The Mark of Zorro.' You can tell the world you've got another."

A wire not as lengthy but with just as much enthusiasm was received by Mr. Abrams from John Fairbanks, brother of "Doug," in which he said, "Doug's new picture, 'The Nut,' completed. It's a bear. Rushing prints for you."

It was during the making of the final scenes of this picture that Mr. Fairbanks was injured. He was required to jump through a window in one of the scenes, landing on a man passing by on the sidewalk outside. In making this leap he caught his toe on the windowsill and fell to the cement sidewalk, breaking a bone in his left hand and severely wrenching his back. This mishap was reported to necessitate Doug's being in the hospital for at least five weeks, which was a grossly exaggerated fact. The facts are that a day after the accident he appeared on "the lot" and posed for still photographs with a number of prominent people who were visiting him at the time.

Titles Imposed on Scenes

Paramount Announces Innovation in "Sacred and Profane Love"

A STATEMENT from the Paramount headquarters announces that a real innovation in titles is to be presented in "Sacred and Profane Love," starring Elsie Ferguson and produced by William D. Taylor. According to word received from the Famous Players-Lasky home-office, narrative titles superimposed upon actual scenes have been evolved by Producer Taylor and Cinematographer James C. Van Trees as a means to "put over" title ideas more forcibly than has been possible by previous methods. The Paramount statement follows:

"Under the new system the people and set under discussion are seen soft-focussed in the background back of the title—thereby giving the mind two methods of absorbing the title idea.

"On seeing the new device for the first time, Edward Knoblock, noted dramatist said, 'It is the cleverest scheme for increasing the continuous flow of a screen story that I have ever seen.'

"Also the new system is saving of footage for often minor bits of action may be merged with a title—instead of showing both action and title separately as has been done before."

Praise for Beban Picture

"One Man in a Million" Is Now Scoring in Cities of Mid-West

George Beban, star of "One Man in a Million," released by Robertson-Cole, being congratulated by Mayor Smith of Louisville, Ky., for his stand for better pictures

NO less an authority than Col. Fred Levy, of Louisville, Ky., is author of the statement that "One Man in a Million," the George Beban production, which is now making its way out of the South into the Middle West is "a great attraction" and "unanimously voted by the entire South to the highest favor."

In Louisville Mr. Beban, and his greatest screen play, which has been obtained by Robertson-Cole for general distribution, were seen at B. F. Keith's Strand theatre. Mr. Beban also filled in Louisville personal appearance engagements before prominent clubs and civic organizations similar to those which he made in Newark, N. J., where the picture opened at the New Branford theatre, in Atlanta, Ga., where it played the Howard theatre, and in other cities, including Nashville and Memphis, Tenn.

An even more direct appreciation of "One Man in a Million" came from George J. Maurer, manager of the Louisville theatre at which Mr. Beban, and his picture appeared. In his wire Mr. Maurer said: "George Beban opened here today in your special 'One Man in a Million' picture liked immensely and broke all attendance records. In fact this is the first time we ever had to stop selling tickets, crowds at night being so large police were called out to preserve order. I want to personally congratulate you on having such an exceptional attraction."

From Louisville "One Man in a Million" went to the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, where it remained a full week. Early reports from this house showed that the picture was going there as strongly as in other previous engagements. From Indianapolis the bookings call for engagements in Cleveland, Detroit, Milwaukee and Chicago. In the latter city the picture is to be seen for three weeks in different houses.

Phoenix Honors Duncan

Appears in Connection With Drive for Hoover Fund; $10,000 Realized

ACCORDING to a statement from the Vitagraph headquarters, "William Duncan Day" in Arizona went over as a great success. More than $10,000 was realized for the Hoover Fund, it is stated, and the Vitagraph report of the affair credits Duncan's presence in Phoenix, where he appeared in person at the picture theatres with a large measure of responsibility for the success of the drive.

A parade of citizens and boy scouts formed at the station to meet Duncan and his co-star, Edith Johnson, and then conducted them through the principal streets of the city. Then the stars appeared at special performances in the theatres where the receipts were given to charity. George Mauk, manager of the Columbia and Amuzu theatres, and a Vitagraph exhibitor, handled this part of the program for all houses. Col. J. F. Thompson, Robert E. Kirk and Tom Dunbar, formed the Governor's committee of entertainment.

Following the addresses the stars and their troupe were luncheon guests of the committee and then were taken to the State House many pictures were taken with Governor Campbell.

The visitors were then guests at the Governor's home until train time, where "Bill" Duncan, the star, and "Tom" Campbell, the Governor, swapped stories of the old days in Prescott, where the former spent a year making Western pictures in the early days of the industry, while the latter was county assessor.

Business men of Phoenix contributed $500 for the admissions of home "kids" who couldn't raise the price to see the star and in that way every dollar gained not only admitted four Phoenix children to the theatres but saved the life of a starving European child for a month.

Doug as Fashion Model in New Production

Douglas Fairbanks becomes a real fashion-plate model and displays more fashionable clothes in his next United Artists' production, "The Nut," than he has ever before allowed himself to do, in his entire film career.

Never at any time in this feature is he seen in a character make-up. "The Nut" will undoubtedly be known as a "dress-up" picture. All told, the star wears twelve different suits, each representing the acme of its particular style.

Charles Maigne Denies Report

The report that Charles Maigne, special director for Famous Players, at present directing Alice Brady in "The Tower," will shortly sever his connection with that organization, is entirely unfounded. This rumor appears in the February 11th issue of a trade paper (Variety).

Mr. Maigne just completed two specials for Famous Players: "The Frontier of the Stars," and "The Kentuckians." After completing his Alice Brady picture, he will direct Constance Binney in a new picture, according to present plans.

The report, therefore, that Charles plans to sever his present connections is unfounded, and Mr. Maigne emphatically denies this rumor.

Aywon Series Meets with Success

The fifteen two reels comprising the Success series of short subjects, now being released by Nathan Hirsch, president of the Aywon Film Corporation, have already met with decided approval by state rights buyers and exhibitors in all parts of the country, Reelcraft announces.

Mr. Hirsch states that he has been deluged with inquiries and requests for territory on this series. Territorial contracts for the distribution of the two-reelers are now being prepared.

The Success series of short subjects are fifteen picked subjects selected because of their dramatic value, the box-office following of the stars that appear in them, and the fact that they are particularly strong attractions.

Percy Heath on Realart Scenario Staff

Percy Heath, dramatic critic, author and scenarist, has joined Realart's West Coast scenario staff, according to a telegram received during the week at the home office of Realart Pictures Corporation. Mr. Heath has been signed by Elmer Harris, supervising director at the Hollywood studios to write scenarios for Wanda Hawley and Bebe Daniels.

E. H. Pearson Issues Statement

CLOSELY following the statement issued by Paul Brunet, in which the Pathe president spoke optimistically of the outlook for the industry, comes another report from the office of Elmer R. Pearson, director of exchanges for Pathe, in which Mr. Pearson gives the results of his observations made on a recent tour of investigation to all sections of the country. Mr. Pearson says:

"In starting on this tour of investigation I was actuated by no feeling of alarm. The reports from our various branches had been almost uniformly satisfactory. It seemed to me that a temporary lack of confidence was due rather to psychological than material causes —as though the cry of 'wolf!' in the fable had been revived in the motion picture industry with results similar to those described by Aesop, but with little likelihood of the classical denouement. My investigations have more than demonstrated the truth of this theory. I found the exhibitors less affected by the wave of pessimism than anybody else. They were going right on building fine, new modern picture theatres, and eagerly on the lookout for more of the higher class production.

"Their houses were well patronized. Very few exhibitors had observed any diminution of attendance traceable to disturbing labor conditions, or to any other cause.

"Playgoers in the larger cities are familiar with this classification of theatres, according to the general character of the attractions presented. The amusement-seeking public naturally classifies itself, the different classes each forming a community of intellect and taste sedulously cultivated and catered to by a given management, or by several, according to the size of the community. Thus the name and location of a certain theatre defines in a general way the nature of the attractions it offers, and while it continues to deserve it, enjoys a steady and loyal support.

"The existence of a similar classifying process in the case of picture houses is a highly favorable indication. It promises due attention to and appropriate rewards for every legitimate kind of picture production. So far as he can be such without disturbing program requirements each exhibitor becomes a specialist, and he can count on the loyalty of the community of taste of which his theatre becomes the habitual rendezvous. One specializes on art and literary feasts for the intellect, another on pastoral of beauty and simple charm; another on features of a more exciting nature; another on frank melodrama—the bread and meat of the screen as of the stage; still another on the thrilling adventures set forth in serials. The longer of the comedy production, too, lend their character to certain theatres, while the shorter ones, with the reviews, the news reels and the animated cartoons fill established program needs.

"In every city or town of any consequence there is, and will continue to be, a profitable audience for worthy examples of every legitimate species of picture production —not excepting those of the highest art and literary excellence. Those who cry 'wolf!' when there is no wolf and yet change the essential facts, they merely delay a general and complete return of fidence."

"Big Ones Coming," He Says

IN a recent letter received from W. W. Hodkinson, president of W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, who at the present moment is on the West Coast, Mr. Hodkinson said that four of the greatest pictures ever released by his company are now in process of construction at different studios in and about Los Angeles.

"I have seen these pictures in the making," writes Mr. Hodkinson, "and I wish to say that they will measure up to the highest standards."

Mr. Hodkinson referred specifically to "Keeping Up with Lizzie," which will be the second Rockett Film Corporation production made for Hodkinson release. "The Light in the Clearing," which T. Hayes Hunter is directing for the Dial Film Corporation. "A Certain Rich Man" and "The Man of the Forest," two Benj. B. Hampton productions, Hodkinson released all.

"The Light in the Clearing" is an Irving Bacheller story,—the first to reach the screen. Irving Bacheller is possibly the best known living American author and one whose works have been read wherever the printed word is circulated and whose followers are legion. And T. Hayes Hunter's fame was firmly established by the splendid work he did in directing "Earthbound," one of the real picture achievements of all times. According to Mr. Hodkinson's letter Mr. Hunter claims that in the "The Light in the Clearing" he will far surpass any of his previous efforts.

"Keeping Up With Lizzie" is another Irving Bacheller story, a comedy-drama which Lloyd Ingraham is directing. Enid Bennett, star of countless successes in the past is cast in the leading role and in her support are seen many of screendom's favorite players. Mr. Ingraham, who directed most of the Douglas McLean-Doris May comedies, has promised Mr. Hodkinson that this new one will be a picture that he will be proud to call his greatest work.

As regards "The Man of the Forest" and "A Certain Rich Man," they are Benj. B. Hampton productions, the first made from Zane Grey's story and the second from William Allen White's novel. Those who are familiar with Mr. Hampton's technique, expect great things from these two pictures. Benj. B. Hampton's career as a producer of screen plays shows an unbroken succession of successful productions,—such productions as "Desert Gold," "Riders of the Dawn," "The U. P. Trail," and "The Spenders."

Mr. Hodkinson's letter was truly optimistic, and in it he emphasized the benefits that must inevitably come to the exhibitors who have signed and who will sign one hundred per cent contracts.

In the center, Pauline Frederick as she appears in "The Mistress of Shenstone," a Robertson-Cole release, and on either side two scenes from the production

An "Ideal Frederick Vehicle"

"THE MISTRESS OF SHENSTONE," starring Pauline Frederick, which will be released in the near future by Robertson-Cole as a super-special production, contains dramatic and artistic qualities which go to make it the most ideal Frederick vehicle ever given to the public, in the opinion of Robertson-Cole officials who have previewed the picture. This production is the second in the series which Miss Frederick is making for Robertson-Cole.

The popularity of the novel upon which the picture is based, the dramatic situations which are built up, the emotional work of Miss Frederick, the supporting cast, together with the settings which have been provided make the production "one which is destined to win for every exhibitor," declare Robertson-Cole officials.

"The Mistress of Shenstone" tells the story of an English noblewoman, and Director Henry King laid its action on some of the most impressive locations on the Pacific Coast. In the picture the castle of "Shenstone" is in reality the palatial home of a Western multi-millionaire. A wild part of the Pacific Coast was used to represent the cliffs of Cornwall, and here was built a replica of a famous Cornish inn which is intimately described by the author in the novel. One of the many big scenes in the picture shows the heroine and hero battling to climb the face of the cliff just ahead of the advancing sea, and a subsequent one shows them forced to remain all night in a niche in the cliff, awaiting the retreat of the tide.

Much time was devoted by the art director in going over prints showing the interiors of famous English baronial homes, to create the proper atmosphere for this production. A setting that will cause favorable comment, shows the interior of Shenstone. It is characteristic of the dignity of the English castle in the fine modelling of fireplace, doorways and windows, and it is richly decorated with rare tapestries, oil paintings and costly rugs.

Miss Frederick will prove decidedly interesting to the fashion-loving women, for she wears a bewildering array of beautiful gowns and wraps. She is supported by a cast which includes Roy Stewart, Emmett C. King, Arthur Clayton, John Willink, Helen Wright, Lydia Yeamans Titus, Rose Gore and Helen Muir.

The tremendous situation which is presented in "The Mistress of Shenstone" places Miss Frederick in the role of a woman who has fallen in love with the man who has been responsible by accident for the death of her husband. Lady Myra Ingleby, who was not seemingly loved by her husband, an army chemist specializing in explosives, as much as the lord's little white dog, is suddenly left a widow.

Lady Ingleby, striving to forget, meets a fine-looking young man and, through dramatic circumstances, falls in love with him. About to consent to marry him, she learns that he is the man who killed her husband, by accident. Forced from him, she is startled by a wire which says that her husband is not dead. This, in turn, brings on a still bigger emotional situation.

"The Mistress of Shenstone" is being carefully studied by Robertson-Cole advertising specialists, who are mapping out a campaign for the exterior. With this aid in putting the picture over, the popularity of Miss Frederick, and the merits of the production itself, American exhibitors are destined to enjoy a box office phenomenon," declares the Robertson-Cole statement.

R-C Officials Predict Hit for "Mistress of Shenstone"

Fox Plans Publicity Campaign

OFFICIALS of Fox Film Corporation, enthusiastic over their production of Mark Twain's "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," which he started off with a successful pre-release run at Miller's theatre, Los Angeles, and pleased with the tributes the picture elicited from the trade, at its recent New York special showing, are making plans for the most intensive exploitation campaign ever accorded one of their special productions, declares a statement from the William Fox headquarters.

Advices from Fox headquarters announce that the campaign on "A Connecticut Yankee" will be based on a number of salient points which in the opinion of Fox officials, ought to make it a one hundred per cent buy for the exhibitor.

Chief among the assets listed by Fox to put the picture over is the use of Mark Twain's name. Twain, by the wide popularity his writings have enjoyed for many years in every section of the country, is certainly a name to conjure with in sale talk. This point has been utilized by Fox to the extent that every piece of paper and exploitation literature that goes out on the production carries upon it the distinguished features of America's most famous man of letters.

The fact that in "A Connecticut Yankee," Twain's immortal satire, there is not the slightest suggestion of anything that might be construed as morally unclean, in these days of constant criticism of screen subjects and with the bugaboo of censorship still looming, has an angle of value to the exhibitor who wants to play safe that is realized and emphasized in every piece of copy and every selling argument sent out upon this picture.

Another selling punch is the fact that while the story is essentially of a broadly humorous and keenly satirical nature, some massive settings and gorgeous outdoor ensemble scenes were necessary to present the narrative with fidelity. The castles with their frowning turrets, moats, portcullises, drawbridges, together with the armies of knights in full armor or gayly caparisoned horses, the jousting field alive with fluttering banners and decorations, form a feast for the eye. This feature is made the basis of most of the pictorial scheme in the exploitation books and other sales literature.

A singular angle of the subject is the fact that the picture, in its many sidedness, is palpably a picture for every member of the human family. Stress is laid in the campaign literature on the point that the historic accuracy of the production elevates it to the dignity of a standard work of reference and information on the life and times of King Arthur—making it just the proper style of entertainment, it is claimed by William Fox, for college faculties, school principals and women's club; while the glorious pageantry and fantasy of its swiftly moving story is held to make it an ideal entertainment for children.

The delicious humor of the story also is capitalized to create interest for the exhibitor, and the lobby photos and exploitation literature all give unusual prominence to the most ludicrous incidents of the story that have made it such a masterpiece of humor. The scene where the Yankee, compelled, in order to save his life, to display magic powers before the assembled court, taking advantage of the fact that an eclipse of the sun is due, and commands the sun to be blotted out; the scene where the armored knights ride forth to battle on chugging motorcycles led by their chieftain in a Ford; and other laughable incidents of the story are reproduced in such profusion as to leave no doubt concerning the picture's laugh-producing qualities.

"'When We Were 21' is a picture for the young and for those who have retained the magic of youth. It has no waste of action, swings right into the story and comes to a speedy finish. As in the original play, which was such a success on Broadway and on the road, the suspense is well kept, and the romantic and dramatic interest make a strong appeal and end in a half happy, half sad climax."

—Exhibitors Trade Review.

"H. B. Warner injected plenty of action in the lighter scenes when it was needed and for contrast in the dramatic moments dominated every situation by strong, forceful action. The plot is convincing and carried in appeal. Production qualities excellent, with capable direction and splendid acting an added attraction."

On the back of the handsome gift the following inscription was engraved: "An appreciation to S. R. Kent from his Paramount co-workers. February 9, 1921."

On Wednesday evening, at the Hotel Commodore, President Adolph Zukor gave a dinner in honor of the convention visitors. Elek J. Beautiful Gowns Seen in Realart Picture

Gowns specially designed by a world-famed artist are one of the features of "The Outside Woman," Realart's latest picture with Wanda Hawley, which has just been completed at the Hollywood studios. The creator of the gowns is Penrhyn Stanlaws, an artist of international reputation, whose magazine covers are known to millions.

"These Stanlaws - designed gowns," said a Realart official recently, "are simply another step in carrying out Realart's aim to give the public the utmost in photoplays. We are not stopping with the star; we are giving also well-rounded casts, beautiful settings—and new gowns conceived by an artist of world-wide fame."

Big Houses Are Booking Hodkinson Service

As an evidence of the progress being registered by Hodkinson releases in winning their way to foremost screens of the country, the Hodkinson headquarters in New York submits the following list of theatres that are playing attractions on the Hodkinson schedule: Clemmer theatre, Seattle, Wash.; Tom Moore's Garden theatre, Washington, D. C.; The New theatre, Baltimore, Md.; Newman's College theatre, San Francisco, Cal.; Auditorium theatre, Spokane, Wash.; Regent theatre, Kansas City, Mo.; and Orpheum theatre, Flint, Mich.

New Producing Unit Formed

WITH the announcement made early this week that Charles Miller, famous as a director of far north pictures, had gone to Port Henry, N. Y., at the request of the Port Henry Chamber of Commerce, with the object of establishing a permanent producing unit in that section, comes the news also that a new and important group of Wall street interests, hitherto unknown in the industry, will shortly enter the motion picture field.

Just who these interests are or what the new company is to be named has not yet become public, but it is known that they have been quietly perfecting their plans for some months past, having been in correspondence with the Port Henry Chamber of Commerce during that period relative to producing there throughout the year. It is said that they are now practically ready to begin operations on a considerable scale and will commence work as soon as their studio facilities are ready.

With Mr. Miller at Port Henry are Mr. Paul Schoppell, whose officers are in the Singer Building, New York, which will be the temporary headquarters of the new company pending their location in the Fifth avenue section of the film industry and Mr. L. H. Graham, who represent the financial interests involved.

They will go into the question of the advantages and possibilities of Port Henry as an all-year production center and if their decision is favorable, they will at once take over a studio which has already been erected and which the Port Henry Chamber of Commerce states is available. Production on their first picture will then be begun almost immediately.

It is stated that a story by one of the best known authors of stories of the far north has been secured for Director Miller, whose "Flame of the Yukon" starring Dorothy Dalton was one of the most successful pictures of the past two years from a box office as well as an artistic standpoint, and that a star of adequate proportions has already been engaged to fill the principl role.

At the offices in the Singer Building, in the absence of Mr. Schoppell, no definite statement regarding the new company could be obtained, but it was said that an early announcement would be made giving its plans and personnel in detail.

Charles Miller, director of "far North" pictures, who is production chief of a new company which will establish an all year producting unit at Port Henry, N. Y., two others in New York and a fourth in Florida or on the West Coast

According to the information available the new concern's production activities will consist of at least four and perhaps six separate producing units, all of which will be under the general direction of Mr. Miller, who will be production chief of the organization.

Two of these units will produce in a studio near New York, title to which the company is now taking, another will be located at Port Henry, N. Y., according to present plans, while the others will be established in Florida or on the West Coast as may later be determined.

With these units it is planned to produce a minimum of twenty-six elaborate attractions annually, of a character and quality which will stand comparison with the best box-office pictures in the market and which, in artistic and dramatic value, will satisfy the most exacting critic.

Each unit will be directly in charge of a member of the motion Picture Directors Association, of which Mr. Miller was recently elected president, and neither pains nor expense will be spared to see to it that each picture, in story, cast, direction and photography is up to the high standard required.

It is said that eventually the plans of the new concern include establishing or acquiring a chain of exchanges to handle their product.

Educational Conducts Survey

Observes What Short Subjects Are Used with Features

FOR the purpose of determining whether certain of its comedy product is regarded by Exhibitors as more desirable for use on the same bill with particular types of pictures, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., has been conducing for several weeks a survey of two-reel fun films used with the first run of unusual features in principal cities.

The result, says Educational, shows the adaptability of the four brands of two-reel comedies to all sorts of programs, and the frequent use of the single reel Vanity and Gayety brands where the feature is considered too long to permit the use of the single reel Vaniety and impressive fact learned is that where the feature is a particularly tense one the better theatres have shown a practically uniform policy of making room for one of the two-reelers even if they have to eliminate all other film from the programs.

Here are some of the results, with "Midsummer Madness" at both the Strand, Seattle, and the Euclid, Cleveland, "High and Dry," a Mermaid was used but the Arcadia, Philadelphia, preferred "Torchy's Double Triumph."

Three theatres which played "The Frontier of the Stars," preferred a Christie Comedy to complete the bill. The Broadway Strand, Detroit, using "Dining Room Kitchen and Sink," The Rialto, Denver "A Homespun Hero" and the Riviera, Chicago, "Going Through the Rye." Two theatres also preferred a Christie with the first runs of "Idols of Clay," the Walnut in Cincinnati playing "Mr. Fatima" and the Grand and Regent in Pittsburgh "A Homespun Hero."

Torchy comedies showed their suitability to accompany any sort of a picture by appearing with such accompaniments as "The Spenders" at Barnoe's Loop, Chicago; "Isobel" at the Capitol, St. Paul; "The Furnace at the Palace, Philadelphia and "Peace Valley" at the Regent, Pittsburgh.

Other Christies include showings; "Movie Mad" with "Isobel" at the Adams, Detroit; "Wedding Blues" with "Godless Men" at the Liberty, Seattle; "Shuffle the Queens" with "Dangerous Business" at the Strand, Cincinnati and "Hey Rube" with "Outside the Law" at the Rialto, Washington.

BUSINESS is taking no slump at the offices of the Arrow organization while President Shallenberger is in California. Immediately upon Dr. Shallenberger's departure for the Coast with Morris R. Schlank, the producer, Vice-President W. Ray Johnston of the Arrow, wired to all the company's salesmen designating the month from February 7th to March 6th (the period of Doctor Shallenberger's stay in California) as "Shallenberger Month" and all the boys at once set forth their greatest energies to make "Shallenberger Month" the busiest ever.

Mr. Johnston was agreeably surprised himself with the result of the first week when tabulation showed a great number of sales.

Universal Westerns on Way

Six Producing Companies at Work on New Two-Reel Western Films

SIX producing units are making two-reel Western photodramas at Universal City to meet the demand for the snappy short reel features which the exhibitors have made upon the big studio, Universal announces in a recent statement on production activities.

Hoot Gibson is directing himself in "The Cactus Kid."

Out on the desert toward Newhall, Jacques Jaccard is encamped with a company headed by Leonard Clapham. The director is filming a series of two-reelers, the first of which will be called "Hit the Trail Harkness."

"Edward Kull, who divides his directorial ability between serials, and westerns, now is directing Eileen Sedgwick in "The Heart of Arizona."

Although he has been offered the directorship of five-reel units several times, Edward Laemmle likes the speed of the two-reel western photodrama and is now making another one at Universal City in which Jack Perrin will be featured. It is called "Lightnin' Ferguson," and is said to be unusually snappy in its action.

Al Russell, who like Kull usually concentrates his energies on dramatic serials, now is making two-reel westerns at Universal City, alternating with other directors in handling the western stars.

William Craft, one of the best known directors of successful photodramas, has been added to the directorial staff at Universal City and is, at present, directing Art Acord in two-reel western screen stories.

The first picture which Craft is doing at Universal is to be released as "Range Justice." He was assigned to it by William Lord Wright, chief of the short reel feature department.

Hodkinson Plan Progressing

"Meeting with Most Enthusiastic Reception," Reports Home Office

THE Hodkinson 100% plan is declared by the Hodkinson home-office to be meeting with a most enthusiastic reception at the hands of the theatre owners of the United States. The plan is one which is felt to be fundamentally sound for it is builded upon a foundation of sanity and reason, say Hodkinson officials. When an exhibitor signs a 100% Hodkinson Contract or, in other words, when he contracts for their entire release list for 12 months to come, he is still a free agent and in no wise is his independence affected, Hodkinson officials explain. For the Hodkinson 100% plan does but one thing, according to a statement from the Hodkinson headquarters. "It insures him a minimum of 24 splendid productions and leaves him at liberty to fill in the balance of his program from the open market. In other words the Hodkinson releases form the backbone of his booking, and to carry the simile further, he can build up the rest of the skeleton about them."

"What the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has accomplished in the three years it has been functioning is now a matter of record," continues the Hodkinson statement. "So great an achievement has it been and so splendid the promise that is held out for the future that exhibitors have rallied round W. W. Hodkinson's standards, secure in the knowledge that to him and to such men as he, if others there may be, they must look for their salvation."

Pioneer Acquires Feature

"The Forgotten Woman" Will Be Issued as "1921 Super-Feature"

THE Pioneer Film Corporation has announced its rights for the national distribution of "The Forgotten Woman." The Pioneer has acquired the rights to this production for the entire United States and Canada. "The Forgotten Woman" will be released as a 1921 super-feature and will receive special attention from all departments at Pioneer headquarters, it is announced.

The producers of "The Forgotten Woman" are the Sargent Productions of California. Starring in "The Forgotten Woman" is Pauline Stark.

The deal which brought "The Forgotten Woman" to Pioneer was closed with George H. Callahan, representing Sargent Productions. General Manager and Vice-President M. H. Hoffman, of Pioneer, who regards "The Forgotten Woman" as one of the best independent productions of the year, announced that preparations are already under way for the exploitation of this feature, and stated that no efforts will be spared to put the picture over in a manner which will bring exhibitors every possible success. A campaign in all the fan publications will be inaugurated under Mr. Hoffman's personal supervision, it is stated, and this will be linked up with unusual accessories for use by the exhibitor for the exteriors of his theatre.

"The Eternal Mother," starring Florence Reed, which will also be nationally released by Pioneer as a super-feature, is now in the hands of editors who are putting the finishing touches to this master-production. In this connection Mr. Hoffman said that Pioneer's program for 1921 stands second to none of that of any other company in the field.

"There is 'The Barbarian,' for instance," said Mr. Hoffman. "This production is now being released in New York and will shortly be released nationally. Not only is it meeting with the utmost approval on the part of exhibitors and the patrons of their houses, but it is being booked with greater success than any feature Pioneer has ever handled."

A Reincarnation Photoplay

Mystic Charm in New Marion Davies Picture, "Buried Treasure"

THE theory that dreams are but expressions of suppressed desires is holding popular interest at present, but has not eliminated another theory to the effect that dreams are the manifestations of a previous existence and give strength to the idea of reincarnation.

One of the first big photodramas with a story dealing with reincarnation is "Buried Treasure," the Cosmopolitan production for Paramount which opened an extended engagement at the Criterion theatre Sunday.

"Buried Treasure" was written by F. Britten Austen, an English writer who made the subject of reincarnation a study and has blended the scientific with the imaginative in a way to hold the interest grippingly. "Buried Treasure," it is said, has all the thrill of a pirate story, the delight of the mystical and the intellectuality of the scientific.

Marion Davies plays the central role in "Buried Treasure." Her sensitive and changeable type of beauty is said to make her the ideal player for the role of the banker's daughter who, responsive to the mystic influences, lives in spirit through many ages. George D. Baker, who directed "Heliotrope," both directed and adapted the story, developing the theme with great beauty on the screen, it is said.

The central theme of "Buried Treasure" opens at a ball masque at which Pauline, played by Miss Marion Davies, appears in the costume of a Spanish Senorita. Pauline, looking at her beauty in the mirror, senses a strange feeling that sometime in the distant past she had worn a similar Spanish dress and had lived in the days of the glorious Renaissance. It is a feeling which she cannot drive away, and in later scenes there is often the recurrent thought that it is merely a reflection of a like event in the long ago.

A large company, numbering over two hundred, has been brought together to interpret the unusual story of "Buried Treasure." Chief in support of Miss Davies are Norman Kerry, Anders Randolph, John Charles, Thomas Findlay, Edith Shayne and Earl Schenck.

Seastrom Picture for Pioneer in South

The rights for "A Man There Was" have been obtained by the Pioneer Film Corporation for Ohio and Kentucky in addition to the territory Pioneer already has for this picture which includes New York City, State and Northern New Jersey.

The success achieved by the picture in New York led to the negotiations on the part of Pioneer leading to the acquisition of the picture for the additional territory.

"A Man There was" is a product of the Radiosoul Company and stars Victor Seastrom. This picture has been acclaimed by critics as representing one of the finest productions of the year and in this connection it is interesting to note that the New York Times referred to "A Man There Was" as one of the noteworthy films of 1919.

DEFINITE announcement was made early this week in a wire from Douglas Fairbanks to Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists, that Edward Knoblock, celebrated English playwright, had been engaged to write the picture version of Alexander Dumas' famous story, "The Three Musketeers," which will be Fairbanks' next film vehicle.

"It is a pleasure," read 'Doug's' wire, "to tell you that Edward Knoblock has consented to write the script for Dumas' story. This should help materially to make 'The Three Musketeers' the greatest of all motion pictures."

Paramount Picture is Made into Opera

For the first time in history a grand opera has been adapted from a moving picture. The distinction belongs to the Paramount picture, "The Cheat," by Hector Turnbull, which was directed by Cecil DeMille, with Fannie Ward as the star, and was released in December, 1915.

The premiere of the opera, the music of which was composed by the late Camille Erlanger, was given at the famous Opera Comique in Paris on Friday evening, February 7, the work bearing the French title, "Forfaiture." The French libretto was written by Paul Millet and Andre Lourde, and the principal male role, that of a Japanese, is being sung by one of the most celebrated stars of the French operatic stage, Vanni Marcoux.

Earl Montgomery with Mermaid Forces

Earl Montgomery, who was with Joe Rock in Vitagraph Comedies for a long period, is the latest addition to the forces producing Mermaid Comedies. He was preceded to the studios only a few days by "Chuck" Reisner, who was formerly "gag" man for Chaplin and who more lately has been directing at Universal.

In addition to these players, Jimmie Adams has a new leading woman in the person of Dorothy Wood.

Both Adams and Lloyd Hamilton are nearing the completion of their newest comedies, which will be March and April releases through Educational.

Striking Snow Scenes for Metro Feature

The arid, treeless territory near Flagstaff, Ariz., converted into Arctic regions by the heavy blizzards of the last few days, are being used by Metro in scenes for "Uncharted Seas," a special production in which Alice Lake is appearing in the stellar role.

Flagstaff was added to the many remote regions that have been pictured in this powerful story by John Fleming Wilson with the arrival of the Metro company there a few days ago. A few days ago, a ship was sunk in the frozen northern regions of the Pacific for one of its big scenes.

R-C Coast Studios Completed

Hollywood Plant Now Houses All Producing Units

SIMULTANEOUS with the completion and occupation of the Robertson-Cole home office building, 723 Seventh avenue, New York City, comes word from Los Angeles of the completion of the Robertson-Cole studios, which were begun in the spring, and part of which was first used several months ago. The entire plant is now virtually complete and functioning throughout.

The Robertson-Cole studios, situated at the corner of Gower and Melrose streets, Hollywood, now house all the Robertson-Cole producing units, and complete the promise which was made less than a year ago when this young producing company announced to the trade that it was not only going to release a product of the highest standard, but was going to operate in its own home office and a studio of appropriate nature.

The studio proper covers a little more than sixteen acres of ground fronting on Melrose avenue and Gower street. Here eight huge stages, together with the many other structures required for complete picture productions have been pushed to completion by an army of workmen under the supervision of several Robertson-Cole building experts.

The studio has a frontage of about thirteen hundred feet on Gower street. The executive building is "U" shaped, built around a large portico, with a long flight of white stone steps leading up to it. A colonial stairway leads from the reception hall to the second floor of the building. Here are the executive offices, the exploitation department, a large modern theatre for the screening of pictures and a private dining room and kitchen used by the executive staff.

On the lower floor, a corridor on the left leads to the telephone exchange, the purchasing department and the general accounting departments, while corresponding on the right wing will be found the production department, the art and technical department, the employment bureau and the scenario and research departments.

These departments work directly in connection with the office on each of the stages where a studio representative is stationed to attend to the requirements of the director working on that stage

There are eight enclosed stages with a floor space ninety-five feet wide, one hundred and seventy-five feet long, with scenery dock along side and with an overhead clearance of twenty-eight feet which affords ample room for settings of the largest magnitude. Should necessity arise requiring a greater space for interior settings, the stages are so constructed that sliding doors along their sides may be opened, thus making it possible to carry the setting over two of these huge stages.

A network of bridges, equipped with electrical connections at given points permits overhead spot-lights to be placed at such angles as to secure any lighting effect that is required. Beneath the floor of the stage is a large concrete tank that can be used for water scenes or for such scenes that require a stairway leading down from the level of the action that is being photographed.

An excellent view of Robertson-Cole's studios in Hollywood, Cal. The "Kismet" sets can be discerned in the backgrounds.

A scene dock furnishes ample space for the storage of scenery and the properties required during the making of a production. Near the front of the stage is located the director's office and offices for his assistants, together with a dark room and repair shop for the cameraman. Each stage has its own cutting room and projection room located in a separate building between the stages.

There are no dressing rooms on the stages proper. But, following out the policy of keeping each company as an individual unit, a dressing room building stands directly in front of each of the stages. The upper floor of these dressing room buildings contains ample dressing rooms for the cast and the extra talent, while the lower floor has rooms for office purposes and the star's suite at one end.

Fine Cast for "Experience"

Marjorie Daw in Role of "Love"; Richard Barthelmess as "Youth"

MARJORIE DAW has been selected to play the role of "Love" in "Experience," George V. Hobart's spectacular play, which George Fitzmaurice will picturize for Paramount. Miss Day came from the coast, where she has been featured in several big productions recently especially to play this part opposite Richard Barthelmess, the featured member of the cast, who will be "Youth."

A strong cast for the picture has been assembled and in magnitude and colorful splendor "Experience" is expected to surpass Mr. Fitzmaurice's "On With the Dance," "The Right to Love," "Idols of Clay" and "Paying the Piper." John Milturn, well known on Broadway for his work in Belasco productions and as leading man for Grace George in "The Ruined Lady,' and who appeared in "On With the Dance," will play "Experience." Betty Carpenter will play "Hope" and Lilyn Tashman, whose Trixie Andrews in "The Gold Diggers" stands out in the Belasco play which has had a remarkable run on Broadway. will be "Pleasure." "Ambition" will be in the hands of E. J. Radcliffe, who recently appeared with Dorothy Dalton in "The Teaser," a Paramount picture. The other members of the cast will be announced later.

The exterior scenes for the picture, which will be taken first, will be filmed near Savannah, Ga. Mr. Fitzmaurice and his technical staff, including Arthur Miller, cameraman, and Waldemar Young, who wrote the continuity for the picture, preceded the members of the cast to Savannah. Richard Barthelmess, Marjorie Daw, Miss Carpenter, Mr. Milturn and Mr. Radcliffe left for the South Saturday, February 12.

After a week on location the company will return to New York and the remainder of the scenes will be taken in the new Paramount studio on Long Island.

Needy Hospital Appeals to Industry

Nat Dorfman has been appointed manager of the motion picture division of the committee which is endeavoring to raise $150,000 for the Beth-David Hospital, of 113th street and Lexington avenue, New York, to increase its housing facilities. This is a non-sectarian institution greatly in need of funds.

Mr. Dorfman intends to circularize the industry in an effort to raise a substantial amount.

MR. JOHN M. STAHL has secured William Desmond for one of the principal parts in his initial independent unit production, "Muffled Drums," which Louis B. Mayer will present through First National. Mr. Stahl engaged Barbara Castleton as his leading lady in "Muffled Drums," after witnessing "The Branding Iron." The engagement was made by long distance telephone from Los Angeles to New York, after Stahl had scoured the entire picture field on the coast in search for a girl who combined the proper type with personal magnetism and unusual ability.

An assurance of excellent photography in "Muffled Drums" is contained in the announcement that Stahl has secured George Webber to take charge of the camera work. Webber is a photographer of vast experience and goes to the Mayer Studio from Goldwyn.

Pathe Helps in Anti-Censorship Fight

In reference to the fight now being waged in Indianapolis and Minneapolis against proposed censorship measures, Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces that while it has not contributed financial support to the anti-censorship fight through the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, yet it has given direct financial aid to the local committees at Indianapolis and Minneapolis. The Pathe statement explains that no money has been contributed to the National Association's fund since its resignation from the national organization. But the statement from Pathe continues: "It has never refused to contribute towards the expenses to oppose any menace to the industry."

A scene from "Man vs. Woman," a Christie comedy to be released through Educational Exchanges

New Series for Educational

Will Release Group of Two-Reel Comic-Dramas Made by Dr. Pauline

EDUCATIONAL Film Exchanges, Inc., this week announced that it has signed a contract with Dr. J. Robert Pauline, the noted hypnotist, for the distribution of a series of two-reel comedy dramas to be made by Dr. Pauline. The first of these pictures is to be delivered on June 15 and monthly thereafter.

While the new series of pictures are roughly classified as "comedy dramas" it is stated that they will be absolutely novel product and though the general plan is withheld until the first of the series is released, it is said that the hypnotic element will enter into them strongly, but that their chief aim will be to create laughs.

Dr. Pauline for a number of years has been one of the leading figures in the amusement field. He has appeared with his own road show and for several years played "big time" in vaudeville not only through the United States but in the principal cities in Europe. He still holds the record for the longest continuous appearance at Hammerstein's Victoria theatre, then the leading vaudeville theatre of the country.

His experience in motion pictures has been largely confined to his apearance in "The Mystery Mind," a fifteen episode serial and in this he is said to have established himself as an actor of unusual ability. During the time he was engaged in this work he studied the technique of the screen carefully and laid his plans to put a series of stories suggested by his experiences into pictures.

During the next few weeks he will complete the details of his organization, which will be built carefully to insure the best results. Ample time is provided for completing the first production so that he will be able to select just the people he desires. His contract with Educational provides that the latter shall approve the star and the leading players and also the stories. Several of these have been outlined in detail and Educational officials are quoted as enthusiastic over their novelty appeal.

Release of these pictures will not be undertaken until after the completion of the first year of Educational's schedule.

Metro Finishes Titling of "Without Limit"

Final work of cutting and titling the film version of "Without Limit," the George D. Baker production for S-L pictures of Calvin Johnston's story, "Temple Dusk," which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, has been completed at the New York studios of Metro in West Sixty-first street. It will be released by Metro the twenty-eighth of this month.

Upon completion of the picture Mr. Baker left to spend a brief vacation in the West Indies. Mr. Baker is combining business with pleasure by working upon the continuity for his next production, the title of which will be announced later. Filming of the picture will start immediately upon his return to New York.

Geo. Melford Company on Location

George Melford, with his company which is making Sir Gilbert Parker's "The Money Master," for Paramount, is high up in the Truckee Mountains of California filming exteriors. Sir Gilbert accompanied the others on the Northern trip. While the company is getting the Canadian scenes, a large Parisian street is being built on the Lasky lot at Hollywood where the work will be continued on their return.

MOST recent word received by Robertson-Cole from George Beban, who is making a personal tour westward with his production, "One Man In a Million," which is being distributed by Robertson-Cole, is to the effect that the attraction is meeting with unusual success in all towns where it is being shown. Mr. Beban and the picture are now in Cleveland. Mr. Beban wired Robertson-Cole that the business at Indianapolis, the previous stop, has been "phenomenal." In all the cities visited he is appearing before welfare and civic organizations making talks in favor of better pictures.

Marjorie Daw to Play in "Experience"

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announced yesterday that Marjorie Daw had been engaged to play the role of Love in "Experience," George V. Hobart's famous spectacle which is to be produced shortly as a Paramount picture by George Fitzmaurice. Miss Daw, who had her first motion picture experience at the age of 15 in the Lasky studio in Hollywood, is now on her way East to begin work on the picture immediately.

As has been announced Richard Barthelmess will play the role of Youth, and other well known players will be seen in the large cast which will enact the drama. Mr. Fitzmaurice is going ahead with arrangements for the production of the picture at the Eastern Paramount studio, and indications are that this picture will be one of the most elaborate ever made by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"Wonder Man" Popular at Army Post

United States army posts all over the country have been showing "The Wonder Man," Robertson-Cole special production starring Georges Carpentier, and some of the greatest enthusiasts over this picture are to be found among the soldiers, particularly in the southwest. "The Wonder Man" has been very popular and many bookings have followed communications between posts as to the suitability of this production for soldier entertainment, declares a statement from the Robertson-Cole headquarters.

Goodwin Finishes His First for Wm. Fox

Advices from the Fox West Coast studios state that "Oliver Twist, Jr.," a 1921 version of Dickens's celebrated story, in which Harold Goodwin will make his initial bow as a screen star, has been completed. Millard Webb had charge of the direction, and, according to information from the coast, has made of Goodwin's introductory vehicle a particularly fine piece of stagecraft.

A scene from "A Certain Rich Man," a Benjamin B. Hampton production to be released by Hodkinson

ON his transcontinental trip, Mr. W. W. Hodkinson has been interviewed a good deal in the daily press, especially in the sections where some years ago he had been the dominent figure in local circles, such cities as Denver, San Francisco, Seattle, etc. Mr. Hodkinson's views on the present conditions in the industry were expressed as follows:

"That the old order of things in the motion picture field is passing away is now evident even to the simplest intelligence and to the most reluctant lingerers. The old rule was one of friendship and politics. Friendship and politics have been responsible for pictures which should never have seen the light of the screen; friendship and politics have influenced the booking of pictures rather than merit; friendship and politics have determined the bestowal of advertising patronage. Politics and friendship must give way to brains and efficiency. We will fail ourselves if we do not measure up to this test."

Many Contracts Closed for "Wing Toy"

Contracts—the surest criterion of picture merit—are recording the greatest success of her career for Shirley Mason in the William Fox production "Wing Toy." They are coming into the Fox offices in large numbers, and in almost every cast exhibitors are asking for early playing dates, it is stated.

The story is from the pen of Pearl Doles Bell, who has already supplied Miss Mason with two of her greatest successes, namely "Her Elephant Man" and "Love's Harvest." Howard M. Mitchell directed the picture.

Christie Special to Be Shown at Opening

The new Apollo theatre on Hollywood Boulevard in Los Angeles, which will be about the last word in elegance among residential district picture houses, will open shortly with a pre-release of the latest Christie special comedy "Hey Rube," featuring Bobby Vernon, as one of the features of the opening bill.

Kipling Tale for James Young

To Direct "Without Benefit of Clergy" on Coast

JAMES YOUNG, director of "The Devil," the Associated Exhibitors' production starring George Arliss, will have the distinction of directing for Pathe the first Rudyard Kipling production, "Without Benefit of Clergy." Young was signed for this important task, by M. C. Levee, vice president of the Robert Brunton studios, just before the latter left for Los Angeles, accompanied by Randolph Lewis, Pathe representative, who assisted Mr. Kipling in the preparation of the scenario for "Without Benefit of Clergy."

Paul Brunet of Pathe, through whose efforts Mr. Kipling was won over to the screen, enthusiastic over the success of Mr. Young in his direction of "The Devil," readily approved the choice of Mr. Levee.

The production end of "Without Benefit of Clergy" is in the hands of Robert Brunton and his organization. The wonderful facilities offered by the Brunton plant, made very apparent to Pathe through the marked success of three of its serials and one feature produced there during the past year, led President Brunet to engage Mr. Brunton to produce the initial Kipling attraction. This contract was closed during Mr. Levee's visit to New York.

Randolph Lewis, who absorbed fully the idea of Mr. Kipling during his visits to the master story teller, will act in an advisory capacity in connection with the producing of "Without Benefit of Clergy."

Before James Young was selected to direct the Kipling picture, the entire field was scoured for the most capable man for this particularly difficult task. Mr. Young was chosen for various reasons. Paramount was the remarkable success attending his direction of "The Devil" which is now creating a sensation in motion picture theatres throughout the country.

Secondly, and a reason that also had a big bearing on his choice, Mr. Young is probably the only American director who ever produced a picture in India. In his earlier days in the screen world, Mr. Young toured the globe making pictures. He stayed longer in India, perhaps, than in any other country. Working in Calcutta, he obtained a knowledge of the land, the people and their customs that will be invaluable to him in the making of "Without Benefit of Clergy."

James Young is known to the motion picture industry, as one of the ablest exponents of the directorial art. The beginning of his career dates back virtually to the first big picture ever produced in this country. After a career of many months producing comedies, beginning with John Bunny and continuing with Sidney Drew, Mr. Young made his first outstanding picture, the three reel comedy, "Goodness Gracious" in which Clara Kimball Young gained fame. This production was virtually the first multiple reel motion picture made here.

He entered the dramatic field with the first big five reel feature, "My Official Wife," another starring vehicle for Clara Kimball Young. He followed this with "Hearts in Exile," also with Miss Young.

Subsequently he directed Vivian Martin in "Over Night" and "Little Miss Brown;" Mae Murray in "Sweet Kitty Bellairs;" "One Thousand Dollar Husband" with Blanche Sweet; "Oliver Twist" with an all star cast including Marie Doro, Hobart Bosworth, Tully Marshall and Mrs. Rupert Julian; the screen version of Mrs. Humphry Ward's, "Missing"; Sessue Hayakawa in "The White Man's Law" and "Temple of Dusk"; "On Trial," which was produced for George K. Spoor from Elmer Reisenstein's famous stage success. This play, it may be recalled, was selected from a list of about a hundred, as the initial release of First National.

Chas. Burr Issues A Statement

States Policy to Be Followed in Doing "Torchy" Series

"CLEAN, wholesome fun, originally presented, is the policy which has governed the production of all Torchy Comedies produced by us during the past twelve months. We have found this to be a wise policy in point of box office returns, and in this connection I am happy to announce to the trade in general and to exhibitors in particular that in the production of the new series of Torchy Comedies, twelve in number, which we are to produce during the coming year, we will carry out the same policy, adding to it the greater use of 'gags' and property 'effects' that we could not afford on the last series."

Thus does Mr. Charles C. Burr, president of Master Films, Inc., producers of the Torchy Comedies, in substance sum up his production plans covering the second year's release of the now established Torchy Comedies. Continuing, Mr. Burr, in a special statement to exhibitors, says:

"We have found that clean, wholesome comedies, based upon simple gags and fortified with a capable comedian and an ensemble of comedy support to put them over are highly popular with the exhibitor and public alike in this country. We shall therefore continue to make such comedies, and there shall be no deviation from the standard we have set in the earlier Torchy Comedies.

"To one unfamiliar with production details of a busy motion picture manufacturing plant, the making of a motion picture comedy appears as a very simple task. In reality, however, a comedy represents the most difficult production task that can be assigned to a director. For a good screen comedy, in addition to a good story, star and cast, is dependent upon what is commonly referred to in the screen vernacular as 'gags.' Clever titles and sub-titles serve to accentuate the 'gags' in a motion picture comedy, and it takes a clever comedian to 'sell' them as we say in the studio, but 'gags' are the difference between our comedies and the ones the public seldom sees, or wish they didn't have to see. Hines, star of the Torchy Comedies, is worth his weight in gold literally—as a 'gag' writer alone.

"A 'gag' is of more value to a comedy at times than the situations or any other element which enters into the making of screen farce. That director who is blessed with an ability to originate 'gags' or incidental business, is blessed indeed with a priceless gift. Such a director's services are constantly in demand. Most farces have failed as motion pictures because they were not 'gagged' properly.

"In the production of the Torchy Comedies we are fortunate in having as one of our most indispensable assets, the inexhaustible series of well known Sewell Ford stories, furnishing a clever thread of stories. The stories have been read by hundreds of thousands and published in book form each year. So popular was their appeal and so engaging was Torchy, the office boy hero, that seven different book editions have been published by Sewell Ford.

"While there is no denying the literary quality of the Sewell Ford stories, one is favorable impressed by the many comedy and farcical situations which are prevalent throughout the stories. In addition to the comedy element, the stories are fortified by a comedian of the first magniture in the person of Johnny Hines. With good story material, a comedian who is funny and a full month in which to make a two-reel comedy, we get as many 'gags' into the Torchy Comedies as in the production of any successful screen comedy on the market and perhaps more.

"We are going to make the new series of Torchy Comedies bigger and better than ever. By the term 'bigger and better' we mean that the comedies will be perceptibly enhanced by the appearance of well known screen favorites in support of Johnny Hines, and by the addition of two so-called directors, or properly, gagmen, whose work has made their names by-words in producing circles."

"The Devil" Gets Big Space

Presentation at Brooklyn Strand Announced by Big Advertisements

MANAGING DIRECTOR HYMAN presented George Arliss in Pathe's release, "The Devil," at the Mark Strand Brooklyn theatre, when the city was shivering under its first cold snap.

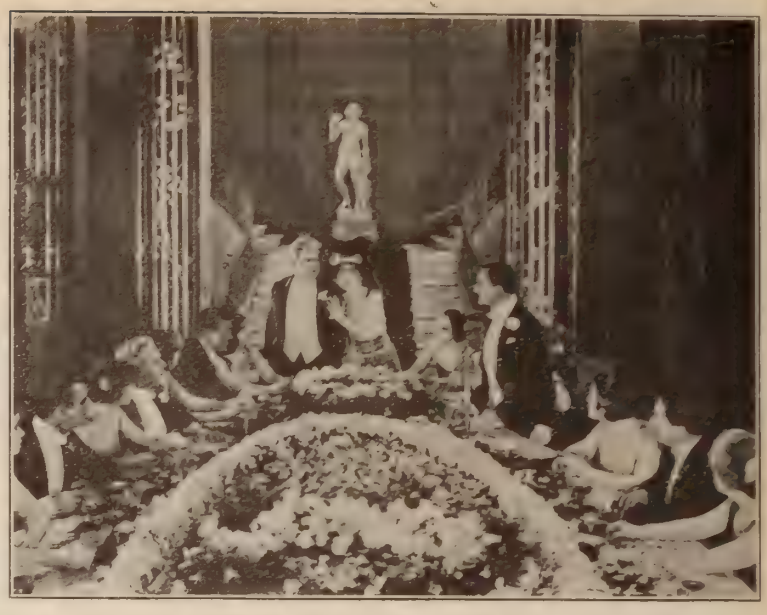
Feature stories on "The Devil" which appeared in all Brooklyn papers, and in New York papers with Brooklyn sections on the Sunday the picture opened at the Strand were keyed to the fact that Arliss who had formerly been prejudiced against the screen, made his debut in a Pathe production. In the Brooklyn section of the New York American, a precedent was temporarily cracked when the Strand's feature story on Arliss' screen debut and resultant triumph appeared on the first page.

Two weeks before the picture played, all the advertising carried a tail-note announcement. This was increased as the opening date was approached, and on the Sunday of the opening all the papers carried a ninety by two ad, hand drawn.

With the title in mind, Hyman staged a prologue to "The Devil," which he billed as "Prologue Inferno." This was a futuristic interior set with dancers, and a basso singer who rendered "Le Veau D'Orr" from Faust (Gounod).

The curtains were blue from the foots, and the parting of the curtions revealed Mephistopheles in the act of arousing three dancers to a point of frenzy. At the end of their dance, the three girls are seen to drop, in exhaustion, at foot of the devil, which is the latter's cue for the Faust song.

Throughout the number, the devil is revealed in a brilliant red light, coming through a glass pane from underfoot. As his song reaches the finale, the foots and border lights which are in blue and green, begin coming down. When only the devil is defined in red, and the three girls are to be seen only dimly, the opening title of the picture is shot on the gauze screen which is in front of the set. Thus the prologue is carried into the picture for a small amount of footage, before the red is turned down, and the regular screen is lowered.



A big set from Justine Johnson's "The Plaything of Broadway," to be released by Realart

Current Realart Releases

Wanda Hawley and Alice Brady Pictures Ready for Booking

TWO Star Franchise pictures are announced by Realart for immediate release. The first is "The Outside Woman," adapted from Phillip Bartholomae's stage farce, "All Night Long," and featuring Wanda Hawley. "Out of the Chorus," Alice Brady's latest picture, based on an original story by Harry Chandlee and William D. Laub, is the other.

As Dorothy Ralston in "The Outside Woman" Miss Hawley carries a role that affords many opportunities for strong comedy work. The gowns worn by her in this picture were specially designed by Penrhyn Stanlaws, the famous American artist whose magazine covers enjoy a wide popularity.

Opposite Miss Hawley is Clyde Fillmore, who plays the part of the young doctor-husband. Two notable characters in the cast are Misao Seki and Thena Jasper.

A drama of love, sacrifice and mystery, "Out of the Chorus" presents Alice Brady as Florence Maddis, a chorus girl who marries the son of an aristocratic New York family. His parents oppose her from the first and strive in every way to separate the young couple. While their schemes finally result in arousing the young husband's suspicions they also involve him in a murder trial—as the central figure. Yet Florence remains faithful to him through it all and proves that she is an aristocrat by instinct, as they are by birth.

In the supporting cast are names well known to picture patrons. Vernon Steel, leading man, is an experienced actor, having played with Ethel Barrymore in "Declasse" and "The Hole in the Wall." Charles Gerard, who has won a name for himself by his portrayal of society villains, has the role of heavy in this production. Other important members of the cast are Emily Fitzroy, Edith Stockton, Richard Carlyle, Constance Berry and Ben Probst.

Christie Units Speeding Up

Making Arrangements with Educational for Issue Every Two Weeks

ACCORDING to Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., the demand for the two-reel Christie Comedies has become so strong since their release through Educational that it has been necessary to speed up production and to arrange permanently for their release every two weeks. These arrangements are being completed during the visit of E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, to the Los Angeles studios.

Under the original contract there were to be two or three comedies each month and under the vagaries of the calendar this would on occasion leave three weeks between releases, but exhibitors have insisted on going faster than this schedule and having one every two weeks. Production at the Christie plant is well ahead and therefore it has been possible to arrange for the delivery of negative ahead of the original schedule.

At least four companies are being kept at work at the studios on these two-reel pictures, in addition to the single reel Vanity Comedies which are delivered every two weeks. The average of more than a month is required in making each two-reeler because of the additional effort being spent on them. The Christie force is now considerably larger than at any time since the formation of the company and permits a great variety in the featured players and in the leading members of the supporting casts.

February two-reel releases are "Man vs. Woman," featuring Neal Burns and Dorothy Devore, and "Scrappily Married" with Harry Gribbon and Helen Darling. In March there will be shown for the first time "The Reckless Sex" Dorothy Devore and Earl Rodney and "Red Hot Love" featuring Neal Burns and Vera Steadman.

Al Christie, aside from supervising all of the comedies is now personally directing. "Man vs. Woman" and "The Reckless Sex" were both made with him weilding the megaphone. He has also devoted his attention to several of the single reel Vanitys which Educational reports as being booked by scores of houses to alternate weekly with the two reelers.

Press Book for "Seven Years Bad Luck"

The New York headquarters of Robertson-Cole organization announces that a press book is now available for "Seven Years Bad Luck," starring Max Linder and to be released shortly by the Robertson-Cole Company. Program copy, a musical setting, display advertisements and three pages of exploitation are among the features of the book.

R.B.B. Amusement Co. Book Hodkinson

Charles Garfield, resident manager of the R. B. B. Amusement Company which operates the Orpheum theatre, Flint, Michigan, has signed with Ralph Peckham, Hodkinson representative in Detroit, for the first ten pictures—sight unseen—on the Hodkinson release list for 1921.

Pathe to Issue New Series

One-Reelers Will Present Adventures of Boy Trappers in Woods

"THE ADVENTURES OF BOB AND BILL SERIES," a group of one reel photoplays presenting real adventures of two boys skilled in woodcraft, which Pathe will inaugurate on March 6th with the release of "Trapping the Bob Cat," offers an interesting novelty in the production of screen entertainment. Perhaps no previous screen work has deviated so radically from the established customs of picture making.

"The events responsible for the pictures show a complete reversal of the regular process, which, equipped with apparatus for picture making, seeks out material suitable to its needs," declares Pathe in announcing the new series. "For in the cast of 'The Adventures of Bob and Bill' the apparatus, the camera, was discovered as a suitable medium for the recording of events endowed with romantic appeal by nature and not by any of the artifices of fiction. In short, the screen sought 'Bob and Bill.' They did not seek the screen.

"The discovery of these two twelve year old adventurers as developed, not merely potential, screen stars was made by Cyrus J. Williams, producer of the series. They are twins, and lovers of all kinds of sports, but display a keener interest in the chase than anything else life has thus far exhibited to them.

Harold Lloyd and pretty Mildred Davis in his new three reel comedy "Now or Never" to be released by Associated Exhibitors through Pathe Exchanges

ANNOUNCEMENT of March 13th as the release date of "Now or Never," Harold Lloyd's first three-reel picture under his contract with Associated Exhibitors, Inc., was made this week. The contract entered into between Hal Roach, the producer of the Lloyd pictures, Lloyd and Associated Exhibitors last Summer does not remove the Lloyd comedies from the Pathe releasing schedule, as the pictures are to be distributed by Pathe with whom Lloyd has been identified for six years.

Will Rogers Lends Aid to Hoover Campaign

Will Rogers took a prominent part in the Hoover film campaigns, conducted in Dallas and in Fort Worth, Texas. According to a statement from the Goldwyn headquarters, Mr. Rogers succeeded in raising the sum of $3,000 for the relief fund. Mr. Rogers' appearances in Fort Worth was featured on the front page of the local newspapers. In Dallas, Rogers was banqueted at the Adolphus Hotel at a midnight supper by the management of the Old Mill theatre and the newspaper men of the city. He was taken between theatre appearances to the Coliseum for an hour to witness the big prize fight stage there so that he could write up an account of it for the Dallas Dispatch.

Hart Picture Breaks Rivoli Records

Further evidence that William S. Hart is now at the very peak of his popularity, states Paramount, is contained in the announcement that "O'Malley of the Mounted," the latest Hart production, on Sunday last at the New York Rivoli, exceeded by $360 the receipts of "The Testing Block" on the first day of its showing at the same theatre. At that time "The Testing Block," also a Hart production, broke all Rivoli records for receipts by $41.70.

This premiere, Paramount believes, is the forerunner of the biggest country-wide success which Hart has yet scored. The New York newspaper critics praise the picture unreservedly.

"East Lynne" Ready for Screen

Hodkinson Preparing Big Campaign for the Production

ANNOUNCEMENT is made of the forthcoming release next month of Hugo Ballin's screen version of "East Lynne" through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. It is declared that the picture adaptation of this famous American drama will surpass in power and appeal the treatment of the well-known story as previously set forth both in book form and as a stage production. The cast is headed by Mabel Ballin and Edward Earle. Mr. Ballin is said to have put over the story of "East Lynne" in a convincing and genuine manner by the suggestion of the sets and the repressed dignity of the acting. A statement setting forth the plans of the Hodkinson organization to advertise this production follows:

"Recognizing the tremendous appeal of the Hugo Ballin production of 'East Lynne,' W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has decided to give this picture the benefit of the most complete and exhaustive exploitation campaign that has ever been offered by any distributing company to the exhibitor. With all its scope, however, this campaign will at all times be in harmony with the dignity of the story and the sincerity of the Ballin version. In his belief that the highest grade exhibitors will welcome such a clean cut yet thorough exploitation campaign, Mr. Hodkinson has seen to it that every press story, every poster, cut and lantern slide and every exploitation stunt shall fall in with the high calibre that is synonymous with the name of this corporation.

"In addition to a nationwide campaign of publicity and exploitation that will be handled by the home office of W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, the most complete set of exhibitors' aids in the history of the film business will be given to the theatre owner who books 'East Lynne.' The press book will consist of sixteen pages printed in two colors, conceived in a manner that will be entirely new in the history of this kind of material and whose main purpose will be to inform the exhibitor of the history of this epic story and to place him in the proper frame of mind to use to the fullest advantage the other side furnished him for his showing. Posters for the picture will include one twenty-four-sheet, one six-sheet, two three-sheets and two one-sheets, in addition to which there will be a window card and two lantern slides—all based on the same novel idea which will not be revealed until the publication of this material. Scene cuts and advertising cuts will be furnished to the exhibitor who books 'East Lynne' in a profusion and quality heretofore unknown; great thought and expenditure is being employed on these to make them absolutely distinctive in their combination of dignity and box office attractiveness.

"The above is a partial list of the exhibitors' aids, all of which will find the ground broken for them and the public already intimate with the forthcoming picture through the home office publicity and exploitation schemes. In every way, Hodkinson will cooperate with the exhibitor who books 'East Lynne' so that he may play it up above his program for the year—even in this day of fewer and better pictures—so that it will rightly merit the title 'Greatest of All: East Lynne.'"

Paramount's Current Releases

"Forbidden Fruit" and "Chickens" Issued February 13th

CECIL B. DEMILLE'S production, "Forbidden Fruit," which enjoys the distinction of being the first picture to hold the screens of the Times Square week-run picture houses for three successive weeks, and Douglas MacLean in the Thomas H. Ince production, "Chickens," are the Paramount features released on February 13.

Opening at the New York Rivoli, "Forbidden Fruit" broke all records for receipts for that house during the week. Then held over for a second week it eclipsed the record set by George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man," the only previous picture to play the Rivoli two weeks. It was then transferred to the Rialto where it played a third week virtually to capacity, in spite of the fact that the opposition furnished by William S. Hart in his new Paramount picture, "O'Malley of the Mounted," at the Rivoli, and Charlie Chaplin in "The Kid" at the Strand was probably the stiffest that any production has encountered on Broadway this season.

With a plot which is without doubt the most thrilling that Cecil B. DeMille has placed upon the screen in recent years, "Forbidden Fruit," although its story is separate and distinct from all his previous pictures, deals with intimate and critical problems of married life just as the other great DeMille box-office successes have dealt. The story was written by Jeanie MacPherson, whose fidelity to life and almost uncanny aptitude for bringing the deepest motives for action to the surface have given her screen compositions a distinct value which is recognized by discriminating patrons of the leading motion picture theatres. Alvin Wyckoff, assisted by Karl Struss, was in charge of the photography, while the settings were designed by Paul Iribe, the noted French interior decorator and designer. The Cinderella scenes, filmed with truly elaborate effects in a setting constructed of plate glass, were supervised by Theodore Kosloff.

The cast is headed by Agnes Ayres, Theodore Roberts, Kathlyn Williams and Forrest Stanley, also includes Clarence Burton, Theodore Kosloff, Shannon Day, Bertram Johns and Julia Faye.

"Chickens," the Thomas H. Ince production, which presents Douglas MacLean in the stellar role, is an adaptation of one of the last stories from the gifted pen of Herschel S. Hall, whose untimely death was recorded in the newspapers only last week. The original title of Mr. Hall's story was "Yanconna Yillies" and it was published in the Saturday Evening Post. Agnes Christine Johnston wrote the scenario and Jack Nelson directed.

The story deals with the humorous, and at times tragic, adventures of a wealthy city chap who takes to chicken farming as the result of his dead uncle's will, aided and abetted by love at first sight. One of the funniest features of the comedy is a nightmare scene, produced with novel effect by slow motion photography.

Gladys George is Mr. MacLean's leading woman and the supporting cast includes Claire McDowell, Charles Mailles, Edith Yorke, Raymond Cannon, Willis Marks and Al Filson. Bert Cann was the cameraman.

Chicago Beauty Is Featured in Advertising

Gertrude Olmstead, who was selected as the winner of the beauty competition last summer by the Chicago Elks and who was later engaged by Universal to appear with "Hoot" Gibson in two-reel Westerns, was featured in the advertising conducted by the Casino theatre, Chicago, in connection with the showing of "Tipped Off," the first two-reeler in which Miss Olmstead was cast. Mrs. Cohen, the Casino's manager, laid special stress in her advertising upon the Chicago beauty's first appearance on the Casino screen. Mrs. Cohen's plan met with success, it is stated, as the Gibson-Olmstead picture played to capacity business.

"The Concert" for Capitol

Booked for Week of February 20; "Guile of Women" for Next Week

GOLDWYN'S picturization of Herman Bahr's comedy, "The Concert," in which Leo Ditrichstein won his greatest success on the speaking stage, under the direction of David Belasco, is the attraction booked for the Capitol theatre for the week beginning Sunday, February 20, to be succeeded the following week by Will Rogers in his latest release, "Guile of Women."

"The Concert" is ranked by its producers as the best high-class comedy which the firm has yet made. It was directed by Victor Schertzinger, a musician of reputation and attainment, who has put his knowledge of music to good account in directing this tale of a famous pianist and his amorous temperament. It is a type of comedy seldom attempted on the screen but has been done with such conspicuous success that it has proved beyond any doubt that high, subtle comedy can be acted on the screen as effectively as on the speaking stage.

The cast for "The Concert" includes Lewis S. Stone, Raymond Hatton, Mabel Julienne Scott, and Myrtle Stedman in the four leading roles.

In Will Rogers' latest release. "Guile of Women," from a story by Peter Clark MacFarlane, short story and magazine writer, directed by Clarence G. Badger, the former cowboy has almost a straight dramatic role, but with flashes of the old Rogers humor showing through whenever there is a chance. Rogers reveals in this production a ripened mastery of the art of screen acting than influential persons in the screen world who have seen the picture screened declare place him among the very best motion picture actors of the day. In his support are Nick Cogley, Bert Sprott, Lionel Belmore, Charles A. Smily, Mary Warren and Doris Pawn.

Reports Business as Brisk

Executive of Musical Instrument House Reports Music on Increase

DAN BARTON, who has just returned to Chicago headquarters of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, after an extended trip through the Central West, is optimistic over the way exhibitors' business is holding up through the territory and declares that the confidence of motion picture theatre owners in the future is proved by the number of contracts for Bartolas and Barton Organs consummated within the past thirty days, as well as a number of future prospects lined up.

Mr. Barton also is enthusiastic over the fact that exhibitors are coming to realize more and more the importance of music in their houses. He notes a general tendency to fall in line with the policy pursued in the most successful houses in the country in giving adequate musical atmosphere to pictures.

To prove that exhibitors are firmly convinced that the future holds prosperity for them and also see the need of furnishing their patrons with better music, Mr. Barton gave out the following list of organ and Bartola contracts consummated by his organization during the past thirty days: Johnson & Johnson, Lincoln Theatre, Sterling, Illinois; John F. Niebes, Dawn Theatre, Detroit, Michigan; F. O. Haugen, Palace Theatre, Brookings S. D.; Harmes & Grosebeck, Vinton Theatre, Omaha, Nebraska; E. J. Universal Releases "Colorado"

Frank Mayo Seen in Augustus Thomas' Melodrama

"COLORADO," a five-reel screen version of the famous stage melodrama by Augustus Thomas, has just been released by Universal. It is used as a starring vehicle for Frank Mayo, one of Universal's leading stars.

"Colorado" was one of the famous "State" plays so popular a generation ago. Among this series of plays were "Arizona," "In Missouri," "Alabama" and several others. It is interesting in this connection that one of the most popular of the "State" plays was "Montana," written and produced by Harry Carey, now a Universal star.

Reaves Eason, director of many Universal out-of-doors photoplays, was in charge of the screening of the Thomas play. Commenting upon the difference between the original play and the Frank Mayo picture, Eason gives it as his opinion that the picture should be even more popular than the stage version.

"The play is essentially an open-air, mountain country drama," said Eason in a recent statement. "It calls for settings of vastness and grandeur. Even with the best possible stage mechanics and scenery, any attempt to reproduce on the stage the majesty of the Colorado Mountain views and the bigness of the West, is a make-shift, at best.

"In the screen production, we fared better. We actually filmed our action with the real mountains as a background and with the true Western scenery Augustus Thomas had in mind as the setting for his virile melodrama."

Playgoers of a decade ago will remember "Colorado" as the thrilling story of a young soldier who takes refuge in the Colorado mining country, thinking he is a fugitive of his discovery of gold and his struggle to protect his fiancee's family from the same scoundrel who caused him to go "over the hill." In the picture, the thrilling mine scenes, showing the flooded mine, the romantic rescues far below the earth and the suspense of the trapped persons, is shown with vivid realism—scenes not possible in the presentation of the original play.

Will Not Extend Metro Week

Prest. R. A. Roland Issues Answer to Inquirers

UNDER no circumstances, according to an authoritative announcement from the home offices of Metro Pictures Corporation this week, will the period of Metro Week, fixed for from February 27th to March 5th, be extended to ten days or a fortnight.

Such a definite statement is necessitated because of the multitude of telegrams and letters from exhibitors throughout the United States and Canada requesting that the special period be lengthened.

The contention of the managers and owners of motion picture theatres in these communications to Metro has been that, in selecting the most powerful of the pictures released by that company during the last eighteen months, the choice is most difficult; and that almost invariably there is a minimum of three or four especially attractive screen offerings the exhibitors would like to show.

In such case, the showmen state, it would seem a waste to bring such pictures to the screen for only two or three days, when each is capable of crowding theatres for a week at least. They argue that if the runs of each of these attractions were increased say to four or five days and the special booking period made proportionally more extensive, it would be the better plan.

Answering these suggestions, Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation said:

"The matter of the extent of time to be given over to showing Metro pictures exclusively in theatres was gone into thoroughly before announcement of Metro Week. And while it is entirely likely that the period could be lengthened to be a Metro Ten Days or a Metro Fortnight, the company deems it inadvisable.

"Such a longer time would be aside from the aim of Metro Week, which primarily is a satisfaction by Metro of the spontaneous and unsolicited desire on the part of exhibitors to have such an institution in their booking schedules. The theatre owners have asked for a week, and while many now seek to have this extended, we believe it best to leave it as first agreed."

In addition, Mr. Rowland pointed out, if the theatre managers find a choice of subjects difficult, there is always recourse to booking later those they must eliminate during the Week.

Arrangements for Metro Week are proceeding according to schedule. The national advertising campaign, which will reach every community in the United States and Canada, is ready to be launched at the proper moment. Every exchange, moreover, has got in shape to handle the extraordinary demands which will be made on it between February 27th, and March 5th, laying in special stocks of exhibitors aids—billboard posters, heralds, slides, cuts and mats—and putting every print in faultless condition.

While the conservative estimate that 7,000 exhibitors would during Metra Week be party to the exclusive showings of productions released by Metro seemed fairly accurate at the time of the first announcement and the first few days following it, the indications now point to the addition of at least a thousand more houses to the roll of theatres subscribing to this intensive booking of Metro offerings.

Daring Stunts Seen in International News

In International News, No. 12, several thrills are furnished by Captain Charles N. Fitzgerald, attached to the aero section of the New York Police Department, his aids, "Dixie" Davis and Al Billings. The stunts were performed on the top of a tall building being built at Columbus Circle, New York City.

Takes Final Serial Scenes

William Duncan Completes Scenes of Chapter-Film, "Fighting Fate"

FINAL scenes for William Duncan's chapter play, "Fighting Fate," were made last week on the Mojave Desert. The headquarters of Mr. Duncan and his co-star, Edith Johnson, as well as the Vitagraph troupe of about one hundred players, are at Victorville, Cal. Airplane service connects the party with location and town.

Many vacation plans are being discussed by William Duncan and his co-star, Miss Johnson, for it is a well known fact in the West Coast film colony and its environs that Duncan has worked harder and longer on his new chapter-play than on any other production in his film career. He has worked unceasingly to make the production an elaborate one, and at the same time make sure that there would be just as much "jazz pep" as he styles it, in the fourteenth and fifteenth chapters as in the first two, declares a statement from the Vitagraph headquarters.

Duncan's wide personal acquaintanceship with so many representative exhibitors in the West and Northwest will react most favorably, it is reported, to the benefit of his new chapter-play—not that either Duncan or the exhibitors have in any way presumed on personal friendships or acquaintanceships, but that the exhibitors have learned to know Duncan as one of the real dynamos of the picture business, with boundless energy and a positive genius for the type of picture which he is now producing, and, accordingly, have the deepest confidence in the man and his methods.

Advance bookings on "Fighting Fate" show that business on this chapter play will eclipse that of any previous Duncan production, reads the announcement from the Vitagraph headquarters.

Will Rogers Starts Work

In "The Bashful Romeo" by Elmer Rice; Other Goldwyn Units Busy

WILL ROGERS has begun work on his new Goldwyn starring vehicle at the Goldwyn studios here. It is an original screen story written by Elmer L. Rice, called "The Bashful Romeo." Continuity for it was written by Bernard McConville, the man who made the screen adaptation of Mark Twain's "Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court." Clarence G. Badger, recently back from New Orleans where he went with Will Rogers and the "Unwilling Hero" company to shoot the exteriors for that Rogers' play, is directing "The Bashful Romeo."

Rogers' home town, Claremore, Okla., where a three-day celebration was held in his honor, is gong to make an annual event of it, known as "old home week."

Director Wallace Worsley and "The Night Rose" company have returned from San Francisco where they have been making exterior scenes for the Leroy Scott original story. Mr. Scott returned with the company.

Tom Moore and his director, Victor Schertzinger, are working night and day on the William J. Hurlbut comedy, "Made in Heaven" in order to hasten the date of Mr. Moore's marriage to Renee Adoree, the former New York musical comedy actress who is appearing with him in his new screen comedy. Helene Chadwick, who plays opposite Moore in "Made in Heaven," has returned to the studios after a serious attack of pneumonia.

Reginald Barker is making good progress on "The Old Nest," from Rupert Hughes' novel. Mr. Hughes wrote the continuity himself and is spending much of his time while at the studios on the set.

Director E. Mason Hopper and "The Bridal Path" company will return this week from Santa Barbara where they have been on location.

Jessie De Jainette has been added to the cast of Charles Kenyon's original screen play, "The Alibi," a Frank Lloyd production. The leading roles are played by House Peters, Irene Rich, Sydney Ainsworth and De Witt Jennings.

Julian Josephson is collaborating with Anzia Yezierska in writing the story thread for "Hungry Hearts," in which the material from various of her short stories will be used.

Pathe Closes Important Contract

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC., has taken over the entire distribution of the features of the American Film Company. A new arrangement affecting this change in the distribution of the American features recently was concluded by Paul Brunet, of Pathe, and S. S. Hutchinson, President of the American Film Company, Inc., and became effective February 14.

Previous to the new agreement for the disposition of the American product that company maintained its own sales forces, in the Pathe Branches, which provided office and shipping facilities for the American sales organization. Now the American features are being handled entirely by the Pathe organization, in the same manner obtaining with regard to its own pictures and those of Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

Under the arrangement Pathe takes over the selling of all the American features, past, present and future. The first new production to be released on this basis will be "Sunset Jones," in which Charles Clary and Irene Rich are featured. The date of issue of this picture will be announced soon.

Among the stars who appear in the American pictures released by American and now taken over by Pathe are Marguerite Fischer, William Russell, Charlotte Walker, Seena Owen and Helen Jerome Eddy. Featured with Marguerite Fischer in some of the films are L. C. Shumway, recently seen in the Edgar Lewis production, "The Beggar in Purple," and Nigel Barrie.

Pioneer Reports Increase

35 Per Cent More Business in January Than in December, States Company

A BUSINESS increase of approximately 35 per cent during the month of January as against the month of December, is reported by the Pioneer Film Corporation in one of the most encouraging statements ever issued by this concern. The increase in business did not come about as a result of any particular drive or any special event, and according to officials of Pioneer, is indicative of the attitude of exhibitors in all sections of the country, to book only features and serials of recognized merit and of certain box office appeal.

The Nick Carter pictures, produced by Broadwell, and which are made up of fifteen two-reelers, are establishing a new record for pictures of this character, it is said.

"Finders, Keepers," starring Violet Mersereou, and one of the latest releases of the New York Exchange, is meeting with splendid success. It will be released nationally in the very near future and promises to attract audiences in all communities.

"The Barbarian," starring Monroe Salisbury, is the next important Pioneer release, and will be seen in these parts for the first time within the next few days. This picture is now being screened for exhibitors at Pioneer headquarters and is regitsering 100 per cent success. Supporting Mr. Salisbury is an unusually good cast headed by Jane Novak.

A Broadway showing of a new Pioneer release has been contracted for. This feature will be "His Brother's Keeper," an American-Cinema super-special with a remarkable cast, including Martha Mansfield, Rogers Lytton, Gladden James, Ann Drew, Albert Barrett and Creta Hartman. "His Brother's Keeper" was written by N. Brewster Morse and directed by Wilfred North. Mr. Morse is also the author of "The Crimson Cross," the feature which the Pioneer Film Corporation will release and which promises to cause a stir in film circles.

Vice President and General Manager M. H. Hoffman, in commenting on several other new releases of Pioneer and who will supervise the special exploitation work in connection with this release, told of the scheduled release of the "Mystery Mind," "the aristocrat of serials," produced by the Supreme Pictures, Inc. This serial has been written by Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Grey and stars J. Robert Pauline, the eminent hypnotist who is known to the theatregoing public in all parts of the world. Supporting Mr. Pauline is a cast of unusual excellence, including Violet MacMillan, Paul Panzer and Peggy Shanor. The "Mystery Mind" will be released nationally through all Pioneer Exchanges in the very near future.

Winter Sports Feature of Pathe News

Winter sports in the Northern states of the Union and at the famous Switzerland resort, St. Moritz, are shown in current Pathe News issues Nos 9 and 10. Views of Charles M. Schwab, Oklahoma City funeral services over "Gus Gloom who died of prosperity," ex-Governor Cox from a visit to the White House and spring styles for 1921 are some of the other features seen in these current issues.

Thrills and Laughs in Semon's Comedy

Thrills and laughs alternate in "The Hick," Larry Semon's newest Vitagraph special comedy and his first release of the year. "The famous Semon laughs abound, and between each one is some daring stunt which will cause spectators to gasp, only to have the tension relieved by the next mirth-provoking incident," declares a statement from Vitagraph.

Katharine Hilliker Film Doctor

For some time the screen world has felt the need of individuals who knew photoplay construction from A to Izzard, to pick out from the 50 to 100,000 feet of film used by the average director those 5,000 or 6,000 feet which should constitute the picture in its final state. Katharine Hilliker has come to be one of the recognized leaders among those few who have been tested in this need and who have delivered the goods in this difficult role. In fact, her first film venture of consequence was the re-editing and titling of Constance Talmadge's "The Lesson," which had been kept on the shelf at Select for over a year before she took it in hand. After the war, during which she served in an executive capacity in the Division of Films, Mrs. Hilliker edited the Outing Chester Scenics, and was shortly afterward called in to doctor up and title a number of other short subjects, especially along the comedy line. Among the recent pictures which she has prepared for release in their final shape are "What Women Love," starring Annette Kellermann, and "Passion," the great foreign production that has achieved such instant phenomenal success. She has just completed performing a similar service to Alice Brady's forthcoming Realart Production, "Out of the Chorus," which will thus have the benefit of her editing and her Hillikerisms in its titles when it appears on the screen.

The position of film doctor is one of heavy responsibility, but it fills a highly important role in the motion picture industry.

Dave Laughlin Manager of Pioneer Office

Dave Laughlin has been appointed manager of the Detroit office for the Pioneer Film Corporation.

Mr. Laughlin succeeds Ed Fountaine. He is well known and well liked in the Michigan territory and officials of Pioneer, at the home office, are confident of his success.

RUSSELL - GREIVER - RUSSELL announce the disposal of the territorial rights for Northern New York on the Fritzi Ridgeway series and their special picture, "Witch's Lure" to Arthur G. Whyte of the Empire State Film Corporation, Buffalo, New York. They also state that the territorial rights for Maryland, West Virginia and the District of Columbia have been closed this week on the Lester Cuneo series, Fritzi Ridgeway series, and "Witch's Lure," the Federated Film Exchange in that territory having taken over the rights. This leaves the eastern section of the country pretty well sold on these pictures. The entire southeastern territory and most of the east coast territory is now closed, as well as the states of Illinois and Indiana.

"Passion" Wins in Small Town

"PASSION," the first of the big five group of productions released by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., is beginning to answer the question raised by many motion picture critics as to whether it would go in the smaller cities and towns of the country. Opinions to the effect that its appeal was above the tastes of the theatregoers that provide the bulk of the patronage in the smaller communities have been proved to be baseless by the showings the picture has made in Cumberland, Md., and Harrisburg, Pa., the first two of the smaller places in which it has been shown, declares a statement from the First National headquarters.

Harry Crandall staged the showing in Cumberland at his new house which he opened but two months ago. His own report on the way "Passion" drew in the Maryland city, which has a population of 31,000, follows:

"First, I want to call your attention to the fact that our house there seats 1,600, and is entirely too large for the town, and that we have never attempted to run any show more than two days, because it is possible for us to play to all motion picture fans in this number of days.

"The usual price of admission is 20c. and 25c. matinee, and 25c. and 35c. at nights including tax. For 'Passion' we charged 55c. all over the house for matinees, and $1.10 for the lower floor and 55c. for the balcony at nights, and we played to what I consider extraordinary business, which netted a gross of $3,526.65 in the three days.

"You can see by the results that we pretty well played to the population of the town.

"I also want to call your attention to the fact that this house has only been open about two months, and on account of its overhead and other expenses has been making little or no profits, but this show exceeded my fondest expectations. We did quite considerable exploitation work, and in addition to the nine pieces of music usually run at the house we sent out eight more with a director from Washington, and the results, to my way of thinking, for a small town have been wonderful."

Wilmer and Vincent supervised the debut of the production in Harrisburg, Pa. For the purposes of making the showing impressive, it was booked into the Orpheum theatre, which plays as a usual thing "speakie" attractions. Heavy billing and an extensive newspaper campaign was used in introducing Pola Negri and "Passion" to the Harrisburg public. Business increased steadily on every day of the week's run at a scale of prices from 50c. to $1.00.

Results were such that it will be given another week's run in either the Victoria or the Colonial theatre, the two houses controlled by Wilmer and Vincent in Harrisburg devoted exclusively to photoplays.

Instead of a press luncheon, H. Whitman Bennett and First National dined the trade and newspapers at "the last of the freelunches," so called, in the saloon of Sid McGovern, which is merely part of a set in "Salvation Nell," now in the course of production

No Inefficiency, Says Lasky

Thorough Organization Is Answer to Charges, Says Vice President

"THOROUGH organization in production is the only answer to the stories being printed broadcast charging inefficiency in motion picture production."

This, in substance, was the comment this week of Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, in reply to numerous newspaper articles which made sweeping charges of inefficiency in the production of motion pictures.

"The great majority of these articles," said Mr. Lasky, "were written by persons having little or no knowledge of the motion picture industry. It is quite true, of course, that there has been waste and inefficiency in picture production in the past. Especially is this true of smaller companies which have not the means or the opportunities to effect thorough organizations in their studios. But so far as the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is concerned waste, inefficiency and slipshod methods have been brought to a minimum.

"I can think of no better example of economical and efficient studio management than the record of Charles Eyton, general manager of the Lasky and Realart studios in Hollywood. For more than two years Mr. Eyton has been western studio manager, while Frank E. Woods has been supervising director in charge of editorial activities in the studio. During that time Mr. Eyton has superintended a vast plant which has been the scene of the production of some of the biggest and most successful motion pictures in the history of the industry. And during that time his management has been marked by such a combination of diplomacy, justice and efficient methods that directors, players and the studio staff have been encouraged to give their very best efforts.

"More than any other business, the motion picture industry is one of personalities, and studio managers must employ justice, fair dealing and diplomacy quite as much as good business sense. By strict justice and tact in the handling of the numerous problems which come up each day, the studio manager brings the various personalities in the studio into a good working harmony, and from harmony comes efficiency. Outsiders, who know nothing of picture production, might not see the necessity of this, but if they could sit at the desk of Charles Eyton for a day, or an hour, they would see that good management is not wholly a matter of charts and diagrams, but contains a liberal mixture of humanity.

"I cite Mr. Eyton's work as an example of the necessity of organization in production. It is because of organization that directors of Paramount pictures are freed from the numerous cares and bothersome details which fall to the lot of directors in smaller and less closely-knit production systems. With organization, inefficiency is eliminated, and the elimination of waste means better pictures."

EXHIBITORS!

A FRIENDLY NOTICE!

BECAUSE

from time to time it has been stated to us by various people that we have never clearly explained just why a tax on music, where it is played for purposes of profit, is equitable and fair, and

BECAUSE

We have no desire to be other than fair in all dealings with all persons, we are going to buy space in the leading photoplay magazines and tell every exhibitor who reads them, the why and wherefore of this tax; why the Copyright Law vests certain rights in the creator of music; how the Supreme Court of the United States has construed this law; why it is neither fair nor reasonable that any person, exhibitor or otherwise, should expect or demand the right to use this material for his profit without reimbursing the creator of that material.

WE ASSUME

That every exhibitor in the United States reads either the Exhibitors Trade Review, M. P. News, M. P. World, Variety, Clipper or N. Y. Telegraph; if he doesn't read one or more then he won't know "what it's all about" anyway—if he does, we urge him to read these articles—one each week for five weeks—for they will contain our final message thru these mediums.

Live Notes from the Studios

CONDUCTED BY LILLIAN R. GALE

ABOUT PLAYERS

George Ade's suggestion about the "I-Knew-Him-When" club is being exemplified out at the Goldwyn studio, when the actors and directors get together and exchange reminiscences of other days.

There is good material in a number of them, too—as for instance, J. G. Hawks, who admits that six years ago he earned only $50 a week writing scenarios. Now he is managing editor of the Goldwyn studios and is probably the highest paid editorial executive in the motion picture industry.

Consider, also, Lon Chaney, who four years ago was only an "extra." Now he has the leading man's part in Leroy Scott's "The Night Rose" and his salary is just about the same as that received by the president of the United States.

As for Cullen Landis—a short three years ago he was doing odd jobs around the studio. Now, as one of the most popular "juveniles" on the screen, he draws a salary which makes his income tax what he would have considered a fortune a few years ago.

Vincent Coleman will be seen opposite Constance Binney in the John S. Robertson production (Realart), "The Magic Cup."

The company headed by William Russell, engaged in making "Bare Knuckles," a William Fox production, ran into "unexpected regions" on location and were caught in a blizzard in which they worked, despite the cold and high wind, in snow to their knees and ice caked in their hair. On the fourth day, when the blizzard had abated sufficiently the company, after many hardships, reached their home base, none the worse for their exciting experience. Among the props taken on the location, and brought back, without having been used, was a wind machine. The most enthusiastic and bravest of the outfit are said to be the cameramen, who shot some snow scenes which they are not at all afraid will be duplicated.

Virginia Valli was among the players who journeyed to Cleveland and Rochester to be one of those present at the opening of the Loew houses. Upon her return, she started into work immediately as leading woman for Bert Lytell, in the Metro's next starring vehicle known as "The Man Who." Miss Valli recently completed work in a Famous Players-John S. Robertson production, of "Sentimental Tommy," following an engagement with Jewel Carmen in "The Plunger" opposite George Walsh.

Maurine Powers, who is being starred in the latest Lawrence Weber production, "Why Girls Leave Home," now being made under the direction of William Nigh

E. K. Lincoln, upon his return from the Bahamas, where he spent several weeks with the Robert G. Vignola Company shooting exteriors, departed for Europe, accompanied by Mrs. Lincoln. The trip is said to be for pleasure combined with business. France, England and Scotland are the countries planned by the American actor, to be visited.

Mr. Lincoln, in addition to his histrionic ability, is a dog fancier, and owns the famous Greenacre Kennels at Fairfield, Connecticut. While in England, Mr. Lincoln will visit some of the dog shows as well as the foremost Chow Kennels with the view of purchasing a few thoroughbred animals. Upon his return, he plans to make a special production of his own.

Stuart Holmes, who is playing a prominent part in "The Bridal Path" now being screened at the Goldwyn studios, says whatever critics of the silent drama may say about it, there is one branch in which great improvement has been made. That is in the eating line.

He says that back in the infancy of the industry, he almost ruined his digestion eating cotton batting and lard and other things about as appetizing and nourishing, which the property man used to supply when the story called for ice cream and French pastries and other expensive viands.

But now—well, Mr. Holmes will tell the world he doesn't mind in the least when the script calls upon him to eat.

Rod La Rocque, favorably identified with film plays, soon to be seen in "Life" has the distinction of being the youngest young man who has ever played a lead in a Broadway production, but who has temporarily forsaken the silver sheet to appear in "Thy Name is Woman," with Mary Nash.

"Yes, the report of my engagement to Buster Keaton is absolutely true and I am very happy. Love to everyone at the studio—Natalie Talmadge." This telegram, received by Beulah Livingstone, publicity director for the Norma and Constance Talmadge Film Companies, from Palm Beach, Fla., verified the newspaper reports of Natalie Talmadge's engagement. Miss Natalie met Buster Keaton four years ago at the "Fatty" Arbuckle studio when she was acting as Mr. Arbuckle's executive secretary and assistant to the studio manager. Some time later Buster started "on his own" in a series of high-class comedies. Natalie came east, with her sister Constance when the latter formed her own company and joined Norma Talmadge at the New York studios.

Natalie and Buster have not seen each other for two years, but have been carrying on a correspondence of weekly telegrams. Buster Keaton will arrive in New York in April and the date will then be set for the marriage.

At the present time, the filming of the Vitagraph production, "What's Your Reputation Worth?" is going on at Saugerties, New York, in which Up-State town some of the exterior scenes are being made for this picture. In this production, it will be remembered, that Corinne Griffith is playing the stellar role, while Percy Marmont is again her leading man—he was seen opposite the same star in "The Climbers," an earlier Vitagraph picture. This is not the first time that Marmont has supported a Vitagraph star more than once, since it will be remembered that he set a unique record with Alice Joyce, appearing with her in four consecutive productions.

In fact, practically all of Marmont's screen career has consisted of alternating engagements between Famous Players and Vitagraph. With Famous he has been seen in productions starring Elsie Ferguson, Alice Brady, Billie Burke and Marguerite Clark, while at Vitagraph he has appeared with Miss Joyce and Miss Griffith in addition to being co-featured with Catherine Calvert in "Dead Men Tell No Tales." Some of his other recent pictures have included appearances with Norma Talmadge in "The Branded Woman" and with Hope Hampton in "The Better Way."

Betty Carpenter was once a Sunshine Comedy maid. Then she played the lead in "Cardigan." Now it comes out that she will appear as "Hope" in the screen version of "Experience," for which a cast is being assembled with great care.

In the latest Capitol Comedy, entitled "Indigo Sunday," produced by the National Film Corporation of America for release through Goldwyn, is Aaron Mitchell the little colored boy who received screen recognition in Marshall Neilan's picture, "Dinty."

He will be found playing the part of a bellhop in a country hotel—always on the alert, watching for the Sheriff and the "blue law" folks. Whenever he sees anyone who looks suspicious, he presses a button and up in the room where the boys are playing cards or otherwise amusing themselves contrary to law, a tame duck flies up on the table and loudly gives notice of the approaching intrusion.

Young George Bunny, son of the famous John Bunny, is the star of "Indigo Sunday."

ABOUT DIRECTORS

"The Mountain Woman," starring Pearl White, directed by Charles Giblyn and produced by William Fox, figured importantly in millinery circles at the recent spring fashion show of the Retail Millinery Association of America, held in the grand ball room of the Hotel Astor. Milliners from all over United States were present to select spring made models, with the usual competition for "exclusives." When it became known that Pearl White was to be the official auctioneer, the space around the auction block took on the appearance of a riot scene. With her usual ease Miss White fitted into the new role, and in addition to taking in more money than any auctioneer who had filled the post before, kept up a running fire of humorous comment that kept the big audience in constant laughter. It was estimated the buyers present represented approximately 30,000 millinery stores, large, small and in all sections of the United States. "The Tiger's Cub," the first picture in which Miss White appeared under the direction of Charles Giblyn, was followed by "The Thief" and "The Mountain Woman," current release. Mr. Giblyn is at present engaged in directing Miss White in the sixth Fox production, four of which have been under his direction.

Some time ago it was authentically announced that Roy Neill would direct an all-star cast, headed by Alice Joyce, in a Vitagraph production. It would seem, however, since then a showing of Mr. Neill's picture "The Teaser," started negotiations to the contrary and that as a result he will remain in the Famous Players organization and direct Thomas Meighan in a forthcoming special.

In his re-creation of "East Lynne" for the screen (Hodkinson release), Hugo Ballin has assembled a cast that aid greatly in contributing to the high mark of artistic merit attained by the picture. Foremost in the cast is Mabel Ballin in the role of the heroine, Isobel Vane, a distinct contrast to the Chinese characterization in "Pagan Love," her most recent role, but one for which she is exceptionally fitted by her physical charms and her talents.

The well-remembered hero, Archibald Carlyne, is played by Edward Earle, one of the foremost leading men of the screen, and the important role of the "heavy," Francis Levison, has been very capably created by Henry G. Sell. Others in the cast include Gladys Coburn, Barbara Hare, Gilbert Rooney and others, who, under the direction of Mr. Ballin, are expected to give unusually good performances.

William Nigh who is directing "Why Girls Leave Home," forthcoming Lawrence Weber Production, which was adapted for the screen by the director, will feature Maurice Powers, charming child actress, to share honors with Anna Q. Nellson. Mr. Nigh states that he considers Miss Maurice a "find." She is not yet seventeen years of age, hails from Terre Haute, Indiana, and has from childhood evidenced artistic ability. She will be remembered as the little bird girl in "Democracy," also directed by William Nigh, and in the child role of "The Eternal Mother," in which Florence Reed starred in the title role.

Herbert Brenon has returned to New York from Palm Beach where he started work by taking exteriors for "The Sign on the Door," starring Norma Talmadge and in which Lew Cody and Charles Richman play important roles. Others in the cast are Helen Weir, Paul MacAllister and Robert Agnew.

Consider for a moment the troubles of a director faced with the necessity of translating to the screen an ice cream party in an ultra fashionable home and then it will be understood why the entire company of the Karger-Lytell picture "The Man Who" have lost their taste for the staple dessert.

In this highly entertaining story of Lloyd Osborne which appeared in The Saturday Evening Post, the hero, a returned soldier, is given a reception with a number of his wounded buddies by some young society debutantes, who in the costume of the Red Cross canteen helpers serve the wounded veterans ice cream and cake.

To Mr. Bert Lytell, the star, and his leading lady, Lucy Cotton, as well as to the rest of the company that ice cream item appeared very attractive when Director Maxwell Karger announced that everyone would be supplied with a plate of real—not stage—ice cream and that they were expected to dig into it as though they liked it.

Just to be sure that there would be plenty, and also that the helpers would get a chance at some of it, Mr. Karger ordered ten gallons. Everyone was served and when they started to shoot the scene the entire company went to their ice cream with a relish and when the director finished the take and ordered a second one it was found that every plate was empty and a halt was called while dishes were refilled. Different scenes in the party were taken, the dishes emptied each time. It was not long before the ten-gallon can was empty.

Then, as will happen in pictures, it was found that the scenes had to be retaken and another ten gallon can was brought to the studio. There was not the same enthusiasm about putting this lot away but under the urge of the director it was accomplished and then the rest of the company was given a rest while Mr. Lytell and Miss Cotton went through their individual ice cream eating scene.

After forcing down the last spoonfuls in rehearsal before the camera started turning Mr. Lytell had no trouble in appearing bashful when Miss Cotton as the society debutante fed him the cream. Then came the final party scene with all the wounded again busy on the ice cream. Dishes were ordered refilled but as the remaining cream had melted a new quota had to be ordered so that it would appear in proper conical shape before the camera, and to the groans of the actors five gallons more were hustled in.

When the final shot of the party had been taken Director Karger found the several gallons of very good ice cream had to go begging as not even the stage carpenters were willing to take it away, while its proffer to the actors brought forth bitter remarks.

Others in the cast besides Mr. Lytell and Miss Cotton are Frank Currier, Fred Warren, Mary Louise Beacon, Tammy Young and Clarence Elmer.

"Good Musical Accompaniment Vital"

"Proper musical accompaniment is as necessary to the success of a motion picture as any element of exhibition within the control of the exhibitor," says Robert G. Vignola, director of specials for Cosmopolitan-Paramount, whose "The Passionate Pilgrim" has just been released.

"Great care must be exercised in the choosing of the musical theme," continued Mr. Vignola, "because much depends upon it. So much in fact that without music or with an improper accompaniment the average picture would lose a tremendous amount of effectiveness.

"Music has the effect of creating the proper mental receptivity. It serves to put the audience in a mood favorable to the picture. It heightens the emotions and makes it so much easier for the picture to impress itself upon the minds and hearts of the audience. It is the greatest conqueror of "cold" audiences that an exhibitor has. Give a picture proper musical accompaniment, that is music that best interprets the spirit of the story, and you obtain the greatest possible value from the picture. Give it poor and illogical accompaniment and you handicap it besides increasing the mental strain of your audiences.

Special Service Section on "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court"

MARK TWAIN never wrote with the screen in view, but the production of "A Connecticut Yarkee in King Arthur's Court" shows that he would have been one of the foremost screen writers if he were living today. Not that "A Connecticut Yankee" is made up entirely of Mark Twain, but the idea is the humorist's and it is the idea—the situation of a modern American transplanted to the sixth century—that makes this picture the attraction that it is going to be. From this situation flows satire, comedy of a clean and subtle sort, and plenty of action.

Retaining the original title of Mark Twain's book, while not marking a departure in picture-titling, is a daring thing to do in these days of "catch their eye" titles. And it should prove a wise move. It is impossible to number anywhere exactly the people who have read this book, but the great number who have will be attracted far more by the original title than they would by some paradoxical or startling "movie" title. Again it must be remembered that the majority of lovers of Mark Twain and his works are those men and women who read his books when they were first published. They are not all regular picture goers. And these people, since the book was first issued over a score of years ago, include in their number a great many to whom the "catchiest" titles would mean nothing. But "A Connecticut Yankee" on a billboard, advertisement or electric lights will draw them in.

It is not to be inferred that Mark Twain is read only by those of middle age or over. Everybody, from the youngest high school boy up, is familiar with the name of the humorist and the names of the more popular of his works—and among these is included "A Connecticut Yankee." But the old timers, who remember when anecdotes and pictures of the humorist filled the papers, will be the ones whom the prosaic title will draw in. And the youngsters, now that the works of the humorist have become classics, and his name and works are taught to them in school, will follow them.

"A Connecticut Yankee" is filled with hokum. Once our Yankee friend gets back to the sixth century there follows one humorous anachronism after another. The hero, having been knighted by King Arthur, is asked to choose his title and shield. He selects as his title "Sir Boss," and as his costume, a high silk hat with a plume, a velvet dress on which is embroidered his shield of peculiar design, on which the stars and stripes are prominent. He wears short skirt, shoes and socks, with his garters conspicuous about his bare calves. To top this off he wears his sporty mustache and smokes cigarettes. Surely a ludicrous figure when placed alongside a doughty knight fully mailed and armored.

If you can get the right man, dress him in this fashion, place him in a Ford next to a man in full armor. The Yankee is of slight form and the knights in the picture of lumberjack build. Remember this if you wish to have a street attraction. The contrast, of course, increases the humor and would attract more attention. The Ford comes into the picture. After the Yankee has held forth in the court of King Arthur for a short time, during which period he instals modern plumbing and union hours in the work shop, the mailed suit goes somewhat out of fashion. Several knights discard their armor and this is made, by the modernized mechanic, into a flivver. Thus your street attraction would be perfectly congruous and in line with the action in the picture. You can hang from the rear of the car this sign: "Sir Lancelot and His Yankee pal. Two Mark Twain characters brought to life." Or else "This is Sir Boss, the only Yankee Knight of the Round Table. See how this American modernized the medieval court of King Arthur at the ——— theatre."

There is a "joust" scene that can be made a whole lot of from an exploitation standpoint. A "joust" is a sixth century prize fight. Instead of meeting in a roped square, stripped to the waist, the warriors met in a large, flat field, about one hundred yards in diameter and fought with long lances. They were covered with armor and mounted. The horses were also covered with steel. The two contenders fought by riding head on into one another, trying to pierce each other's armor with their lances. The startling thing about the "joust" scene in the picture is that our Yankee, who has been challenged by Sir Sagramore to deadly combat, appears in cowboy dress, mounted on a bucking broncho. He wins the battle by using his lariat on his heavier adversary. It would be well to exploit this scene. A teaser campaign can be used. You can run in the daily, in space other than your regular advertisement, "Sir Sagramore and Sir Boss will meet in tournament at the ——— theatre on ———. Sir Sagramore is the champion jouster in all King Arthur's court, and Sir Boss is a Connecticut Yankee, unskilled with sword or lance." Other catch lines, built up about this scene, are: "'Sblood! Was ever such a joust, between such noble knights, witnessed before in all the realm! Forsooth, 'tis a noble sight to see Sir Boss, the Connecticut Yankee, and Sir Sagramore contend thus in deadly combat."

"Goest thou to the tournament? Sir Boss and Sir Sagramore meet this evening at the ——— theatre. See the Connecticut Yankee win his glorious victory."

"To a Finish! Tonight! At the ——— theatre. Sir Sagramore, who shakes the meanest lance in all King Arthur's court, vs. Sir Boss, the hero of Mark Twain's 'A Connecticut Yankee.'"

In most high schools, Tennyson's poems, "King Arthur and His Round Table," are read as part of the class work. It is these poems which brought this romantic period of history to common knowledge and inspired Mark Twain's satire. In the picture appear a number of characters who are spoken of in the poems. In addition to King Arthur there are Merlin and Sir Lancelot. Of course, the romantic splendor and high sounding phrases of those days are the subject of the most relentless satire, but still, pictorially and historically, the picture will please those who love the poems of Tennyson and the period of history they describe. Thus you can give throw-aways to the school, or interest the teachers, promising them a faithful depiction of sixth century costumes and customs, and they will not be disappointed.

This is simply another way of saying that the picture will appeal to those who like a costume play of the period, but at the same time will not have the harmful effects of some costume plays, for there is a modern story in the beginning, and a modern character running through it. It is even, in its cleverly written sub-titles, far more modern than Mark Twain's story.

Motorcycles play an important part in the rescue scenes of the picture. There must be one hundred of them used. They are manned by knights, each dressed very ludicrously in armor. Because of this scene a tie-up with a motorcycle dealer seems possible. You can have several men, dressed in a suit of mail, ride the machines through the street. Having one standing in your lobby with its peculiarly dressed rider near by would prove mutually beneficent to the theatre and the dealer.

"A Connecticut Yankee" is going to prove a good "kid" picture as well as one which will please the adults. The slangy, intimate titles, the "kidding" vein of humor which runs through all the eight reels, and the picturesque settings, have a great deal to do with this. Then there is the climax, which resembles the ride of the Ku Klux Klan in "The Birth of a Nation," only on a lesser scale. This will get a matinee crowd of youngsters yelling at the top of their lungs. So there is no need of limiting your efforts to the older schoolboys, who are more conversant with Mark Twain and Tennyson's poems. Special Saturday morning matinees, carefully advertised in the press, and through the schools (there is no reason why co-operation should not be given here) or by newsboys, who could carry a sign announcing the matinee on their hats or hung around their necks, should be well patronized. And once the youngsters have seen it, it is a pretty safe bet that their enthusiasm will bear good results in the evening performances.

There are some very big sets in "A Connecticut Yankee." In some of these scenes there must be a thousand people. So you can say that it is a big production and boost it as one of the most spectacular productions of the year. If you can run a picture of the huge castle which is used as King Arthur's palace in the local paper, it will attract a great number, for it is picturesque and beautiful.

It may be possible to arouse interest in Mark Twain by writing a letter to the daily paper, in which the dearth of readers of the works of the great American humorist is deplored. Strengthen this argument, if possible, by obtaining a statement from some librarian to the effect that some modern novels of less literary value are being read with the consequent neglect of such masterpieces of satire as "A Connecticu Yankee in King Arthur's Court." If this is followed by a letter in which various modern authors are held up as equals of Mark Twain, much controversy will be the result. This should be started before the newspaper ads. announce that "A Connecticut Yankee" has been picturized and will be shown at the local theatre.

In your advertising you can state that this production is more than a mere picturized story. You can safely say that it is a testimony to Mark Twain. The feature opens with a shot of the humorist in bed, writing. Before him pass, in miniature, the characters whom he has brought to life in "A Connecticut Yankee." A few subtitles eulogize him. When this scene is run it is probable that applause will break out throughout the house. It proves the esteem and affection in which this quaint humorist is held among the American people, and will please those lovers of his work. So you can advertise the picture as "a personal tribute" or a "rendering of homage" to the greatest American humorist.

The press book on this feature contains many extracts from various reviews of this feature which appeared in different trade and daily papers. Many highly laudatory sentences taken from these will make good catch lines in your advertising. Select if possible a newspaper which is near your city and familiar to your patrons.

In the cast there is Harry Myers, a veteran on the screen. The other best known player in the cast is Rosemary Theby who played opposite Myers in a series of comedies some time ago, and who was recently co-starred with Conway Tearle in "Whispering Devils." She has had a variety of roles in various pictures and her name will be familiar to the inveterate picture-goer. Pauline Starke, the ingenue lead, is a native of Joplin, Mo., and played in Triangle pictures and more recently in the "Eyes of Youth" and "Soldiers of Fortune." Charles Clary, who plays King Arthur in production, is a native of Charleston, Ill., and has had a screen career extending over nine years. William V. Mong, who plays Merlin, the magician, is a native of Chambersburg, Pa., and is also a scenario writer. He has played with Katherine MacDonald and Bessie Barriscale, as well as in the George Loane Tucker picture "Ladies Must Live."

If small towns there should be no difficulty in tying up with the local literary society. It should be possible to get them to attend in a body and special prices might be arranged as an inducement. In small towns such an occasion usually wins notice in the society columns of the daily newspaper, with so much the more publicity for the exhibitor and the picture. Whether a club is devoted entirely to literature or not, should not deter an exhibitor from notifying it of the coming attraction. Debating, historical, women's, and even fraternal organizations, will respond to an invitation to co-operate in spreading the news that one of Mark Twain's masterpieces has reached the screen. Ministers, especially those who have educational societies in their churches, if given a special showing on some morning before the opening of the run, may respond by recommending the picture to their clubs. Certainly they have a reason to do this, and that reason is the authorship. They might not rise to the defense of many living authors, but it is an accepted fact that Mark Twain is the greatest humorist genius that America has brought forth, and probably the greatest that the world has seen in the last century. Thus clubs and church societies will join in endorsing this picture, just as they might recommend a book of George Eliot or Dickens.

In the Sunday section of the newspaper brief incidents and anecdotes concerning the humorist would be very attractive. There are any number of sayings and jokes attributed to him which have now become almost classics. Witness the one in which he responded, when told that the news of his death had been spread abroad, that "the news was greatly exaggerated." Biographies and memoirs of him may be found in the library.

Stunts other than have been mentioned here will be found to be of good use. The press book illustrates very well the costume worn by Harry Myers as "Sir Boss," the Yankee Knight of the Round Table. Use as accurate a copy of this as possible for your street or lobby stunts. It is a most novel and ridiculous costume and one which will make a highly attractive figure on the street. Using the flivver will help and if possible a tie-up with a garage should be arranged. The flivver, one of the most dilapidated available, could be labeled: "This was built in the sixth century in the reign of King Arthur and his Knights." If you could get another armored figure, mounted on a huge horse covered with a shiny silver cloth in lieu of metal, to follow the flivver, the parade is all the more attractive.

Mailing cards to the patrons of the theatre should be somewhat dignified. They should eulogize Mark Twain and tell how he came to write "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court." He disliked the tales of those dreamy, romantic days, when ladies sighed from their towered castles down on the knights who rode beneath them to slay dragons or rescue other maidens. A boastful Knight of the Round Table, in Mark Twain's eyes, had nothing on a hard-boiled Yankee. And so he wrote this book, one of the masterpieces of literature of all time, in which he pokes gentle (and sometimes rather harsh) fun at these idealistic old fellows of another age, who followed the wishes of their noble hearted king. Camelot was no better place than St. Louis and he was going to prove it. After a carefully written introduction state simply that this story has been made into a picture in a lavish and most elaborate manner. Claim that it is one of the most stupendous productions that has ever reached the screen. If you have obtained endorsements from clergymen or public officials add these to your mailing card. In conclusion you can state that it is perfectly clean, and is a picture which no one need feel will offend them. You can even use it as an argument against censorship and Blue Laws.

Aids for "A Connecticut Yankee"

THE William Fox Film headquarters announces that one of the most elaborately prepared campaign books ever gotten up for the exploitation of a motion-picture is to be issued in connection with its release of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court."

Departing from the usual press book size and shape, the new booklet is 6¾ by 10⅞ inches in size and numbers twenty pages. It is printed in two colors, henna red and black, and the art work and scheme of decoration are particularly attractive.

At first glance the book resembles a child's illustrated story book, with its gallant armored knights and turreted castles; but it is illumined by the smiling features of Twain's "Yankee," whose grin adorns nearly every page, and with Mark Twain's patriarchial features.

The reading matter of the book is incorporated in small artistic panels, set amid the multitude of stills and sketches that visualize for the exhibitor all the ludicrous incidents of Twain's merry satirical tale.

The center of the book is adorned with a double page spread of the tournament field before King Arthur's castle, with the mighty populace assembled to do honor to the jousting knights.

The innovation of the new style book is bound to prove a boon to exhibitors weary with the regulation article, and its profuse illustrations offer a quick way to impress one with the salient points of this unique picture which is at once a tremendous spectacle and a rip-roaring comedy.

Accompanying this richly artistic book is a campaign sheet of four newspaper pages, containing interesting and valuable matter for the press-including scene cuts and illustrated ads.

This four-page addition to the campaign book possesses a wealth of suggestions on the way that the picture may be put over. Brief snappy press readers, side-lights on Mark Twain's humor as revealed in his "Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," newsy items concerning the production, reviews of the picture as published by the New York dailies, interest-rousing catch-lines and "Hints on How to Exploit 'A Connecticut Yankee,'" are some of the features to be found in the four-page press sheet.

Another effective means of exploiting the picture is to be found in the attractive posters which have been made for the production by the H. C. Miner Lithograph Company. In color scheme, spectacular force and accurate reflection of the theme and spirit of the photoplay, these posters will prove of unusual service, according to word from the Fox Film home-office. The posters include a 24-sheet; a six-sheet; two three-sheets; and three one-sheets.

The lobby photographs are also declared to be of varied character and striking appeal. They have been made with the object in view of the most humorous incidents of the picture. The assortment of stills for lobby display includes seven 11x14 and title card and two 22x28 photographs, handsomely colored. In addition to this list are two window cards of attractive design. The four-page press sheet accompanying the campaign book illustrates some of the cuts that are available for this production. The cuts, advises the William Fox office, can be had at "nominal cost." The Fox exchange will also have on hand for distribution one-column and two-column mats at 10 cents each and three-column and four-column mats at 20 cents apiece.

A synopsis of the story is also presented in the four-page press-sheet, the incidents being set forth in exactly the same way in which they appear in the picture. The exhibitor is accordingly enabled to grasp at a glance just how Mark Twain's story is treated in its screen adaptation. Understanding the mode of treatment accorded to the original story by Director Emmett J. Flynn in the picture version, he will be in a position to prepare for a better presentation of the subject in his theatre.

The motive of satire which prompted Mark Twain to write "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" is featured again and again in the press notices and stories centering around the production and the author of its story. In a publicity campaign for the production it would be well for the booker to feature as far as possible in all his press notices, program readers, etc., the satiric motive that lay in back of Twain's story as he wrote it. This is the spirit that predominates in nearly all of the "stunt" suggestions and text material that are set forth by William Fox in his four-page press-sheet accompanying the campaign-book.

Picture a Directorial Achievement

Emmett J. Flynn

THE successful production of the Mark Twain story, "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" must be accredited without reservation to Emmett J. Flynn, who not only directed the making of every scene for the film, but worked with the scenario writers in the preparation for the screen script, cast the picture, aided in the settings and edited the film. That he was successful in this monumental work is shown by the production itself, and that the William Fox organization has confidence in his ability after the making of this production in an economical manner is revealed by the assignment of Mr. Flynn to make another all-star super production now in the making under the title of "Chung."

When William Fox decided to film the Mark Twain satire, he had a number of directors to choose from, and it was not considered a particular honor to Flynn that the task of making this subject was entrusted to him. The result he obtained, however, gives him the credit for making one of the biggest pictures from the standpoint of entertainment of the year, for no matter what class of people see this film, they are going to be entertained and that royally.

In producing this subject Director Flynn first familiarized himself with the keen satirical manner of the author and his preparatory work of this kind enabled him to make his characters live and act as Mark Twain himself saw them with his mind's eye.

"Mark Twain's mediaeval story is a fine satire on what the people of today remember as the romance and joy of the days of Knights," declares Mr. Flynn. "Mark Twain showed that those days were not filled with romance and that some of the stories of the Knights being bold were pure fabrication.

"When a man in Washington can press a button and start three battleships on their way; when a man can talk via wireless to a person one thousand miles away—why, this is the day of romance. The knights of old lived in an age of discomfort, of tawdry display, of mock romance. Today is the age to revel in—not the age when 'King Arthur and his sturdy warriors ruled.' By putting a Yankee, accustomed to the luxuries of twentieth-century inventions, back into King Arthur's age and making him revolutionize the place into a twentieth-century affair—why, the contrast is brilliant, the satire glorious. But it required much thought to put it over on the screen."

Emmett Flynn, while a young man, is not a newcomer to the screen. He directed for First National, Goldwyn, American, and Fox. Chief among his earlier pictures are: "Alimony," "Racing Strain," "Bondage of Barbara," "A Bachelor's Wife," "Yvonne from Paris," "Other Side of Eden," "Eastward Ho," "The Lincoln Highwayman," "Shod with Fire" and "The Untamed" with Tom Mix.

In the making of "A Connecticut Yankee," Director Flynn had selected a very able staff which included C. R. Wallace, film editor, R. A. Flynn, as assistant director, Lucian Androit as cameraman and Ralph DeLacey as art director. That Mr. Flynn had the co-operation and assistance of all of these department heads is shown in every portion of the film.

Harry Myers

AFTER an absence of several seasons from the screen in light comedy roles, Harry Myers plays a return engagement in such a part in a most admirable manner in the William Fox all-star superfeature, "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," where he appears as Sir Boss, the Connecticut Yankee who, in his unconscious moments, makes a tour of adventure back into the days of King Arthur's reign.

Every one who has followed the turn of events of the screen for the past several years will remember Harry Myers in the light comedies he played in with Rosemary Theby for Lubin in the days of the General Film. Afterwards he was with Universal.

Early in the past season Mr. Myers came to Los Angeles and played a number of engagements at studios, appearing in heavy roles. He had such a part in the Bessie Barriscale production, "The Notorious Mrs. Sands," and a similar role in the Charles Ray First National production, "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," but his performance in the Connecticut Yankee proves conclusively that his forte is leading man of light comedy parts.

Throughout this William Fox special Mr. Myers radiates a personality of cheerfulness that seems to penetrate far beyond that sordid atmosphere generated by the cold yet realistic characteristics of other members of the cast, and turns the chilly atmosphere into a desirable warmth, even though Sir Boss, as Myers is knighted, takes the sun away from the King and his nation, so he also brings it back and keeps it constantly shining with rays of inspirational merriment and joy for all concerned except those of evil design.

It must be said the part of the Yankee carries the burden of the entire Twain masterpiece, for it is this character which is contrasted against all the others in the production. Myers in his interpretation of the role is the personification of the American spirit of the present day and his forceful and progressive manner carries all scenes in which he appears through to success.

The leading man portrayal by Harry Myers has led to other engagements in similar parts, and he has just completed the lead opposite Eileen Percy in the William Fox production, "Nobody Home," directed by George Marshall.

Pauline Starke

OF the well-balanced all-star cast of this picture there is no member who has had more successful releases in the past year than Pauline Starke, and from reports of her work in additional subjects now nearly ready for release there is every reason to believe she will shortly attain a most prominent place in the honor roll of screen actresses.

In the "Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," she plays the ingenue lead of Alison de Courteloise and nick-named "Sandy" by the Connecticut Yankee. In all the scenes in which Miss Starke appears she radiates a pleasing personality and gives a most admirable performance. Her part takes her into the earliest scenes of the screen play and from then on keeps her on the screen in a large percentage of the scenes.

The exhibitors of the country and theatre patrons will remember Pauline Starke as the younger sister in "Eyes of Youth," as the ingenue of Tourneur's "Lifeline," and for her important part in "The Broken Butterfly." She played in the Mayflower Allen Dwan picture "Soldiers of Fortune," and was featured in the name part of Vitagraph's "The Courage of Marge O'Doone." She was the sweetheart of the Mary Roberts Rinehardt eminent authoress's production "Dangerous Days," and played opposite Tom Mix in "The Untamed," and was the mountain girl opposite Jack Pickford in the Goldwyn production of John Fox, Jr.'s story "Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come."

Miss Starke has completed work in the featured part of the Reginald Barker production for Goldwyn entitled "Snowblind," and following this went to New York where she is to interpret the role made famous by Mrs. Fiske in "Salvation Nell" for Whitman Bennett in New York.

William V. Mong

IT is most evident that some of the impotent mystic powder used by the character of "Merlin" in the Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court took effect upon the actor William V. Mong, who impersonated this part, for his work here is without a doubt the best of his screen career, which in itself is a most complimentary statement, for Mong has won for himself a most desirable position in the screen world as a character impersonator.

William V. Mong is under contract with J. L. Frothingham Productions and was loaned to the Fox Company for work under the direction of Emmett J. Flynn in the Connecticut Yankee.

Recently he was seen in the Metro production "Burning Daylight" and "The Mutiny of the Elsinore." He has a very important part in the George Loan Tucker production "Ladies Must Live" and is now playing the part of "Li Chang" in "Shung," the Fox special being made by Director Flynn.

It is the intention of J. L. Frothingham to produce plays featuring Mr. Mong and a number of stories which have already been purchased and will prove suitable vehicles for this exceptional actor. The first made will be "The Ten Dollar Raise" from the story by Peter B. Kyne, which is to be released through Hodkinson.

Charles Clary

PERHAPS no player of the screen has had more important parts than Clary has been cast for. Whether Mr. Clary is cast for the leading man part or to play the heavy role, or is selected to impersonate a difficult characterization, the producer is always assured the part will be played correctly and to the benefit of his production.

Of recent releases besides "A Connecticut Yankee," Mr. Clary has played the part of the Doctor in "The Penalty," Henry Guion in "The Street Called Straight," and the Doctor in "Don't Neglect Your Wife." While in "A Connecticut Yankee" he plays the name part with much facial make-up and later appears without make-up when the King to disguise as a peasant has his beard shaved off.

Mr. Clary was the heavy of "The Honor System," played leading business in nine William Farnum productions, lead opposite Theda Bara in "Rose of Blood," and King Louie in "Madame Du Barry." He has also played lead and heavy in a number of other Fox productions as well as prominent releases for other producers.

George Siegman

GEORGE SIEGMAN, who plays the part of Sir Sagramore in William Fox picturization of "A Connecticut Yankee at King Arthur's Court," directed by Emmett J. Flynn is considered one of the best heavies in filmdom and is peculiarly fitted, by temperament and long training, to make the part of the heavy in "A Connecticut Yankee" an outstanding one.

He was eight years on the stage, with Frohman, Eleanor Robson, Liebler. One of the first roles he played was in Lottie Blair Parker's "Under Southern Skies," as Colonel Daubigney.

Since he came into pictures, Siegman says he has had only three jobs—with Reliance ten years, juvenile and star on the Mutual program, with Griffith seven years as co-director and actor and general chief of staff.

In addition to playing the heavy in the Yankee, Siegman assisted Emmett J. Flynn, director of the picture, in direction of the mob scenes.

In addition to his part in the Yankee he has played with William Fox the following roles: A character heavy in "Partner of Fate," and the heavy in "Fighting Back," with Buck Jones. His latest role with Fox, just cast, is with Emmett J. Flynn who is making another special production, "Clung" from the story by Max Brand. In this picture Siegman as the Chinese heavy, in characterization and make up, promises to outshine any he has yet played.

Estelle Taylor again shows her dramatic ability in "Blind Wives," the new Fox production, which has the same cast as "While New York Sleeps"

"Flivver" Supplants a Prancing Steed

"The Road Demon" instead of presenting Tom Mix astride the usual galloping steed seats the William Fox star in an honest-to-goodness "flivver." From the seat of the Ford, Mix in this picture will perform his lariat throwing, sharp-shooting and other stunts associated with this Western play, declares a statement from the William Fox headquarters. Lynn F. Reynolds wrote the story and also directed the production.

Selecting a Site for Motion Picture Theatre

An Architect Tells You Clearly the Various Points to Consider

By Harry M. Prince, Architect

SOME of the largest corporations in the United States, operating chains of retail stores, employ experts who might be termed "Enumerators." It is their duty to find out the exact number of people passing a given point, during certain fixed periods of time.

The mehod of procedure is about as follows: Having determined upon a City for a location for a new store, in a territory in which the Corporation has no previous representation, a man who is thoroughly conversant and familiar with real estate values is dispatched for what is known as "Missionary Work." Amongst his numerous duties is one that might well be considered by all those contemplating the erection of a Motion Picture Theatre, i. e., to enumerate with the aid of a clocking machine, the exact number of people to pass that given spot, where the retail corporation contemplates placing a store. From that tabulation, comparative real estate and rental values may be deduced, by the simple comparison of tables showing similar traffic in front of similar locations, in cities or towns where stores are in full operation.

Cities, towns and even villages, have but limited localities, known as business centres; or, in the case of large cities such as New York, Chicago or St. Louis, Theatrical districts. As the problem of the larger cities is one where the business section or theatrical district is large enough to give greater selection of site, this article may be confined to the smaller town, though many of the things written here could well be applied to both.

Competition may possibly be rightly called "The Life of Trade." In selecting a site, however, one that adjoins a large theatre already in operation, and with an excellent selection of pictures, would not be competition of beneficial results. It is true that there are enough pictures being produced to go all around, but it is also true that some brands of pictures are in greater demand by the public than others: therefore, your theatre must be equal or larger in size and accommodations, and you must be going to have excellent pictures, or those for which you can create a public demand.

Each year develops more stringent regulations on the part of Municipal Building and Fire Departments for the erection of Moving Picture Theatres. (In the early days of the "Nichelodeum" and "Store Shows," there were practically no building codes that provided adequate laws. Since then, every city has adopted some form of Theatre Ordinance, but, unfortunately, in the haste to get a code, the small cities copied and adopted, verbatim, the regulations of such cities as New York and Chicago.

The careful reading of these Municipal Codes would be the most profitable investment any prospective theatre owner could make, a simple precaution, and involving nothing more expensive than about an hour of his time. The National Board of Fire Underwriters also issue recommendations, an observance of which will lower insurance rates.

Let us assume that the Owner has a number of sites in contemplation, any of which is right as to rental or purchase price. Every Architect or Contractor has in his office a copy of the local building code. If the Owner does not wish to divulge his project, though the ethics of secrecy between Owner and Architect are the same as that of an attorney and client, or physician and patient, he can secure a copy from the office of the Building Inspector, which should be thoroughly studied and digested.

The following passages are taken at random from the building codes of New York City and Dallas, Texas, to illustrate how they affect the seating capacities of theatres, and how easily an Owner may be misled by figuring seating capacity a square footage basis, without allowi for courts, passages, etc., in his calcu tions. From the New York code:—

"In every Motion Picture Theatre, an unobstructed exit to a street cannot provided at the rear thereof, either open court or a fireproof passage or cor dor must be provided, extending from t rear exit to the street front."

"Every theatre accommodating 300 p sons shall have at least one front on t street, and in such front there shall means of exits and entrance for the au ence not less than twenty-five (25) f in width."

"In addition to the aforesaid entranc and exits on the street, there shall be served for service in case of emergen an open court or space in the rear and the side not bordering on the street, whe said building is located on a corner l and in the rear and on both sides of sa building, where there is but one fronta on the street. Said open court, or cour shall extend the full length and height the building and across on each side a rear thereof where its sides or side do not abut on a street or alley, and shall of the same width at all points."

"No portion of any building hereaft ected or altered, used or intended to be sed for theatrical purposes, shall be occu- ed or used as a hotel, boarding or lodg- g house, factory, workshop or manufac- ry, or for storage purposes."

"Galleries must be provided with at ast one line of fire escapes, leading to n open court, fireproof passage or street, ithout re-entering the same or any other uilding."

The following from the Dallas Code:

"Every theatre shall have at least one ont on the street. In addition to the oresaid entrances and exits, and exits n the street, there shall be reserved for rvice in case of emergency, an open urt or space on the side not bordering n the street, where said building is lo- ted on a corner lot; and on both sides said building where there is but one ontage on the street. The width of such en court or courts shall not be less than ven feet where the seating capacity does t exceed 1,000 people; exceeding 1,000 et and not more than 1,800 people, eight et in width, and exceeding 1,800 people, n feet in width. Said open court or urts, shall begin on a line with or near e proscenium wall, and shall extend the gth of the auditorium proper to or near e wall separating the same from the en- nce lobby or vestibule. A separate and stinct corridor shall continue to the eet from each open court, through such perstructure as may be built on the eet side of the auditorium."

"No lodging accommodations shall be owed in any part of the building com- nicating with same."

"Actor's dressing rooms shall not be ced on the stage, under the stage, over stage, on the fly galleries nor under auditorium, but shall be placed in a arate section for that purpose."

"All dressing rooms shall have an in- pendent exit leading directly into a rt or street and shall be ventilated by ndows in the external wall."

"Every steam boiler which may be re- ired for heating or other purposes, shall located outside of the building, either der the sidewalk or in an extension, but no case under or within any portion of building used for theatrical purposes."

Every building code also fixes the width aisles, slopes of floors, width and num- of stairways, and the placing of seats; tant back to back, arm to arm, and the ximum allowed between intervening les or aisles and walls.

It might be added, however, that many the smaller cities realize that their code visions, copied from those of the lar- cities, as already mentioned, are not ays applicable or advantageous to nicipal development, with the result t the building and fire commissioners very often willing to be more lenient n the code implies. Nevertheless, it l be time, energy and money saved for prospective Moving Picture Theatre vners, to be thoroughly conversant with the code provisions, before closing their deal for a site for a new theatre.

It can readily be seen from the code extracts quoted, that the most desirable site for a theatre would be a corner property, facing three streets. Realty values are usually such, however, that it makes the investment very high. The same applies to properties with two facades on an intersecting corner, and the court provisions, if insisted upon by the authorities, tends even to make this unattractive. There is also the objection to giving up a valuable street front to the unsightly side facade, on which the owner does not wish to spend any money to treat architecturally, which results in a blank wall of the appearance of a warehouse. An excellent site is one on an inside lot, running through from one street to another, for reasons that will be taken up later under discussion of floor gradients and natural grades.

It is becoming more and more apparent that it is not necessary to spend money lavishly on a wide, showy entrance and superstructure in the very limited business districts of the smaller cities, where location is hard to get and front footage rentals extremely high. The necessity for securing an entrance from the main street is absolutely essential, and with this requisite in mind, an excellent method has been devised. A twenty or twenty-five foot arcade entrance from the main street to the auditorium in the rear is a solution. It has many advantages. The property on a rear lot is usually cheaper and not bound up with long leases and it is at once evident that it is easier to secure twenty or twenty-five feet on the main street than any larger widths. The space above the arcade can be utilized for excellent rental purposes as it does not come under the code limitations of the auditorium portion. The arcade makes a splendid lobby display and it reduces to a minimum the necessity for spending money on architectural treatment of a wide facade. It permits of a maximum seating capacity, as space is not required in the auditorium for lobby or vestibule purposes.

A System of Indirect Colored Lighting Is One of Features of State Theatre

Finkelstein and Ruben's New Theatre in Minneapolis Opens to Largest Crowd in Mid-West Theatre History

ACCOMPLISHING what had been believed an utter impossibility in the last seven days of a construction period of almost two years, Messrs. Finkelstein and Ruben were able to open their new $1,000,000 State Theatre, located at Eighth street and Hennepin avenue, Minneapolis, Saturday evening, February 5, to the largest crowd that ever attended a similar event in the Mid-West.

The State represents the largest theatre, from a seating standpoint, between Chicago and the Pacific Coast and has been claimed by authorities one of the most comfortable and homey appearing large photoplay houses in the country. The exterior of the theatre is more or less deceiving in that, like the Circle Theatre of Indianapolis, it gives little indication of the immensity of the interior, or auditorium.

The auditorium is designed in a free motif of the Italian renaissance and its main feature is the noble proscenium arch which spans almost the clear width of the building and is richly treated in an original manner with massive Corinthian columns supporting the entablatures, which in turn carry two groups in gold representing Music, the Drama, and the Muse of the Cinema. This unusual treatment has given remarkable dignity to the grand sweep of the arch and forms a magnificent frame for the stage opening. A beautiful peristyle overdraped with a cloth of gold surmounted with drapes of royal blue richly embroidered gives the theatre one of the most striking stages imaginable. Each of the side panels of the peristyle is draped with royal blue plush curtains and royal blue plush drapes which pull upward as the picture is flashed on the screen cover the picture sheet. A good portion of the stage floor is of pebbled glass one and an eighth inches thick with six colors of 300 watt lights beneath, so that soloists are given an unusual lighting from all sides.

A thirty-piece band, under the leadership of Frank Pallma, former conductor of the Lagoon orchestra, Minneapolis, and previously a prominent figure in Pacific Coast musical circles, furnishes the music for The State presentations and the overture for the initial program was "The State," a snappy march especially written for the occasion by Clifford Reck Varied colored light effects are thr over the entire band as it plays the o tures and other selections and from hind the orchestra pit balustrade wi goes beneath the curve of the stage c delicate tints of blue, amber, pink green changing by dimmer simultaneo with the variation of the color scheme the lights of the auditorium. Atop auditorium hang six large cut glass cl deliers, each containing six colors of e tric bulbs which constantly change as performance goes on and giving a jewel-like appearance to the upper por of the theatre. Small cut glass ligh fixtures beneath the balcony and on sides of the theatre also change color blend in keeping with the orchestra sh and ceiling fixtures.

In each of the proscenium boxes placed various colored indirect li which throw their rays upon the l walls and ceiling of these boxes at in vals during the performance, adding the richness of the color scheme to mean extent.

A color scheme of delicate blue gold has been carried out throughout foyer, mezzanine and lobby and Ha A. Larsen, the decorator, has added m to the homey appearance of the build by his artistic small touches on fixtu railings and ceilings. The foyer cei

Attractive
By Night or Day

HERE'S a theatre-front that is more than a billboard on which to hang "feature" posters. It is much more than a mere easel for flashing electric signs by night. It is a theatre-front that is really beautiful in itself.

By day it stands out for the compelling beauty of its decorative details—its parapet, consoles, medallions, masks, and garlands. By night a thousand lights stud the facade, not as so much concentrated glare, but as integral parts of the decorations themselves, enhancing the beauty of the entire building and bringing out the inviting attractiveness of the big entrance arch.

There's no doubt about it; the Saxe Theatre is unusually attractive! It lures the casual passer-by by day, as well as the pleasure-seeker by night.

This whole front, plain surfaces as well as decorative forms, is executed in Terra Cotta. That means that there are no mere stucco or plaster effects that will chip off with the first bad weather; everything is actually part of the building itself, built to stay permanently.

Terra Cotta comes not only in any shape or form, as is evidenced by this theatre, but in any color that your architect may specify. And its original color can always be restored by a simple washing-down with soap and water.

Add to such plasticity and color-range the permanence and fire-resistiveness of Terra Cotta. Can there then be any question that you want to know more about this material? Let us send you a copy of the new Terra Cotta brochure, "The Theatre." It tells you all about Terra Cotta and shows pictures of beautiful theatres in all parts of the country. Write for it to the National Terra Cotta Society, 1 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Plate No. 2 Arcade entrance with minimum expenditure for property on main business street

There are, of course, times when property cannot be purchased as ideally as that shown in Plate No. 2, but of necessity must be secured on a corner. In this condition, it would be preferable to be sure that you could utilize portions of the site for rental purposes as in Plate No. 1. Where it is possible to receive good store rentals, theoretically, the site would cost nothing, the store rental being usually sufficient to pay interest and taxes on the site, leaving only the cost of the building to be carried. Excellent results have been obtained by this method, also with a minimum architectural expense.

700 Seat Theatre For Gadsden, Alabama

The Imperial theatre, Gadsden, Alabama, has been formally opened. It is said to be one of the finest theatres in Alabama, having 700 capacity, ladies' restrooms, smoking-room, typhoon ventilating system, magnificent pipe organ, and very artistic interior decorations. The building is of brick with stucco front, with spacious lobby. From screen to projection room it is a model of modern theatre construction. It was built by Washington, D. C., architects and contractors, and is operated by Southern Enterprises, Incorporated, of Atlanta. Roy L. McClellan is local manager.

Madison's Oldest Theatre to Be Rebuilt

THE Fuller theatre, the oldest show house in Madison, Wisconsin, and one of the oldest theatres in the state, is to be rebuilt at a cost of $150,000. The theatre has been featuring motion pictures for several years.

Contractors are being asked for bids on the remodeling of the old theatre building. The last attraction to appear in the old Fuller, which is located directly across the street from the state capitol, is booked for April and work on the new theatre will be started about May 1. It will reopen with pictures early in the fall.

The Fuller has had the reputation of being the center of amusement for the state's legislative bodies since the early days of its incorporation.

J. E. Pridmore, Chicago, specialist in theatre work, has practically completed plans for the new structure. Every partition in the building, the main floor, the balcony and gallery will be torn out before the actual work of rebuilding start

The main floor will be built of concret and will start at the sidewalk level, elim inating the present steps at the entranc The lobby will be directly in the cente and will be built of marble and glas There will be two entrance doors fro the street and two box-offices in order tha patrons may be taken care of as rapidly a possible.

Each side of the lobby will be marke with four exit doors, all leading from th foyer directly to the street. A six-foo stairway is planned on each side to lea from the foyer to the balcony.

The balcony will be constructed of con crete and the house will be practicall fireproof. One of the features of the nev building will be a mezzanine floor an promenade between the balcony and th main floor where patrons can visit be tween acts.

A parlor for women and smoking roon for men are also included in the plans fo the new Fuller.

All the present boxes of the old typ will be eliminated entirely. A new pip organ will also be installed. The nev house will contain about 1,600 seats.

Ambassador Opened on Feb. 5th

WHAT is termed the premier theatr for First National pictures in Lo Angeles, was formerly opened to the pub lic under the direction of Messrs. Gor Brothers and Sol Lesser, with S. Barret McCormick as Managing Director, on Sat urday evening, February 5th.

The theatre is named The Ambassado and is a part of the recently opened Am bassador Hotel.

The little theatre, for it is the cameo o Los Angeles screen houses, is located i a separate wing of the hotel buildings an egress to the house is made through the long corridors of the first floor of the hotel, which is occupied by shops of every description. The theatre is separated from the hotel by strong iron gates and instead of the usual lobby and box office there is a restful room of divans and comfortable chairs of every kind, with a ticket seller at a near-by desk.

The auditorium, with a seating capacity of 550, is laid out in three sections, right, center, and left, with leather chairs covering fully one-third of the floor space. These are termed "Divans." The stage is but a trifle more than ten feet in depth, with sufficient loft to accommodate settings, drops, curtain, and other necessary equipment.

The illumination is by an indirect method fitted with circuits that make possible changing the hues or tints to add atmosphere to the pictures. Normally a warm golden tint is used.

The theatre is fitted with a pipe organ and orchestra pit of sufficient size for sixteen piece orchestra.

Simplicity has been the kep-note of the decorative scheme, the walls and ceiling being of grey, with the cold effect eliminated by fitting suspending from the ceiling, which adds warmth to every portion of the theatre.

The pages or ushers are girls wearing black velvet costumes, especially designed by Peggy Hamilton. These are trimed with gold cloth batik, the colors being the same as those of the Sunbursts and wall lighting fixtures. Fish net hosiery is worn over batik stockings.

The staff of the house consists of about fifty people, including the orchestra, with Eugene Ochs as House Manager, Max Wiel Musical Director, under the supervision of S. Barrett McCormick.

The policy of the theatre will be to show First National productions a short time prior to release date. But two performances will be given daily, 2:30 and 8:30 p. m. Matinee prices will be 50c for orchestra seats, and $1.00 for Divans, evening prices $1.00 and $1.50. All seats will be reserved for each performance.

The opening bill consisted of "Passion," with an artistic prologue consisting of a dance of the three virtues, who were later captured by Passion, Golden Lure, and Lust. The lighting effects added artisticness to the prologue, which ended with the appearance of Destruction, tumbling the buildings when he appeared in a mass of flames.

Ventilating Fans on Sides of Proscenium Arch

In the installation of the Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating System, there are many problems that confront the firm's engineers, especially with reference to the proper location of the system to conform with the construction of the theatre under consideration.

The most popular method of installation has been and still is on the roof, because here pure, fresh air can be forced into the theatre from high above the street level, where the air is free from dust and dirt. Another reason for this method is that it takes up no valuable space from the theatre proper.

In many theatres, however, it has been necessary to make Typhoon installations in the attic space, or rooms above the theatre, due either to the peculiar construction of the theatre or other reasons which would not permit the installation on the roof, or because it was more accessible elsewhere.

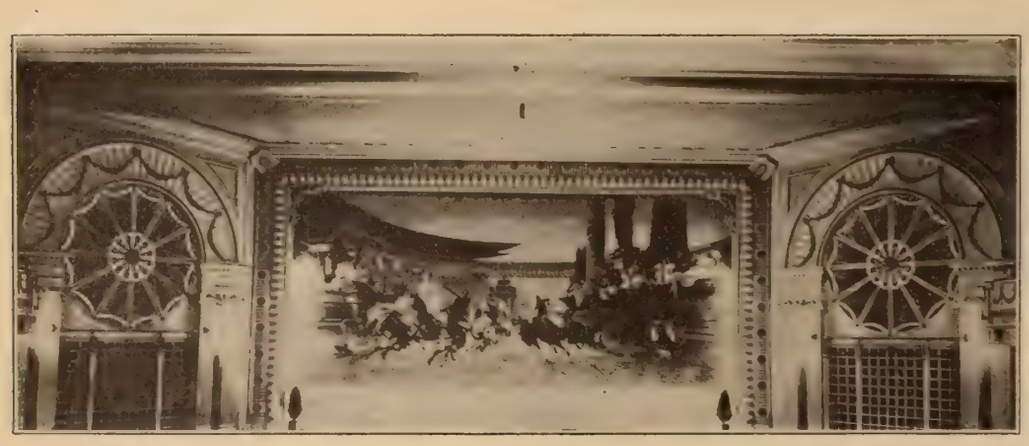
Of the various different kinds of installations in theatres made by the Typhoon Fan Company during the past ten years, none are of greater interest than the system installed in the Hippodrome Theatre, Okmulgee, Oklahoma. The equipment in this theatre comprises two twelve-foot fans. Each one of these enormous Typhoons is installed just under the proscenium arch, and on each side of the screen, as may be seen by referring to the accompanying picture. These fans operate in full view of the audience and the only grille work is the small decoration that may be seen directly in front of each fan. Running at low velocity, they force into the theatre sufficient air to completely renovate all the air in the entire auditorium once a minute or sixty times an hour without noise or draughts of any kind.

Fountain Effect at Mission Theatre

The most spectacular feature of the proscenium arch and stage decoration effect of the new Mission Theatre in Los Angeles is the fountains and cascades on either side. These add mystery to the setting by the "noiselessness" of their operation and the beautiful effects secured by hidden electrical apparatus which operates from below, and is constantly changing the colors of the water to all tints and colors of the rainbow.

When the theatre was first opened it was feared the fountains and cascades effect would have to be removed because of the constant noise from the falling water, but this feature has been overcome by incasing the fountains and cascades in heavy plate glass.

The changing of the colors is so slow and the colors themselves so soothing that it is believed that the artistic decorative scheme does not detract in any particular from the picture but adds to the theatre distinction that has already created ver valuable mouth to mouth advertising fc the house because of the mysterious mar ner in which the fountains and cascade are operated and illuminated.



Ventilation at the Hippodrome, Okmulgee, Okla., is provided by fans on both sides of the arch

Pittsfield, Mass., to Get 2000 Seat House

A modern theatre, to seat at least 2,00 and probably to be devoted largely to mc tion pictures, is to be erected at Pittsfiel Mass., by Kelton B. Miller, owner an publisher of the Berkshire Eagle of tha city, and a large realty owner in wester Massachusetts. Announcement of th plans were made last week, prior to M Miller's leaving on a trip to Florida. Cor tractors' estimates will be submitted an contracts let immediately following hi return. It is expected that the playhous will be ready for occupancy by early sum mer, or at least for opening of the fa season. The theatre site will be in th rear of the new Miller block on Nort Main street.

Decision to build the new playhous came, it was announced, as a result of M Miller's withdrawal from the Majesti Theatre Company of that city, in whic he was a heavy stockholder. After with drawing from the Majestic Theatre Com pany, Mr. Miller made an offer for buy ing of the entire property, it is understoo at a price considerably above that fo which the theatre was bought of John J Sullivan. Failure to secure the propert resulted in decision to build.

Announcement relative to the theatr does not specify definitely as to policy but it is understood it will be largely mo tion pictures. Plans will call for but on balcony, under which will be the foyer an rest rooms. There will be no boxes bu the space at the proscenium will be de voted to the pipes of a large organ. Loge will be railed off in the front of the bal cony for box parties. Lighting effect will form a large part of the decoratio scheme, arrangements being made t change the entire tone of the interior b lighting effects. Installation of the pip organ is taken, in theatrical circles, t mean that motion pictures will be the prin cipal offering at the house. The theatr will have entrance through an arcade i the Miller building, from North street and will have a frontage of 138½ feet o Renne avenue and 101 feet east and west

Rialto Has Been Remodelled Throughout

The theatre, formerly known as the Scen in Bloomington, Ill., has been entirely remod eled and renamed the Rialto. Mr. C. Jackso who was the manager and owner of the olde house was in charge of the changes which wer carried out at a cost of $10,000. A program o motion pictures and vaudeville is maintaine regularly at the Rialto. The new multiform electric sign on the front of Mr. Jackson's thea tre is said to be the finest in the city.

Another Picture Theatre for Schenectady

ANNOUNCEMENT is made of the new Strand theatre to be located in Schenectady, N. Y., becoming the eleventh in the chain of Strand theatres, and which will cost in the neighborhood of $400,000. The house will have a seating capacity of about 2,500. Reilly and Hall of New York are the architects. Ground will be broken at once, according to Paul Reilly, who visited Schenectady last week, in connection with preliminary matters. The house will be located on State street, the main business street of the city, and will be so situated that it will have three entrances, one on State, the second on Liberty street, and the third opening on Erie boulevard, which is to be considerably improved.

It is expected that this newest of Strands will be completed in time to be opened the latter part of next December. The balcony will accommodate about 1,000 persons, the main floor about 1,500. Tapestry brick will be employed on that portion facing Liberty street, with a terra cotta front facing on Erie boulevard.

The entrance to the house will be most imposing, the grand foyer entirely in marble being 105 feet in length and 35 feet in width. Leading off of this will be the various anterooms, telephone booth and rest rooms. The ladies' rest room will be panelled in an early Colonial design. A checkered floor and side walls in gold, with a beamed ceiling, will be used in making the men's smoking room particularly attractive. This room will be 15 by 25 feet in dimensions, with a fireplace of Rockwood tile.

From this foyer will lead ramps to the rear of the orchestra, with marble balustrades at either side. At the head there will be a crossover to six loge boxes which will also have marble balustrades. Steps on either side, as well as in the center, will lead from this crossover up to the balcony proper, with its two banks of loges. The balcony will have four aisles.

The color scheme of the entire house will be of amber and gold, enhanced with marble. Silken amber panels will be used in setting off the side walls except in the center bay on either side, where there will be large oil paintings with cove lights. Carpets and seats will carry out the color design.

Much attention will be paid in securing a most beautiful overhead, the dome itself being 65 feet across and in many respects similar to the one in the Rialto, New York. Dimmers will control a three-lighting system. To this dome there will be vaulting from the four corners, a half dome extending over the colonnade.

The projection room will be large and equipped with the very latest mechanism. This room will be 38 feet in length and 10 feet in width, with a section given over for re-winding and toilets. Three machines will be installed. There will be a 160-foot throw to a 16 by 18-foot screen.

Adjoining the stage there will be eight dressing rooms for the use of the orchestra, as well as those who may be employed in connection with whatever prologues are put on.

and mezzanine or entresol promenade are indeed marvels of richness and tasty coloring. Heavy blue carpeting adds to the distinctiveness of the theatre throughout and soft gray leather seats placed 36 inches apart add to the comfort of the patrons.

The State seats exactly 2,377 persons, all seats being uniform.

The projection is furnished by three Simplex machines and all of the latest booth equipment has been provided for the operators. Spot lights are thrown upon the stage from the projection booth and from a loge in the center of the lower balcony. The stage is large enough to accommodate a very heavy setting and enough fly-scenery for a large legitimate attraction. Lowell V. Valvert, managing director of the Capitol, St. Paul, will prepare the State presentations and his ideas will be carried out by Francis J. Murray, his assistant.

C. Harry Preston, formerly house manager of the Capitol, St. Paul, and for a score of years associated with the Keith and other theatrical circuits in Pittsburgh and New York, will look after the theatre. Christ Palmquist, former manager of the Palace theatre, Superior, Wis., is Mr. Preston's assistant manager and twenty-two ushers, two directors and two superintendents and four porters attending to the guidance of patrons. A graduate nurse, in addition to two matrons, is kept at the theatre at all times.

Cashiers and pages or ushers are clothed in a costume of French in conception resembling that of the typical artists, a tamoshanter or elephant's breath colored corduroy, a blouse and belt of bluish-black corduroy and unpressed full length trousers of grey corduroy. The blouse sleeves are completed with white linen cuffs and a grey silken bow tie and Buster Brown collar and each page carries a swagger stick of mahogany. Patent leather pumps and black silk stockings complete the outfit. Directors, superintendents and porters are garbed in a dark blue uniform similar to that of a French naval officer.

The publicity for the State theatre will be handled by C. J. Bradley of the Finkelstein and Ruben forces and John LeRoy Johnston will direct the advertising and art work for the theatre. A souvenir program containing views of the theatre printed in offset within a folder of grey Castillian leather-paper embossed in gold, green and red was given away at all performances during the inaugural week.

The Incandescent Lamp for Stereopticon Service

Describing the Theory and Principles of Slide Projection

Move the lamp back and forth until the largest number of filaments are focused on the screen. With the usual type of streopticon lamp, where the filaments are bunched together around the edges of a circle, much like a slattered barrel, only a few of the filaments can be focused on the screen at one time.

Fig. 13
As Great a Number as Possible of Filaments Focused on Center of the Screen. Projection lens has been removed

When the greatest number of filaments are in focus on the screen, center the filament on the screen; if the filament images are too far to the right on the screen, move the lamp to the right; if the filament images are too low, lower the lamp.

Due to the fact that a lens (condenser) has been placed in the light beam, the images on the screen are upside down and backward; hence the need for moving the lamp in the opposite way.

Just the same as with slides, they are put in upside down and backward in order to read correctly on the screen. Most slides are "thumb marked." Standing on the right of the machine (from the rear) the slide goes in the carrier with the marker on its upper rear right hand corner. To ascertain on which corner a "thumb mark" should go, hold the slide in its normal position, i.e., with lettering reading correctly. If the left hand now grasps the lower corner of the slide between thumb and finger, the position of the left thumb will be the proper place for the thumb mark.

After the lamp is focused, and centered, bring the mirror in. Move it forward and back until the images on the screen are as clear and distinct as those from the filament. Now try to place the mirror images as near as possible between the filament images, thus evening up the

Several months ago we published a series of articles on the subject of Incandescent projection. The author was Mr. H. F. Barnes, who is also the author of the present series, which originally appeared in one of the Bulletins of the Edison Lamp Works.

Mr. Barnes has the happy faculty of combining technical knowledge to practical application, and what is of even greater importance, of stating it in simple, easy understandable language.

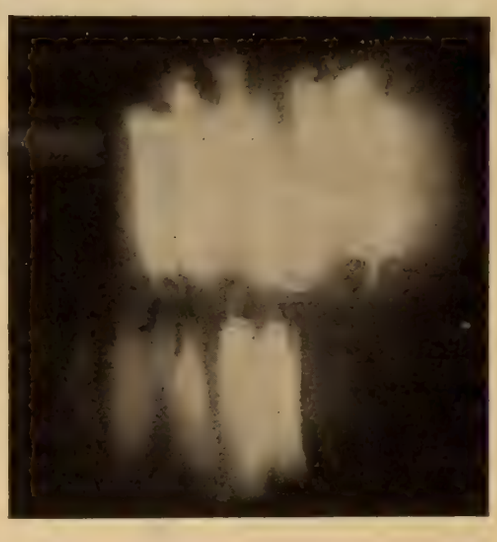

Fig. 14
The Mirror Image is Shown Here—Also focused but not placed as yet between the Filament Images light. Without a mirror or with a mirror improperly placed, the screen may be streaked. The images should mesh together in much the same manner that is possible to fit the prongs of two forks into each other.

Replace the projection lens. If mirror and lamp are so arranged that they can be moved forward and back at the same time, do so, watching screen until it appears to be the brightest. If lamp has been properly centered and mirror correctly adjusted, the illumination on the screen should be fairly uniform.

Care of Lamps

Lamps, like human beings, may not always perform as expected. It is, therefore, always wise to carry more than one lamp. Life insurance companies, for instance, by taking the length of the lives of a great many persons, can tell how long on an average, a person may expect to be in the Land of the Living. B certain people will live a lot longer than th figure; others, will come out on the small end. So with lamps. Stereopticon lamps, f example, are rated to last one hundred hou but this is an average figure. Generally, th should run much longer, but, and this is a other very important but, when used for l hours, they should not be expected to give much light as a new lamp.

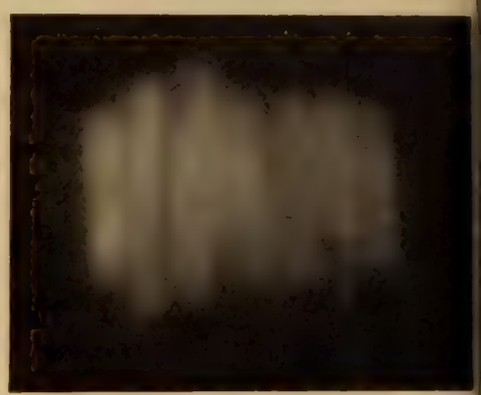

Fig. 15
The Mirror and Filament Images Have Be Intermeshed, Thus Evening up the Light Sour

Most of us know that we cannot light a 11 volt lamp from a flashlight battery, nor ev from an automobile storage battery; and wh Because, in order to bring 110-volt lamps correct brilliancy (candle-power) 110 volts mu be applied. It is not well known, however, to the difference in the light obtained in tryi to run, for example, a 120-volt lamp on a 11 volt circuit. A 120-volt lamp should preferab never be run on a circuit less than 120 vol Running it on a 110 circuit would mean a d crease in candle-power of approximately 45 p cent.

Conversely, running a 110-volt lamp on higher, for instance 120-volt circuit, will give increase in the amount and brilliancy of t light. Such a thing is often done. Of cours the life of the lamp is reduced, but where co ditions have to be met, such as a poor scree semi-darkened hall, etc., the increase in cand power due to running a lower voltage lamp a higher voltage circuit, may be desirable.

Again, the color of the light is depende upon how hot the filament is run. Running high voltage lamp on a low voltage line, whic means running the lamp at low efficiency, wi not bring the filament up to correct temper ture and, consequently, the light will be ye lowish.

Wants to Be Better Acquainted with Mazda

Corporal Thomas Napoletano, chief of projection at the Marine Barracks, Paris Island, S. C., writes:

I am a constant reader of the Frojection Department in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and I noticed in your issue of February 5 some very interesting information about the incandescent lamp for stereopticon purposes. I noticed that several months ago Mr. H. F. Barnes had articles about the incandescent lamp for motion picture projection, according to your paper, Although I have never had occasion to use this lamp for motion picture work, I am going to install a lamp of 600 watts on the Powers Projector and what I want to request of you is if it is possible for me to obtain the articles written by Mr. Barnes in regard to motion picture projection. Although I have had eight years as a projectionist I will admit that I am not very well acquainted with the Mazda lamp for motion picture projection, for my experience has been with motor generator outfits and the like, always using d.c. with the arc. One more question I would like to ask you. I understand from what information I can gather, that in using the Mazda lamp the projection lens used must be 2½ inches in diameter, and since the diameter must be one-half of the focal length of the lens, will it be necessary for me to use a size 5 E. F. lens? I am at present using a 4¾ E. F.

Any information you can give me in regard to the above will be greatly appreciated.

Reply: It may be that Mr. Barnes will have an extra copy of his article that he can loan you. Unfortunately our supply of this popular article is entirely exhausted or we would send you a set. We will ask Mr. Barnes to send you the articles if he is able.

As regards information on Mazda equipment you are no worse off than most projectionists in this country. There has been but little said on this subject by either the trade papers or the manufacturers for reasons known to all, but this will be changed shortly if the many rumors that are flying about are to be believed.

Your last question is a proper one to ask under the circumstances. As you say the physical limitations of optics practically prevent the manufacture of lenses with diameters more than half the focal length. But this does not mean that as the focal length increases the diameter of your objective will keep step with it and be at all times one-half the former. There are on the market now two sizes of lenses, known correctly as No. 1 and No. 2. The No. 1 lens has a diameter of 1¾ inches and is supplied in all focal lengths up to 8 inches focal length. The No. 2 lens is 2½ inches in diameter and can be obtained in focal lengths beginning with 5¾ inches. From these facts you can see that you cannot get a No. 2 lens for the size of picture you are projecting. However, the Mazda does not require absolutely the No. 2 lens but the gain in illumination is so pronounced through its use that most installations have purchased them as part of the incandescent equipment.

More Suggestions About Lens Focussing

Says R. E. Burnett, who writes from Danville, Ill.: In the December 18th issue of the NEWS you will recall where A. G. Smith of Dresden, Tenn., asked about focussing for different pictures. May I make a suggestion as to my opinion on the matter. I would say that the focussing would be due to the make of the machine he used, that is, if he runs a Powers projector he will have to focus each picture according to the thickness of the film. If he runs a picture at one time on Eastman stock and focuses his picture he will have to focus it again when he runs Pathe film as Pathe stock is much thicker than the Eastman product.

Now take the same case with a Simplex projector and the thickness of the film does not vary the distance of the object from the aj ture plate to the optical center in his lens, th fore any film of any thickness may be run the Simplex projector and the focus of previous picture will remain correct for pictures.

I will endeavor to explain the principle u which I base my line of reasoning. On Powers projector the tension at the apert plate is applied on the emulsion side of film; on a Simplex it is applied on the reve side of the film. Therefore on a Powers thicker the film the farther away from the c ter of focus of your lens is your object, w the reverse side remaining a positive dista from the point of focus of the lens. Then a Simplex the emulsion is at a positive tance from the point of focus of your lens the "slick" side or the film side varies as the thickness of the film which is not focus upon the screen and therefore the focus of lens does not have to be changed with the ference in the make of the film.

Reply: If Mr. Smith has a good qua sharp cutting lense it is very possible that reason outlined by the above writer is the c rect one.

A lens of excellent definition would show immediately any slight change in its worki distance. That is, the film and the screen conjugate points. A slight change in the d tance from the film to the optical center of lens would cause a much greater change in distance of the image plane.

In a cheaper lens that has not been so w corrected this condition would not show up plainly.

However, as a general rule the necessity constant refocussing is due to a movement the lens itself. If the average projectionist w watch himself he will find that he is none gentle when he places his 2,000 foot reel in upper magazine, snaps back the idlers, threa up and closes the magazine doors with a ba It takes very little of this treatment, especia if the lens rack and pinion is a bit loose, to al the lens sufficiently to affect the screen ima

Emulsion Is Bothering Again

C. M., Arizona: What is the best thing to use to prevent emulsion from new films sticking to aperture plate and springs?

Reply: There are more theatres using wax—either plain candles or one of the patented compounds—than any other method. Some projectionists have found that if the shoes are lined with thin strips of leather they have no more trouble from emulsion. Others claim that the trouble can be overcome by paying strict attention to the tension exerted by the shoes, that is, by carefully adjusting the tension during the first few runs until the heat of the arc has hardened the surface somewhat.

Questions and Their Answers

73. What are likely causes for picture jumping up and down?

Emulsion on tension shoes—too high or too low tension—vibrating machines or booth—worn intermittent.

74. What are likely causes of picture having side motion?

Too much end play in intermittent—sprockets out of line.

75. What are likely causes of film riding or jumping off of sprockets?

Pad rollers loose—emulsion deposits on sprockets—misalignment.

76. Give causes for condenser breakage.

Too high voltage for correct amperage—wrong position of arc too near condenser—draughts of air—poor ventilation in lamp house—carelessness when opening doors—poor condensers which need tempering.

77. What are likely causes for picture to be in focus on one side and out of focus on the other side?

Carbons set to one side of center of condensers. Spot not striking directly on aperture. Too small a spot. Condensors pitted. Condensors out of alignment. Oil on lenses. Loose lenses in sleeve. Screen not at right angles to projection machine. (Note—On all but last reason given, picture will not be out of focus but will have the same appearance, owing to the fact that light is not properly distributed on screen.) Most common reason for poor projection which would look as if lens was out is arc flame too close or too far removed from aperture or improper set.

78. If sprocket holes show on either side of the picture, what are the possible causes?

Intermittent sprocket out of alignment with other sprockets, teeth of sprocket worn, tension shoes worn uneven and with one side not gripping the film at its top. Occasionally film printed out of the center of the strip, and on old film sprocket holes out or splintered on one side.

79. If picture lacks definition, what are the possible causes?

Poor focus—cheap lens—dirty screen—insufficient illumination—dirty films and poorly developed film.

80. How should magazines be lined up?

Most magazines have an adjusting screw which allows of their being moved one way or the other to bring them directly in alignment with the film-way. A straight-edge can be used to see that the lineup is perfect.

81. Is there a particular blade or shutter that covers the lense while the film is in motion? If so, which one? What is the function of the extra blade or blades?

The cover blade—it is the one stamped with the name of the maker. The other blades are flicker or compensating blades. They are used to even up the dark periods, thereby tending to prevent flicker.

82. From the carbon crater to the screen where does the greatest loss of light occur?

Before the first condenser lens commences to function, that is, in the light source.

83. What is the function of condensors?

Condensors are a collecting lens—only.

84. What is the function of objective lense?

Objectives are really magnifiers.

85. Give detail explanation of why a picture is in focus, and why it is out of focus.

A picture is in focus when all points of the object assume corresponding points in the image. In other words when a point in the object is brought to a point in the image plane. It can also be said that a picture is in focus when the image as thrown by the objective is reflected by a screen placed at one of the conjugate points of the lens.

A picture is out of focus at all other times. There are but two conjugate points—the film itself is at one and the screen must be at the other.

86. What causes most of the scratches on film known as rain?

Scratches known as rain on a film are caused by holding the end of the film and turning the reel in order to tighten the film after it is in place on the reel, a proper tension should be placed on the film during winding in order that the above may not be necessary.

Camera Laboratory Picture Making Studio Technique

The View Finder on the Akeley Camera

The method by which the inventor of the Akeley Camera has made it possible for the cameraman to view his film image in its exact proportions is interesting both from the optical and mechanical viewpoints. The illustrations used in this article were taken from patent specifications No. 1,310,776, which cover this particular feature of the camera.

The Akeley, as most cameramen know, is a double lens instrument. That is, there is one lens directing the light to the film surface and another matched lens which directs the light to the view finder, a feature of the Akeley.

Under ordinary conditions there would be a slight difference in the field covered by the two lenses due to the offset of the finder lens with respect to the main lens. For the usual run of outdoor work and particularly in news stuff this could be neglected or compensated for with sufficient precision, but accurate work such as studio production requires exact measurements. In the Akeley this is carried out by an ingeniously arranged set of prisms.

For normal operation the arrangement is as shown in Fig. 1. The light passes in through the lens marked 22 to the film, which passes down through the opening 24. The prism 23 is placed directly back of the film, but is not brought into play because of the fact that the second prism 25 fills the opening 26 and makes it light tight.

But supposing that the cameraman wanted to investigate his film image to see if his lens was covering the field in all directions. He could sight through the eye-piece 7 and through the matched lens 21, but the field as he would see it there would not correspond in its horizontal dimensions with that of the lens 22. Another more accurate method is provided for his use.

He can move the lever marked 29 against the action of the spring 30 (see Fig. 2). This action brings the second prism across the light ray of secondary lens 21, but at the same time makes it possible for the light rays which enter through the film lens 22 to pass through the film, through the first prism, then to the second prism, and from there to the ocular or eye-piece. The cameraman thus sees the image just as it will be impressed on the film. Only the single frame of film will be destroyed.

As soon as his study of the field has been completed the spring holding the second prism automatically carries it back to its normal position as a light-seal back of the film gate.

Reward Offered for Stolen Pathe Camera

SOMETIME during the night of January 31, thieves broke into the studio at 517 West 54th street, occupied by the Labor Film Service, and got away with a Pathe Camera and many accessories owned by William Reinhart, well-known cameraman of New York. In the hope that the thieves may be caught, Mr. Reinhart has offered $100 reward for information that will lead to the return of his property. The camera was a No. 1 Pathe with a serial number of 1135. The accessories stolen include amongst many other things, a Kraus Zeiss F 4.5 lens numbered 108023; an automatic dissolving shutter, a Pathe finder, a Goetz Iris and Vignette and a mask slide in the camera on the left side.

Mr. Reinhart may be reached either through the NEWS or direct to 306 West 54th street, New York, N. Y.

New American Firm Making Dye Sensitizers

The Steen-Bleyer Chemical Company, Inc. with laboratory at Ridgefield Park, N. J., has been formed for the manufacture of photographic dye sensitizers and other related chemical products. Mr. Steen is well known throughout the industry through his association with the Bay State Film Company and the Wilart Camera.

The new firm is specializing at the present time in the preparation of pinacynol and of various dyes for color filters. Its pinacynol is said to be far ahead of the German pre-war product being completely soluble in water as well as in alcohol. The price, too, is said to be well under that of the foreign product.

Rothacker Tries Out Automatic Printers

The new Bell & Howell automatic printer was hailed as a marvel in the Rothacker Chicago laboratory after it had been given a thorough tryout in the printing room.

"The new printer is a splendid tribute to the inventive genius of the Bell & Howell technical staff," said Watterson R. Rothacker. "The motion picture industry will benefit tremendously as a result of their achievement."

J. H. McNabb, general manager of the Bell & Howell Company, was at the Rothacker plant to view a screening of First National releases printed on the working model of the new automatic.

"What I have just seen on the silver screen is most gratifying," said Mr. McNabb. "I really think the new automatic shows up much better in screen results than the present type of machine.

The machine in the Rothacker printing room is the working model. We wanted to try it out under actual laboratory working conditions. This test has been so successful that we shall proceed at once with the production of the automatic on a large scale, with a view to having the new printer on the market in three months."

"The new machine is all that 'automatic' implies," continued Mr. McNabb. "It will do everything except thread itself. After the girl threads the negative and positive and starts the printer, she can sit back in her chair until it is time to repeat the process. The new printer automatically makes all the light changes, eliminating the former hazard of the operator missing a scene entirely. It will even make a light change for a scene as short as six inches. It has a capacity of 105 light changes. One of the negative rolls tried out on the automatic called for 104 changes of the printing light.

"The automatic operates at a speed fifty per cent over the present printer, yet it makes a six-inch light change with perfect precision. The new printer will mean a reduction in laboratory costs, because two automatics and two operators will in the future turn out the work of three of the present machines and three operators."

of the Association of Motion Picture and Musical Interests.

Of course, in the consideration of the mere player in the orchestra, who reads his music and follows the conductor's baton, with no hope or desire of becoming something bigger and more prominent—this does not apply. One reads music the same, whether it be in the opera house or the private musicale. But in the selection of the scores, the making of programs, the arrangement of tempo, the color, orchestral balance and ensemble, synchronization of film and music, etc., there arises the need for specialized development.

How are the musicians of tomorrow to be prepared for the opportunities of the new channel of art possibilities in the film theatre, if he is not given a thorough grounding in the psychology of the "picture in music?" Touching upon the question, Ernest Voigt, of the Boston Music Company, a very scholarly gentleman, a Harvard graduate, a student of conditions, urged at the meetings of the Picture-Music Association, that the conservatories and music schools of the country, instal a department of motion picture instruction. The matter was one which offered little argument and was made immediately into a resolution. Almost instantly, the Eastman School of Music (a $5,000,000 institution of Rochester) through its director, Alf Klingenberg, announced that it would answer the call, by inaugurating the idea, through lectures by authorities and such other experimental work as might seem requisite. . . . Discussion brought forth the fact that the Bartola Company has a school for picture organists, that there are a few little institutions now giving courses—but the big conservatories must be shown the need for their active participation.

The psychology of picture music, calls for a dramatic instinct, an appreciation of the leit-motif plan of scoring, a wide knowledge of programmatic music and a willingness to adapt the classical to the needs of the theatre, without lessening the dignity and prestige of the masters.

In my concerts, ever since I could speak and how much more than a quarter of a century that is, I'm not revealing, I have been treating music in the way which is now being reversed in the picture idea.

In my theory of musical development, I have eliminated the technical and have considered music for the larger crowd purely in its human aspects. Music for the layman (not the musician) is happy or sad, exciting or calm, tragic or comic—and as many other variations of emotions and shades of feeling as you care to delineate. Music tells a story, shows a picture, reveals a mood. It is more eloquent than words, because it tells everything in a flash. (At Ellis Island, for the immigrants, I made this point: The man who was building the Tower of Babel should have used a violin and all would have understood; just as today, twenty-five languages fail where a single phrase of music unite this in conglomerate mass.) In my Globe concerts, the thing which has made them successful and has brought the millions to listen and grow enthusiastic over the classics, the plan I have given them to see the story in the music.

The musician who is to understand motion picture phychology must be able to see the picture in all music, to classify each phrase and movement according to those pictures, moods, descriptions. It is all rot that this process is making program music of all the pure music. Even the purest of the pure, creates a definite sensation, atmosphere or emotion. If it doesn't, it isn't music but mathematics! Therefore, in the development of the picture musician, he must first grasp this theory, and then he must apply it by the reverse method to the screen presentations. He must be able to play for each changing situation on the screen, the music which fits the picture!

After this has been caught, the biggest lesson is learned. But there is more—and the information which is to make the film musician, is worthy of the serious study by the serious musician.

Opera will continue, the symphony organizations will grow and develop. But the film world is calling for a new kind of composer, conductor and interpreter—and they may not lower the old classic standards, but seek to raise them—indeed yes, to raise them.

News Notes of Theatre Construction

Marcus Loew, Mr. Bonright and G. J. Fleischmann, all of New York, were in Buffalo last week, inspecting the work on the new Loew State theatre, now being constructed on Washington street, with entrance from Main. Mr. Fleischmann is head of the firm of Fleischmann & Co., whose headquarters are in New York. After looking over the progress of the construction work, it was agreed that the theatre can be opened early in July. The completion of this enterprise will mark the beginning of a new Loew theatre in Niagara Falls on Third street. It is declared that the Buffalo State theatre will be one of the largest and most attractive in the extensive Loew chain.

The Lyric theatre has closed its doors for all time and housewreckers have commenced to raze the structure to make way for the new $1,500,000 New Lafayette Square theatre, which will be built on its site by M. Slotkin and associates. The new theatre which will be part of a ten story office building, will have a seating capacity of 3,500. The policy will be pictures and vaudeville. A total of $2,500,000 will be spent on the building. Officers of the Monument Theatre Company erecting the new theatre are: president, Solomon Jacobson; vice president and general manager, Morris Slotkin; secretary, J. Rosing, treasurer, I. Golding. According to Mr. Slotkin the largest girders ever used in construction work in Buffalo will support the balcony. Each will be 112 feet in length and 7 feet 10 inches in height, weighing more than 70 tons. The Family theatre at Washington street and Broadway, was also recently razed to make way for the big building.

A new motion picture theatre opens in San Diego, Cal., on or about Feb. 19th, to bear the name of the Rialto. Owning it are Carl E. Lundquist and Al G. Edwards. Mr. Lundquist, who will be the manager, was formerly manager of amusements at Coronado Tent City, a popular resort across the bay from San Diego. Mr. Edwards at one time was the owner of the Superba theatre, now one of the chain of Bush theatres. The Rialto has a seating capacity of 800, is equipped with two Powers 6-A machines and a Silvernitro curtain. The installation of the equipment, including the seating arrangements, was done by the Southern Electrical Company of this city under the direction of Claude O. Seaman, manager of the motion picture department of the company. It is planned to handle First National pictures, and to operate from 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. daily.

Talk about your crime waves; why, the whole City of Tampa, Fla. has been captured by Pirates. King Gasparilla, and his band of blood thirsty Pirates, sailed up the Bay last Monday, and the Mayor delivered the City over to them, without a struggle.

This annual pageant, combined with the South Florida Mid-Winter Fair, has kept Tampa playing to capacity for ten full days. The theatres all report excellent business, in spite of the great opposition.

Mr. C. D. Cooley, who operates the three largest Theatres in the City, saw a chance to put over a "stunt" picture. He engaged the world famous fliers, three in number, who are the feature attraction at the Fair, for the week.

With the Camera Man in one plane, and the other two ahead, a race thru the air was staged, with all the stunts known to aviators, shown on the trip of nearly seventy miles, to Belleair, the famous West Coast resort. C. S. Jensen, senior member of the firm of Jensen and Von Herberg has announced his attention of obtaining season leases on all possible films. This, he believes, would make it impossible for persons to wait but two or three days after a production's first run at first run prices to see the same picture at a neighborhood house for 10 or 15 cents.

The Manhattan trio, male singers who enjoyed seven weeks run at the Liberty theatre, Portland, are now appearing at Art Laflar's "Grand Theatre," Salem, Ore. The trio will go to Ashland, Ore., now where they will sing in one of the George Hunt houses.

Mr. Luckett is one of the best known theatrical men in the United States and for many years was manager of one of the leading theatres in Washington, D. C.

New Orleans and the Fair Grounds tracks have been selected as the scenes for one of the greatest racing dramas ever put on the screen, larger and better even than "Checkers," according to Richard Stanton, noted director of the Fox Film Corporation, who produced "Checkers" as a photoplay and who arrived last week with a company of about thirty film actors and actresses of the Fox Company from New York, who are to appear in the new turf play.

The players expect to remain in New Orleans about two weeks, making all the exteriors for the photo-play in and around the city. Mr. Stanton will stage his own horse race for the picture at the Fair Grounds track and he stated that the public is invited to attend the filming of the play and to witness the horse race that will provide a stirring climax of the picture's dramatic action. This invitation will give New Orleans folks an opportunity to see how movie pictures are produced and also to participate as members of the crowd at the race track.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

" His Fiery Beat "

(Sunshine Comedy—Fox—Two Reels)

THIS is largely a burlesque on a combination fire and police department, well directed, filled with good comedy types, and sufficient for average entertainment in any theatre. There are no outstanding thrills, but the picture ends with a pursuit over several miles of Hollywood boulevards, during which a Ford turns corners very precariously, and skids about in several circles.

Careful selection of the members of the fire department are responsible for some of the entertainment. They are fat and lean, tall and short. They are shown at rescue drill and at official inspection. They change very quickly into the police department, and when the body of the inevitable Ford is hoisted upwards and hanged to a patrol wagon body, the metamorphosis of the department is complete.

Bathing girls fill a brief space in the picture but do nothing besides romp about the beach in typical Sunshine fashion. Bobby Dunn is the Police-Fire chief and Olive Dale supplies the necessary amount of feminine beauty.

A shot taken above a man as he executes a high dive into a lake is a clever novelty and affords a much greater thrill than a long shot of the same scene.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

" Something to Worry About "

(Chester Outing-Educational—One Reel)

IF you think your patrons will care to see views of Yellowstone Park clad in its winter mantle, here's one that will surely interest them, for the cameraman has made a round trip of this celebrated recreational reserve and hasn't missed a geyser or spring of any note.

The reel opens with some interesting scenes of the falls and then shifts to some views of the Yellowstone river.

Interest is aroused when travelers are seen emerging from their huts on skis prepared for the winter jaunt. The cameraman follows the adventurers along the trail and into the woods, in what might be called God's country, until they emerge at an opening and we see in the distance the wonderful springs and geysers for which the park is noted.

The cameraman now shows his grit and brings his instrument as closely as possible to the latter and in a series of pretty close-ups and long shots shows the spectator all he wants to know of these peculiarities of nature.

They gush and fizzle until they look like safety valves or percolators indulging in blowouts and when the travelers place their eggs in the water and ask one another how they will have them—boiled or scrambled—the spectator knows that what he has read about is true, for the waters boil to a strong heat.

A few views of the bear and deer in their winter haunts are also shown.—FRANK LEONARD.

" The Unhappy Finish "

(Mack Sennett Comedy-Paramount)

IT is a good "take-off" on the "fillum" business which Mack Sennett has concocted here in "The Unhappy Finish." He burlesques the executive end where the stars are hired and where the efficiency expert runs things according to the figures in his head and the figures of the aspirants to fame and fortune. Charles Murray is one of the magnates. His partner missed our identification. But Ford Sterling is easily spotted. Also Harriet Hammond and Phyllis Haver. A breath of hokum keeps the comedy going for a small amount of footage. Then the pretty aspirant comes on the scene and Murray has a busy time avoiding his wife and attempting to keep a date with the would-be star. The Sennett kid on his velocipede and the Great Dane enter into the festivities. It is a merry bit of jazz this comedy-one filled with some good gags and some nearly as good. Ford Sterling and Charles Murray supply the laughter. — Length 2 Reels. — LAURENCE REID.

" The Lion Hunters "

(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—Fox—One-Half Reel)

THIS is another good cartoon of Bud Fisher's two funny folk. Besides a good comedy idea, the lions in the picture, and there are many of them, are cleverly and naturally drawn.

Mutt and Jeff are lion hunters, but Mutt does all the hunting. Jeff is a decoy—hung from a tree, just out of the animal's reach. Mutt unfortunately falls asleep and the little fellow is in a pretty had predicament when the lions come and begin leaping up at him. A bird steals the gun from the sleeping Mutt and drops it into Jeff's hands, who is thus able to kill the score or so of lions who have surrounded him. The antics of the wild beasts constitute animation of the highest type. It is a worth while comic in every respect.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

" The Waiting Maid "

(Universal)

A VERY pleasing comedy with Dorothy Wolbert and Eddie Barry playing the leading roles. These two comedians indulge in many comedy situations and act as splendid foils for one another.

Barry as the eccentric minister plays his part in a droll sort of way, getting plenty of comedy out of the scenes in which he appears and this coupled with the short snappy action of the star, Miss Wolbert, puts over many scenes that would certainly fail in the hands of less competent actors.

All of which means that this is one of Dorothy Wolbert's best comedies. Not that it scintillates with funny situations but that it has a good logical story which explodes at intervals and then runs along in an interesting vein between the big moments.

The comedy is well directed and the star is supported by a cast of good comedians.

"The Waiting Maid" should interest and give good satisfaction wherever played.—FRANK LEONARD.

" Hiking the Alps "

(Kineto Review No. 42—Urban)

CONCERNING Swiss Boy Scouts, and proving that boys in any land are, after all, only boys. Would be particularly pleasing to a Saturday afternoon audience, and if followed by Review No. 43, "How the Swiss Boy Scout Spends His Vacation," the line up would possibly be composed of boys from all neighborhoods within reach.

Starting from the Federal City of Berne, the President of the Swiss Republic looks the boys over and pronounces them fitted to depart upon their journey hiking the Alps. They manifest decided interest in all interesting points, especially the St. Bernard dogs. They are well trained little soldiers and when time comes to travel on, pack up and make leave like veterans. Then in the sequel, the older heads in charge begin to exact character and stature-building tasks from the boys, but believing all along they are playing, instead of working, they accomplish wonders. They help in the poultry yards, reconstruct a fallen bridge, cut wood and become generally useful as well as healthful. The usual excellent photography identified with Urban subjects prevails.—LILLIAN GALE.

" Voices of the Sea "

(Bruice Scenic—Educational)

WE have seen many views of the sea during our lives, some of which were impressive and others—just ordinary, with nothing to attract or draw the eye.

When Robert C. Bruice takes up the megaphone and directs his cameraman in a scenic one may be sure to find something in it which will remain fixedly in the memory.

And so it is with "Voices of the Sea." This one reeler is nothing more or less than a series of interesting views of the sea and the surrounding landscape.—FRANK LEONARD.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the last sixteen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to October 30, 1920.

French Film Men In Arms Over Heavy Taxation

ENFIN! Voilà assez de chinoiseries! which being rendered into plain, if somewhat vulgar English, is not an attack on the Chinese, as might at first sight be supposed, but merely the French Moving Picture Directors' way of telling the French government to put an end to its "monkey business" and to stop treating their business like a pariah among the national industries! Yes, the French Moving Picture trade is smarting under a long outstanding grievance to which I have already called attention. This grievance is nothing less than the heavy system of taxation under which they are penalized and which they assert is throttling them. After submitting passively until now, they realize that the time has at last come when resistance is imperative to prevent them from sinking under the burden of taxation which is eating up their meagre profits and threatening them with bankruptcy. Here are the facts of the case in a nutshell: The French government, persuaded that the Motion Picture Industry is an extremely lucrative proposition, in the sense that the cost of production is out of all proportion with the receipts therefrom, has decreed a special system of taxation for all Motion Picture theatres in France. This tax amounts to as much as 35 per cent. of the gross receipts, and is divided up between the state and the Poor Relief Fund. Along comes now the Paris municipality waving the text of a law passed last year authorizing them to levy a further tax attaining as much as 50 per cent. of the amount of the state tax according to locality, thus bringing the combined tax in certain cases to 40 per cent. of the receipts. This was, however, the last straw. Stung into action by the memory of past wrongs and threatened with what they consider a further injustice, the Paris Moving Picture Directors called a meeting of protest on Saturday last and the following resolutions were voted: That Motion Picture theatres should be placed on the same footing of tax assessment as the legitimate theatres—that is with a 6 per cent. tax; that a parliamentary statute should be granted them recognizing their existence and public utility and further that a group should be organized in parliament for the protection and advancement of the entire moving picture industry. Failing redress the directors threatened to close down their houses. The situation at present is stationary. Meanwhile the government has fallen and until the new minister of finance has been allowed to assume his functions no action can be expected. But the directors are marshalling their forces for the conflict which they do not intend to shirk. Facts and figures are being brought to prove that the charge of excessive profits which is supposed to explain the heavy taxation, is a myth. Here are some of the figures: The charge for seats has been raised between 180 and 300 per cent., but the cost of living has increased in Paris by 445 per cent. The increase in the price of seats in the legitimate theatre amounts to 280 per cent., but in the picture houses to 266 per cent. But, the theatres pay only 6 per cent. tax, while the pictures contribute over 30, and are threatened with more. And as regards working expenses and cost of production: The lighting bill which in 1914 totalled 1,000 francs now totals 5,000; three feet of film which then cost a quarter of a franc now costs a franc and a quarter; and as a result whereas French films were 63 per cent. of the country's total, they have now fallen to 13 per cent, and as the majority of imported films come from America where the exchange is more than three times above normal, it is difficult to see, assert the directors, the justification for such excessive taxes on the alleged grounds of large profits. Supporters of the government tax have further added fuel to the fire of the directors' wrath and indignation by suggesting that the moving picture is after all a form of luxury and not a genuine utilitarian form of business. To which the motion picture representatives reply by pointing to the amazing development of the industry in other countries, especially in America, where it holds such a prominent rank among the nation's industries. Others similarly unkindly disposed pile on the abuse by hinting that the motion picture is not morally free from blemish and that numerous are the films calculated to corrupt the ideals of the youth of the country, etc. But the picture men refute this charge with ease by calling attention to the moral laxity of the present day French stage, where liberty is synonymous with license and the nude and the vicious are openly flaunted before the spectators. Thus the controversy goes on. Personally I do not for a moment believe that the picture theatres in Paris or anywhere else in France will carry out their threat to close down. On the other hand the seriousness of the situation from the point of view of the proprietors and of all those engaged in the motion picture game cannot be denied. Something will have to be done and done quickly to remedy a condition of things which has become financially intolerable.

Apart, however, from the justifiable complaint of the French theatre directors, there is no getting away from the fact that the whole motion picture business in France is far from attaining that progress and development which are being registered in other countries, notably in America, England, Italy and even Germany. The French complain that the home industry is, if not in a retrograde state, at least at a standstill, which properly analyzed, comes to the same thing, according to all the laws and principles of sound business. The prime and most obvious cause of this lack of progress and underdevelopment is undoubtedly the tightness and scarcity of money. Picture producers in France complain that they are unable to turn out films, either as regards quality or quantity that will compare even favorably with those of the foreign market. Here again America is cited as the chief offender in setting a standard that cannot be attained in France. Without money they state it is impossible to build suitable studios or acquire the requisite equipment. The result is that the public favor foreign films because of their obvious superiority in technique and finish. There is, however, another handicap under which all films in France are suffering. This is the scarcity of theatres. In the whole of France in 1914 there were 1,500 houses where pictures were shown. To-day, after seven years, the total is only 1,800. It has been figured out, however, that the cost of production for a film to-day has increased six-fold. It will therefore be readily seen that the French film producer is in need of a far greater number of screens than the country possesses if he is to reap returns corresponding with the cost of production. Thus it comes about that in seeking a remedy for this unsatisfactory state of affairs French producers have begun openly a campaign of agitation against the foreign film which they maintain should be penalized with additional import duty and in order to force proprietors of theatres to give preference to French films, an additional tax of from 3 to 6 per cent has been proposed on all programs not including a certain length of French produced film. This form of protection, however, is recognized as a dangerous weapon with a double edge and as reprisals would most likely not be long in forthcoming from other countries there is good reason to believe that the project will be abandoned. Another form of protection aimed especially at American films is the project of a Latin union between France and Italy whereby each each party should pledge itself not to purchase films from other countries except after previous consultation together. It is even stated that one of the principal French distributing houses has signed a contract on these lines with a large Italian concern, but I have been unable so far to obtain confirmation of this report.

But in spite of the wailings and moanings of the French trade their production list continues to mantain a good level, both as regards quantity and quality. I have figured out that there are either ready or in course of production, some fifty films, many of which can be classed as both commercially and artistically certain of success. Among these may be mentioned "The Wheel," a sensational film depicting the life of modern railroad, produced by the famous Frenchman, Abel Gance, the same who produced "J'accuse," "Phroso," from the novel of Anthony Hope, now being produced in the south of France by another eminent producer, Louis Mercanton, and in which one of the most sensational scenes is the interior of the famous Cafe de Paris, at Monte Carlo; the leading role in "Phroso" is played by the American actress, Malvia Longfellow, a direct descendant of the poet. Others include "Atlantide," with Napierkowska; "The Agony of the Eagles," founded on the famous Napoleonic incidents; "The Three Musketeers" and "Robinson Crusoe." This last is now being produced by the Monat Film Co., of Paris, in Sicily. The scenario is taken from the work of Defoe is in two episodes of 5,000 feet each. The first episode is enacted in England and centers around a pretty little love story between Crusoe and a young English girl. The scene is then transferred to the famous island where Crusoe meets with those wonderful adventures which we all delighted in as children. I understand that the production of this film is on a very lavish scale. It was begun in December last and is expected to be finished in March. New York is likely to see it soon after.

Sam Taylor "Gag Man" with Harold Lloyd

Sam Taylor is the latest addition to the Hal Roach comedy forces on the Coast, and is responsible for the scenario of "Now or Never," the three-reel Harold Lloyd comedy which will be released on March 13 by Associated Exhibitors through Pathe Exchanges, Inc.

This is Lloyd's first three-reel comedy and one filled with gags from beginning to end. Mr. Taylor, in addition to writing the scenario, served as "gag man" during the production of the picture. The picture is claimed to set a record for clever and original comedy stunts, a great many of which take place on a railroad sleeper.

Mr. Taylor entered the picture industry as a film editor for the old Kalem company, and was responsible for many of the familiar Ham and Bud slapstick comedies. He has also written continuity for Harry Morey, Bessie Love and Alice Calhoun, and previous to joining the Harold Lloyd company, was a director of Century comedies.

The series of Nick Carter pictures is made up of fifteen two-reelers, and is taking hold in every section of the country, declares a statement from Pioneer.

"THE SAPHEAD"
(Metro)

Rather Spotted, But Provides Some Good Entertainment

WINCHELL SMITH'S invasion of the photoplay producing field as a "personal supervisor" hasn't set the world on fire. "The Saphead," an adaptation of Mr. Smiths stage play, "The New Henrietta," isn't a photoplay, like "The Fortune Hunter" or "Lightnin'." It will just about slide by as good entertainment, principally because Buster Keaton succeeds in making his "saphead" character likeable and most of the time humorous and because some very good farce comedy gags in the latter part of the offering have been provided.

The principal fault with the production lies in the fact that it is neither hay nor grass." The dramatic basis plot of the play is given considerable development. In between times they pay attention to the comedy, which is rather on the slapstick order. Buster plays his comedy role and the rest of the cast, including the co-star, William H. Crane, stick to drama. The result is a picture that is neither farce comedy or a serious production.

However, the picture does provide some good laughs, the production is very good throughout, and both Mr. Crane and Buster have roles for which they are eminently fitted.

The story of "The Saphead" concerns a Wall Street king, Mr. Crane; his "saphead" son, Buster; a daughter married to a crooked broker who tries to ruin him, and a foster daughter with whom the son is in love. Most of the real comedy is provided by a scene supposed to be on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, in which the "saphead" buys the stock being sold by order of the crooked son-in-law, without knowing that in so doing he is saving the family fortune.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Saphead," starring Buster Keaton and William H. Crane, is to be the feature photoplay offering at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' showing beginning ————.

The picture is recommended for those who enjoy the clean comedy drama founded on a clever idea, that has been faultlessly acted not only by the co-stars but by the entire supporting cast. The story of "The Saphead" tells how Buster as the "saphead" son of a Wall street king foils the crooked broker who has planned to ruin the family fortunes and also wins the girl of his heart.

The picture is an adaptation of Winchell Smith's "The New Henrietta." Mr. Smith, who is America's most prominent playwright and author of such successes as "The Fortune Hunter," "Three Wise Fools," etc., personally supervised the filming of the production.

Besides Mr. Crane and Buster Keaton are such well known players as Irving Cummings and Edward Connelly. The production which Metro has given "The Saphead" ranks with the really big pictures of the year. Several big sets, among which is an exact reproduction of the New York stock exchange are provided.

PROGRAM READER

For the feature picture to be shown for a ———— days' run beginning ———— the ———— theatre will present "The Saphead," a comedy drama of American big business and romance in which Buster Keaton and William H. Crane, one of the most distinguished actors of either the stage or screen, are co-starred.

"The Saphead" is the sort of picture that young and old of all audiences really like, just pleasant entertainment with a likeable set of characters providing plenty of laughs, with no unpleasant sex theme to be solved or intricate problems to be worked out.

Mr. Keaton plays the role of a "saphead" son of a New York stock exchange king (Mr. Crane). The co-stars are supported by a strong cast among which are such well known players as Irving Cummings and Edward Connelly. The story of "The Saphead" has to do with a plot to ruin the Wall street operator and how it was frustrated by the "saphead." It is a picture of "big business" and big laughs.

SUGGESTIONS

We would bill the author, Winchell Smith, the co-stars and the title about even, stressing the comedy angles as much as possible. The character of "the saphead," played by Keaton is such that it could be nicely doubled as a "ballyhoo." For presentation ideas we refer you to a page of the Service Bureau describing the prologue which is being staged at the Capitol theatre this week.

CATCH LINES

Yep, Buster is a "saphead" in this but he saved the family fortune even if he didn't know that he was doing it.

His girl was due to arrive at the Grand Central at 6:30 so the "saphead" waited until 3:00 G. M. at the Pennsylvania before he made up his mind that somebody had made a mistake.

He was nobody home, saphead, boob, and plain dumbell but his fool luck held good and when his crooked brother-in-law tried to double-cross the family, he saved the day.

"PARTNERS OF FATE"
(Fox)

A Good Average Program Attraction

IT'S really too bad that a picture like "Partners of Fate" shouldn't have received better treatment. Like many more of its kind, to use a technical term, it starts off like a million dollars and then drops down to a common level, until the last few scenes, when a killing is resorted to in order to revive it and make a strong finish.

And this brings up the old question, "Why will story writers or scenario writers persist in the time worn idea of inventing splendid introductions and endings, only to let the rest of the tale drift along in a mediocre way, to take care of itself as best it can.

"Partners of Fate" has a rather novel introduction in that two couples are married at the same altar and start on their honeymoon together on the same boat.

The scenes on the boat are rather amusing, and when a steward is introduced with the healthy caption, "One who believes himself to be the real cause why girls leave home," the spectator is apt to settle himself in his chair and expect a delightful evening's entertainment.

But right here the plot takes the usual twist; a shipwreck occurs, causing a mixup of husbands and wives, who land on the usual tropical island to go through a series of scenes of the usual variety. To give the plot action the couples land on different parts of the island with a crew from the ship. One of the couples remain faithful to their vows, while the other, for contrast, indulges in wild love making, the steward turning out to be a despicable villain.

The usual ship arrives and carries away the unfaithful couple, leaving the others to die. They don't and live to triumph over the others.

"Partners of Fate" is a good average program picture. It should have received better treatment.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

THE CAST

Helen Meriless	Louise Lovely
John Fraser	William Scott
Frances Lloyd	Rosemary Theby
Byron Millard	Philo McCullough
Purser	George Sigmann
Bill Ricketts	Richard Cummings
Baby	Eileen O'Malley

Story by Stephen Chalmers.
Scenario by Robert Dillon.
Directed by Bernard During.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Partners of Fate," the latest Fox production featuring that delightful actress, Louise Lovely, will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of next ————.

The story is rather novel in that two couples are married at the same altar and set out on their honeymoons together only to be shipwrecked when the boat is disabled off the shore of a tropical island.

And then one of the most peculiar tales ever written begins, for the couples are mixed up in the wild confusion, each receiving the other's husband and wife.

The story becomes more exciting when one of the couples, forgetting their vows, indulge in wild love-making while for contrast the other remains faithful to the ones they love.

And while all this is passing before the eyes of the spectators, we wonder what is foremost in their minds?

Do they forgive the offending pair for their unfaithfulness? Are they thrilled at the finish when the unfaithful wife kills the unfaithful husband? You, Mr. Reader, should become a spectator and judge for yourself.

The production is excellently directed, has some enhancing exteriors and is acted by a splendid cast, including William Scott, Rosemary Theby, Philo McCullough, George Seigmann, Richard Cummings and Eileen O'Malley.

PROGRAM READER

"Partners of Fate," which will be shown at this theatre on next ————, is a story of extraordinary strength with an extraordinary role; and to this role Louise Lovely measures fully.

The story by Stephen Chalmers concerns four well-intentioned young people who gamble in the same game of matrimony and find themselves the winners of uncongenial mates. A ship upon which all are traveling is wrecked and in the confusion each husband finds himself cast up on a lonely island with the other fellow's wife.

Here's a state of things which brings out all the best and worst qualities of the group—with the survival of the fittest the natural outcome of various perils and temptations, in situations strongly dramatic.

As the loyal wife of a man with whom she had nothing in common and through the trying experiences of an enforced sojourn on a lonely island in the South Seas with the man she idolized and who she knew loved her, Miss Lovely rises to dramatic heights that make her characterization a constant delight.

Stephen Chalmers, who has contributed more than one classic to the screen, is the author of this gripping tale.

SUGGESTIONS

This production has good direction, a fair story with plenty of interest cropping out here and there and a fairly good cast in the principal roles.

You can advertise it as strongly as you wish without any fear of a comeback, provided you do not lay too much stress on any particular angle.

You might excite interest in your town papers if you stress the unfaithful angle which is one of the principal points in the story, and then for contrast run a series of short stuff on the faithful angle.

Also be sure and run as many catch lines as you can on the story, for they will certainly attract.

Play up the cast and after mentioning the star, do not fail to mention Rosemary Theby, who does some wonderful acting throughout.

CATCH LINES

See Louise Lovely in her latest Fox production, "Partners of Fate." It is a picture showing how fate shuffles the cards in the game of life.

If you want to see a picture which will make you think, go and see Louise Lovely in her latest Fox production, "Partners of Fate," which will appear at the ———— theatre.

"A laugh-getting Arbuckle comedy which played to good business for one week with an increased attendance the last part of the engagement." "Fine picture. Splendid business. Excellent entertainment. The kind of show it's a pleasure to run. Everybody comes into the theatre expecting to have a good time and go out happy." "Fair picture, fair business. Some thought it great, but it is a question whether or not the public wants Arbuckle in long features." "Good picture as far as entertaining value goes, but did only average business during run."

Exhibitor Comment—"The title's enough to bring all the women. It's thrilling and surprising, but never offensive. Good business at two simultaneous first-run houses." "Fair picture; did average business three days." Just fair. Didn't do anything remarkable, just cleared expenses. As a picture it's awful; as a box-office attraction it just manages to get by." "Failed to draw after big advertising campaign. Louise Glaum's name is not a box-office getter."

"Best picture Douglas Fairbanks ever made. We have had such big business during its two weeks run that we are holding it over for a third week." "Very good picture to fine business." Had crowded houses during run." "Brought out all the Douglas Fairbanks admirers and then some. It went over big and in the estimation of most people who saw it, it is the best thing Doug has ever done." "One of the best Fairbanks pictures in a long time. Drew capacity houses during its two week's run." "Sure did go over great. Packed houses each performance. Box office receipts very satisfying."
Consensus—"Excellent picture, big puller."

"GOD'S GOOD MAN"
(Stoll Film Corp.)

A Poor Production From All Angles

"GOD'S GOOD MAN" is ten years behind the times. In fact it hasn't one redeeming feature, unless it be a few pretty exteriors, which would place it on a par with any of the ordinary program pictures of today.

The story, the continuity, the subtitles, the acting, the action and especially the lightings and sets, remind us of the early days when the General Film Company was bidding for popularity.

For instance, the story which was written by Marie Corelli and deals with the elite and "simple country folk" is so jumpy that it is decidedly difficult to follow, the director giving entirely too much footage to unnecessary scenes.

To be concise, in one scene where the heroine has met with an accident we see the young lady being carried on a stretcher down a steep flight of stairs and up a lane with all the solemnity of a funeral; in another the hero and heroine have a long drawn argument as to whether it is proper for a lady to smoke cigarettes, and in still another the camera grinds away while hunters and dogs are getting ready for the chase. These are only a few instances of the many long drawn out situations. When we come to the interiors, the actors think nothing of walking up and down the stage before the action is given and then it is of the slow deliberate sort.

The subtitles are decidedly preachy and melodramatic and will never do for an American audience. In one instance when the villain is thrashed for his boldness, he points his whip at the heiress as she rides away and remarks, "You shall repent of this one day, me fine lady."

And then again the lightings are so bad in many cases that the faces either cannot be distinguished or appear dimmed, one scene in particular being played practically in the dark while the light shown outside.

Although the acting is sincere, the actors loose their naturalness for they have no idea of playing before a camera. The writer sees little possibilities in this production.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"God's Good Man," the latest Stoll Film Company production will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of next week.

The story which is from the pen of Marie Corelli, the well known English novelist, is filled with incident dealing with English life as it was known to the well known writer.

As Miss Corelli's novels have been widely read for the past generation, it may interest many to know that "God's Good Man" has been produced in keeping with the book, the director selecting many quaint exteriors and interiors in England where the scenes in the novel were laid.

The story, which deals with the elite and the country folks, has as its principal character Maryllia Vancourt, a beautiful young aristocrat.

She is the last of the Vancourts and quits gay London society and flees to her country place at St. Rest, pursued by many fortune hunters. There she meets John Walden, the village pastor, who disapproves of Maryllia's former life and her friends.

Maryllia has discharged a rascally employee and the latter takes his revenge during a hunt meet. He rides down the heiress and leaves her at the point of death on the field.

While she languishes and her life is despaired of John Walden spends much of his time with her and his role of clergyman and spiritual adviser is merged into that of lover.

The production has several big scenes among which are the hunting scenes in which hundreds of dogs and horsemen participate and the May Day festivities in which many children do the maypole dance while their elders look on.

PROGRAM READER

How would you like to be a young and beautiful girl, the last of an old English aristocratic family with wealth at your disposal and everything to live for and at the same time have to live a lonely life amid shams and deceits in gay London, while your castle at St. Rest, the old-world village, remained empty except for a brief annual visit?

This is what happened to Maryllia Vancourt until in despair she quits the gay London society and flees to her country-place pursued by fortune hunters, titled and untitled.

There she meets John Walden, the village pastor, who disapproves of Maryllia's former life and her friends.

This is a brief outline of "God's Good Man," a Stoll Film production which will appear at the ———— theatre on ———— of next week.

The story is from the pen of Marie Corelli, the well known English authoress who has written many interesting tales of English life, and is well known to readers in this country and Canada.

The story is well handled, the closing scenes showing John Walden acting the role of clergyman and spiritual adviser to the young heiress when her life is despaired of, the result of being thrown from a horse during a hunting party by a rascally employee.

The final scenes show the whole countryside joining in the folk dances and about the maypole while the two lovers give their promise.

He was a young minister and she a member of a wealthy aristocratic family. They fell in love—and then the young minister disapproved of her former life and her friends. Did she finally come to his way of thinking or did she decide to follow her own course? See "God's Good Man," from the novel by Marie Corelli —at the ———— theatre ————.

"IT ISN'T BEING DONE THIS SEASON"
(Vitagraph)

Inadequate Story, But a Veritable Fashion Show

THIS adapted magazine story does not seem a happy choice on the part of Vitagraph. They have given it to a star, however, who can help a great deal to make up for its deficiencies in plot value by supplying a great amount of concentrate feminine pulchritude and wearing a great variety of chic and modish gowns, which will bring joy to the heart of the ladies who are seeking "the latest thing." It is a continuous fashion show—each scene allowing the star to display diverse afternoon frocks, evening gowns, and tailored suits.

The story itself is not the type to hold the interest throughout. It is of the frothy society type, dealing with a girl who follows her mother's advice to avoid poverty by marrying a rich man even if, by doing so, she must stifle true love. There is a bit of a dramatic conflict as we see her choose the wrong man, but a very noticeable sagging in the middle, when friend husband dies and she is free once more to marry the man of her choice, who is waiting for her.

Here is a desperate effort on the part of the continuity writer to keep up the interest. She does not marry him at once, though why she hesitates it is hard to say, for she is wealthy now, and he has been a success in a small way. But they only form a business partnership and journey to Turkey to interest a fez-topped individual in a Oriental rug agency in America. She wins the contract by a bit of vamping, and when the Turk tries to kiss her, her lover is watching through the window. Thinking he is to lose the girl, the hero seizes a knife and wants to stab all concerned, when she tells him "it isn't being done this season." There is an explanation of this final incident—that the girl is testing her lover's fidelity—which we do not believe the average spectator will be able to gather from the picture.

George H. Sargent, the director, has, pictorially speaking, turned out a good piece of work, for the sets and locations are nicely selected and carefully planned. Opposite the star is Webster Campbell, who makes an attractive leading man. Sally Crute, Charles Wellesley, John Charles and Nell Spencer support the star very capably.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

The picture is a magnificently staged drama with its locale laid in New York and Smyrna, city of mystery and intrigue as well as oriental rugs.

"BURIED TREASURE"
(Cosmopolitan-Paramount)

Spectacular Production, But Story Is Unimpressive

THE spectator who patronizes this feature will certainly find entertainment in some very impressive scenes which have been conceived by Joseph Urban. He will notice that the director has achieved some good action and incident and as far as the moving quality of the picture is concerned he will observe that it is of a high order. But if he becomes analytical he will find the story a hodge-podge, based upon a fantastic and far-fetched idea of reincarnation. The production is everything here and really saves "Buried Treasure." It may be that the author or director did not intend to have the picture taken too seriously in regard to its plot material.

One cannot take much stock in a subject which has defied scientists. And presenting it via the subtitle and flashes of action nothing is left to the imagination. It is a theory which might better be left to the thought processes of a powerful intellect. Translated on the silver-sheet it assumes the outline of a grotesque serial. It even becomes ridiculous in its trance episodes for the action becomes preposterous. A heroine is betrothed to a young man against her father's wishes. In order to cure her of romantic fancies he lugs her aboard his yacht for a cruise in the South Seas. It is then that she enters a trance and becomes the reincarnated spirit of a Spanish senorita. Another trance enables her to describe accurately the actual spot where bloodthirsty pirates buried a treasure chest two hundred years previously. And the sequence peoples the action with her immediate relatives and associates. Her trance proves to be correct for the treasure is found which enables her to present her lover with a dowry.

One must simply overlook the fantastic idea and find entertainment in the romantic scenes of Spain a century or two ago, and in the pirate action aboard the ship. The episodes are full of life and color and exude a romantic glamour sure to be caught by anyone with imagination. Director Baker is at his best with the graphic scenes of the piratical plunder. Urban has made these sets truly impressive and they are most artistically lighted. Soft focus enters into the scheme every once in a while which makes it genuinely appealing. The continuity is easy to follow except for the supernatural touches. The spirit world and the world of actualities seem to bewilder one at times. The players suffer from too much direction to appear natural. It is as if each one were told to crowd a scene with emotion. The exploitation possibilities are immense.—Length, 7 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The theory of reincarnation forms the basis of a vivid and romantic picture called "Buried Treasure," the same title under which the story by F. Britten Austen was published in a popular magazine. It comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with Marion Davies as the star. The story begins with a masquerade at a millionaire's villa at which the heroine's father selects the costume of a pirate. The other guests are attired in antique costume. Pauline Vandermullen, the daughter, has an idea that long ago she had worn the same garments and was a Spanish senorita.

Many picturesque incidents are shown, one of which features a love affair between Pauline and a young physician. In order to interrupt the romance, the father announces her engagement to a nobleman and that they will sail in the morning to the South Seas. She develops a trance and writes some mysterious symbols which prove to be a guide to a certain locality of buried treasure. She enters another trance and reads a pirate story and the scenes described in the telling appear to her in a vision. In the end she is led to the scene of the actual buried treasure, outwits her father, and by means of the treasure her young lover is enabled to marry her. The picture presents some vivid action of pirate days on the Spanish Main. Miss Davies is supported by a capable cast.

PROGRAM READER

You will be transported to the picturesque days of pirate ships, of mutinies and gay romances in Marion Davies' latest Paramount picture, "Buried Treasure," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. It is a picture dealing with the question of reincarnation and communication of the living with the dead. "Buried Treasure" is one of the most picturesque features ever shown at the ————. A modern romance is deftly interwoven with a romance of the days when pirates sailed the seven seas. How the star in the role of the heroine proves to be the reincarnated spirit of a Spanish senorita and has communion with a departed lover is told in six reels of exciting and colorful drama. The picture is lavishly staged.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture presents a very fantastic story which it would be advisable to keep from exploiting. Simply tell your patrons that a picture of startling theme, characterization and incident will be unfolded to them on the ————. Play up the theory of reincarnation. Whether your crowd is familiar with the subject, the exploitation of it will stimulate interest. You can stage a prologue with considerable local color. It can be arranged around a pirate ship. If you cannot obtain the mechanical effects, then have an ensemble singing stirring songs, the company attired in pirate costumes. Or have a singer attired in modern Spanish costume singing a native song. Play up the title, the director and the star.

"THE EASY ROAD"
(Paramount)

Rather Mild for Thomas Meighna

THOMAS MEIGHAN'S latest picture, "The Easy Road," follows too rapidly upon the heels of "The Frontier of the Stars." One hasn't had time to forget the highlights in the former to overlook the shortcomings of the current release. In the first place the story is of the garden variety, being extremely commonplace and uninspired, and the characterization is practically colorless. The director has been able to extend the mild action throughout five reels, but in doing so has resorted to padding. "The Easy Road" is a picture of interiors, with the players walking from one set to another. And when they are not walking they are sitting around indulging in conversation.

One expects more from Thomas Meighan after witnessing his recent pictures. The crook photoplays have been so vital that in giving him something different his sponsors have overlooked the fact that he is of heroic mould. The star appears to be miscast in the role of the self-made young man who marries money and decides to have an easy time of it. As far as the realities are concerned the offering is faithful. It is natural for any one to take things easy when the opportunity presents itself. But such an idea isn't adaptable to the screen unless it possesses screen ingredients. "The Easy Road" is too easy. It doesn't move with any spontaneity. With the action subordinated the acting should be dominant. But it isn't aside from the star's forceful performance. As the hero he marries early in the story and makes up for lost time by taking life easy.

Padded scenes are introduced concentrated around by-play of interruptions as the young benedict tries to woo the Muse. Remembering what has constituted Meighan's pictures in the past, one waits for something to happen—and waits in vain. The wife leaves him to go on a European pleasure jaunt, followed by the "heavy." Which is the opportune time to emphasize the drama. The hero, incapable of getting ahead because there is no need of hard work, sinks to the depths and is about to commit suicide when a girl, more unfortunate, plunges in ahead of him. His effort to save her destroys his suicidal impulse. And her influence in the passing months effects a regeneration. There is a bid for a dramatic situation when the "heavy" attempts to place a wrong conclusion, but a reconciliation brings the ultimate happy ending. Lila Lee gives a good performance as the girl who is saved.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

What is considered one of the most human and appealing pictures that has ever appeared on the screen is coming in "The Easy Road," a Paramount offering with Thomas Meighan in the star role. The picture will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. The story is that of a young author who has battled through adversity to success and who marries a woman of great wealth. When he finds himself on Easy Street, his ambition wanes and he develops into a drone. His wife leaves him and he sinks into the depths, but is finally regenerated after a series of interesting events.

"The Easy Road" brings forth a big dramatic human story enacted by a star and company in a thoroughly compelling manner. In fact the offering is said to carry the same elements as Mr. Meighan's previous successes. Prominent in his support are Gladys George, Grace Goodall, Arthur Carew, Lila Lee and Viora Daniel. The picture is adapted by Beulah Marie Dix from a short story by Blair Hall, which appeared in a popular magazine. Tom Forman directed.

PROGRAM READER

Thomas Meighan is the star of "The Easy Road," the Paramount picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. This is an adaptation of Blair Hall's short story, "Easy Street," which was published in a popular fiction magazine and afforded the Good Luck Star with a role which is ideal for his personality. The picture carries the moral that when a worker reaches Easy Street, he is apt to learn ambition is waning and that work is the spice of life. The feature fairly bristles with action and it may safely be assumed one of the best in which this virile star has appeared in several months. It is excellently photographed, carrying scenes charged with remarkably fine atmosphere. In Mr. Meighan's support are Gladys George, Lila Lee, Arthur Carew and others of equal calibre. Tom Forman directed.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a picture adapted from a story which might have been written with Meighan in mind, so well does it fit his personality. Tell that this star is rapidly coming to the front in pictures which are worth while—pictures which are rich in entertainment values. You can state that it is on a par with "The Prince Chap," and "Conrad in Quest of His Youth." The title of the story, "Easy Street," from which the picture is taken, can be exploited in a teaser campaign. You might play up the moral outlined in the Program Reader and such a course wouldn't be giving away the plot. Play up Lila Lee and Gladys George. Bill it as a heart-interest drama with the most virile actor on the screen giving it expression.

CATCH LINES

After years of toil he gained riches and decided to play for a while. He chose the Easy Road. Where did it lead him? See Thomas Meighan in "The Easy Road."

"THE ROAD DEMON"
(Fox)

A Fine Auto Race Picture With Tom Mix

SEEKING to answer the great demand for "something new"—Fox has come across with the "The Road Demon." Tom Mix is announced as the star, but the best parts belong to some half a dozen racing automobiles. For this is an auto racing picture and one so well done and so crammed full of excitement and suspense and it should prove a more than adequate substitute for the usual Tom Mix western.

Mix, however, is not thrown too much in the background. The youngsters and thrill lovers who are so fond of seeing this star ride and shoot will find that he is just as much of a hero as ever. And he shows that he is just as much of a daredevil as in the pictures when he made a horse, and not an auto, do tricks.

The Los Angeles-Phoenix road race forms the bulk of the picture. This race is not on a banked track for a certain number of laps. It is a cross-country, up-hill-and-down race over rough country roads and perfect highways, and because of this Director Reynolds has been able to make more than a blur of speeding machines across the screen. The human element of the race is ever brought forward. We get a close up of Mix bouncing down a roadless hillside to take a short cut, and another as he stops just in time to avoid disaster at a broken bridge. The suspense is heightened and the interest aroused to a greater degree when the star loses the race, having been doubled-crossed by the villain. So they bring in a second race at the Fresno speedway. Here Mix wins. The scenes seem to be actually taken at the race and the audience will catch a bit of the glamour and excitement of that historic event.

The picture ends with a bit of old-time cowboy stuff. Mix's pals, cowpunchers all, take matters into their own hands to frustrate the villain—a manufacturer of a rival car. They ride into the hotel and up the elevator, still on horseback, and use strong arm methods.

The story does not make a lot of difference. It is probable, but of familiar texture, dealing with corrupt racing drivers, and a struggle between two rival auto manufacturers for a foreign contract. Mix acquires his car in the first place by swapping it for his horse. He cuts capers about in the desert and, not being able to stop it, rides through almost every building on his father's ranch. Claire Anderson is his leading woman.—Length, 6 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Tom Mix, popular star in cowboy roles, has discarded his chaps for the time being and appears as a rough rider of a bucking automobile in his latest William Fox photoplay, "The Road Demon," which is to be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

"The Road Demon" is a picture of speed and thrills, stunts and romance with the star handling a car with all the ability that he displays in riding bronchos. In the role of "Hap Higgins," Mr. Mix "swaps" his horse for a motor car and then all sorts of things begin to happen. He meets a girl, has a thrilling time winning a race against world famed rivals and finally outdistances all competitors in both love and automobile competitions. This is a new type of western, retaining all the speed and action of the horse type with many new innovations added. The race shown in the film is extremely realistic. In fact to be exact, the scenes shown are from the recent world record track meet for cars held at Fresno, Cal.

In support of the star is a strong cast of Fox players including Claire Anderson, Charles K. French, George Hernandez, Harold Goodwin, now a star in his own right, and Lloyd Bacon.

PROGRAM READER

Tom Mix, ———— favorite, is scheduled for a ———— days' engagement in his latest feature, "The Road Demon," a story of romance, adventure and thrills, beginning ————.

In this latest starring vehicle, Mr. Mix has turned his broncho out to pasture and does his daredevil riding in an automobile. He wins an automobile race against famed drivers, and also runs away with a lady's heart against formidable competition. As "Hap Higgins," Mr. Mix has one of the most likeable roles of his career. He is a cowboy who trades his horse for a car, a car that is better than it looks, as is shown when it wins the big national event. The romance of the yarn is furnished by Tom and Claire Anderson, who plays the role of "Patricia O'Malley."

An exciting road race in which Mix in his old car finally wins is a feature of the production. The picture has a good story, plenty of action and heart interest and will rank with the best productions of the day. It also gives Tom Mix a new sort of role, one in which he adds to his justly earned laurels.

Among the supporting members of the cast are Charles K. French, George Hernandez, Lloyd Bacon and Harold Goodwin. Mr. Goodwin is now a Fox star, having been lately elevated to this position. The production is directed by Lynn F. Reynolds.

SUGGESTIONS

Play up the fact that the star has discarded his broncho for this picture and does his stunts in a car. Feature the automobile race as being thrilling and exciting. A chance to tie up with car agencies and sundries stores is presented. For your newspaper ads. use a scene cut showing Mix driving in the race. Make your selling talk and catch lines snappy, using automobile "talk" in framing your sentences.

"THE BARBARIAN"
(Pioneer)

Fine Backgrounds, But Very Little Action

THERE is uncovered in this picture of the open spaces as fine a collection of backgrounds as ever found their way to the screen. And this goes for the sponsors of the scenic releases. With such a display of nature's handiwork the spectator is truly transported. If he is a dyed-in-the-wool fan he will realize the gap between the production and the story. Surely one expected more from the title and the star. One anticipated a story of he-man dimensions which would carry crackling action and suspense, interspersed with colorful incident. But it doesn't assume the proportions identified with a tale of the Northwest. It is a one character picture that revolves around a conventional theme and which has to do with painting the contrast between a product of the big outdoors and a girl and her associates of a cultured environment.

The hero is called a barbarian because he doesn't appreciate the barrier between his station in life and the girl's. He holds title to property which furnishes the conflict. The heroine's father and his vicious agent are desirous of obtaining the precious land for a right of way. But this conflict is held in abeyance until the closing reel. Meanwhile the barbarian is indulging in romance. The scenes which emphasize this note bring forth the big outdoors in bold relief. A birch-bark canoe which carries the picturesque hero and the girl, gliding along under a radiance of the moon, with the silvery waters for a background, is a scene which would cultivate romance any time. Donald Crisp has placed his camera at several advantageous points so that mountains, forests and streams are admirably caught. But his action is exceedingly mild.

In fact there is not one outstanding dramatic situation. Considerable argument and romantic by-play predominate. Yet one cannot deny that the picture is saturated with local color and atmosphere. If the story becomes obvious the spectator may permit his gaze to dwell upon the backgrounds. And these never tire. The conclusion shows the girl falling in love with her barbarian, who has proved his right to her affection through his manly qualities and the fact that he is a diamond in the rough. The titles are rather flowery and too descriptive. Many of them miss their mark in advancing the action, while others are totally out of place. The acting is praiseworthy.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Barbarian" is the name of the feature which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— with Monroe Salisbury as the star. This is a story of the great outdoors—a story of a native son of the woods who has never known the culture of civilization. Eric Straive has inherited his father's property. Everything is serene in his life until a party of wealthy Easterners journey to the wilds. Ostensibly they are seeking recreation, but in reality the capitalist is anxious to secure title to Eric's land. The young man is considered a barbarian by the daughter. He acts as a guide for the party. A time comes when Mark Brant, the agent of the capitalist, endeavors to close the deal by underhand methods, but Straive circumvents him. His culture being exceptional, his education being praiseworthy, Floria learns to appreciate him. Eventually she falls in love.

The picture is crammed with most colorful backgrounds, the scenery of the big outdoors being exceptionally displayed. There is a fine flavor of romance and the dramatic portions of the story are well emphasized. Monroe Salisbury makes the title role a rugged portrayal. His support includes Jane Novak and Alan Hale. Donald Crisp directed.

PROGRAM READER

He had never been to the places of civilization. His life had been spent in the great outdoors. He had been brought up to think nature ideal. Then into his life entered a woman from civilization. She called him a barbarian. But he taught her the love of the great outdoors. He taught her to glory in the sunsets, the skies, the woods, the streams. He was different from any man she had known. Then romance crept into their lives and both understood. "The Barbarian" is the name of the feature which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with Monroe Salisbury as the star. It is a very entertaining offering which carries some truly picturesque backgrounds and is well directed and acted.

SUGGESTIONS

You can exploit this feature as a study of the great outdoors. If you can get hold of the "paper" picturing the canoe rides and the exteriors it would help a lot in putting this picture across. Play up Monroe Salisbury, too. Your crowd will remember him if you have ever featured him on your screen. His personality is unforgettable. Play up the title. Tell that the picture is a fine study of life in the big outdoors. Tell that it offers a tale of primitive life, love and romance and sentiment in the open spaces of the North. Feature Jane Novak. She is well known to your crowd. But your best bet is the exploitation of the marvelous scenery. For local color, you can have some one attired in native costume reciting some poem from Service or Drummond.

"THE EDUCATION OF ELIZABETH"

(Paramount)

Billie Burke Has Real Opportunities in Polite Comedy

IT has been such a long time since Billie Burke has had a good picture that when one does present itself with plenty of sparkle and permits her a chance to assert her personality the offering should be given due credit. It is a will-o'-the-wisp story that is featured here—a story which despite its light substance somehow reaches out and entertains. The star looks like herself again in the picture and she scores in her own distinctive way. It is quite an achievement for Edward Dillon, the director. He has taken a thin plot on the surface and extended it, supplying incident here and there, with the result it is kept fully nourished to the finish. There is very little evidence of padding, so natural are the sequences and so spontaneous the comedy.

While it isn't a picture which furnishes laughter, still the raucous laugh isn't striven for, if one may judge from the subtleties of plot and characterization. A story of a chorus girl of a garrulous disposition the director has painted her life back stage with considerable color. He has used a set reproduced from the Follies to introduce his plot and develop his romance without losing the thread. For contrast a family of Colonial ancestry is introduced—a family "withering on the stalk" for lack of romance. A bald-headed member becomes enamoured with the gay chorine and lugs her out to the manor to meet the approval of his old maid sister. Thus begins the education of Elizabeth. While she is learning her p's and q's of deportment, she is subtly teaching her associates the art of putting "pep" into their conduct and manner of dress. Her fiance's brother, a book-worm, attracts her and during the absence of the bald-headed one she finds it convenient to become hopelessly old-fashioned so that he will break the engagement. And so Elizabeth gets an education, finds the man of her heart and revolutionizes the household.

There is a sparkle to the comedy even though it is polite and a trifle too refined for the lover of broad farce. The picture carries clever by-play, is excellently acted by the star and a cast that includes Lumsden Hare, Donald Cameron, Edith Shayne and Frederick Burton. The latter has quite a small bit, which is quite a come-down after his "Heliotrope" role. The feature is adequately staged against appropriate backgrounds and except for one or two lapses in the lighting is technically high class. The titles are helpful in advancing the humor.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Billie Burke, the dainty Paramount star, will be seen in her latest picture, "The Education of Elizabeth," at the ———— theatre next ———— commencing ————. This feature presents Miss Burke in the role of a chorus girl and she does some of the most enjoyable work of her career. The story deals with the education of a rough and ready girl by members of an aristocratic family and is said to offer many laughable scenes. While Elizabeth Banks is acquiring the deportment of the drawing-room her teachers are being subtly taught how to wear their clothes. Which proves the old adage—that one cannot impart any knowledge without receiving anything in return.

The chorus girl meets a staid descendant of an old Colonial family—a family which has remained unmarried. Thomas Fairfax falls madly in love with her and asks her to marry him, but first invites her to visit his home and meet his sister's approval. Fairfax is called to Texas and the education of Elizabeth is left to the sister and a brother, Harry Fairfax. The latter is a bookworm to such an extent that he neglects his personal appearance. But the girl awakens him to an interest in life. So when Thomas returns from Texas he discovers that he no longer loves her because of her transformation into an old-fashioned girl. This is but a deeply laid plot to make him lose interest. So she accepts Harry, while Thomas marries another member of the chorus who still has plenty of pep. The picture is well acted by the star and a capable cast and is excellently directed by Edward Dillon.

PROGRAM READER

It is as a charming, a fun-loving chorus girl who is very real beneath her rouge and powder, that Billie Burke will be seen in her newest comedy-drama, "The Education of Elizabeth," which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. No role that Miss Burke has had in recent productions has been better suited to her vivacious and captivating personality than that of Elizabeth Banks of a New York musical revue, in this photoplay. How she meets an old Colonial family and falls in love with a couple of its staid members—how she receives an education in deportment while she tutors the family in the manner of attiring themselves correctly is told in five reels of delightful comedy—the kind of comedy that one associates with the piquant star. A fine cast supports Billie Burke.

CATCH LINES

She was a member of the chorus. But she busted into aristocracy. Come and see how she put pep and ginger in a staid Colonial household. See Billie Burke in "The Education of Elizabeth."

"SOCIETY SECRETS"

(Universal)

Heart Interest Drama Is Mild But Entertaining

A HEART interest picture, with emphasis placed upon the pathos, is offered in "Society Secrets," Universal's latest release. In giving prominence to the sentiment and the heart touches the director has neglected the romance. But since the idea exploited is sure-fire there is no question of its success. The theme is woven around snobbishness as it concerns the offspring of aged parents. The latter haven't progressed with the times in their little Connecticut village and the children residing in New York feel ashamed of them. The entire action of the picture is dependent on the older figures keeping up appearances. They are expected in the metropolis for Christmas, but the son, believing that their homespun mannerisms and attire might queer him with his fiancee, tries to discourage their visit.

The characters are overdrawn. Some will doubtless regard them as entirely false. It is difficult to become reconciled to the idea that old people, thoroughly settled in their attitudes, would countenance any effort of a young person to teach them manners—especially when the antique figures come from New England. They might also bury their humiliation in the deepest part of their hearts instead of giving expression to it. Yet there is a tug in the pathos because of the naturalness of the old people as represented by George Berrell and Gertrude Claire. It is really their picture instead of Eva Novak's. The star is the haughty fiancee who journeys up to the small town and ingratiates her personality with the son's parents. But the director brings into play a motion picture conception and the plot loses some of its humanity in the burlesque of the characters.

They completely undergo a change in manner and attire. The father gets a hair-cut, smokes cigarettes through a holder, discards his frock coat for college clothes and eats with his fork. The mother bedecks herself in the latest fashion—short skirt et al. The author or the director, instead of working a transformation in the souls of the children, blames the elders. Had the latter been drawn with an idea that their customs and clothes were correct and compelled the children to come to them the picture would ring more genuine even though it might have lost some of its contrasts. There can be no sympathy extended the children because they are snobs at heart despite the fact that the parents make them feel at ease by appearing correct. With its faulty characterization the picture manages to sustain the interest.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The story of a New York son and daughter who are ashamed of their small town parents and how the old folks take intensive training in the artificial graces of society to win back the love and esteem of their children is offered in "Society Secrets," Universal's latest picture featuring Eva Novak. The production will appear at the ———— theatre next ———— and ————. It is a heart interest story which rouses a tug in the throat because of the sympathy generated in the characterization. The children have progressed beyond their parents to the point where they are ashamed of them.

To circumvent a Christmas visit the son writes them the unpleasant news that circumstances will prevent their being entertained. While this humiliates the old folks it also kindles a feeling to keep up to date. The son's fiance comes up to the little town to look over the aged parents and sneer at them. But she stays to learn respect for age. It is she who effects a transformation in their customs and attire. Eventually they come to New York and the children are happy to find that the parents have kept up with the times. The picture is well acted by George Berrell, Gertrude Claire, Clarissa Selwyne, L. C. Shumway and others.

PROGRAM READER

They were ashamed of their parents. They left the small town, migrated to the city and entered society. Their rapid progress brought out the contrast in the lives of the family. One day the old folks realized that their children were ashamed of them and decided to earn their respect by keeping up to date. They were tutored in the artificial graces of society and were able to win back the love of their children. This is the outline of "Society Secrets," the Universal feature which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with Eva Novak as the star. It is a heart interest drama, enacted against a background of rich atmosphere and local color. A capable cast supports Miss Novak. Watch for further announcements.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have been having good audiences with the Universals which star Eva Novak there is no reason why you shouldn't get them with "Society Secrets." It is a heart interest picture which carries a wealth of pathos and it would be well to emphasize the fact. Play up the idea used here. It is sure-fire. Ask leading questions for teaser display such as "Are you ashamed of your parents?" Spread them about promiscuously so it won't arouse objections. Tell of the general appeal, the small town atmosphere. You might put on an effective prologue by concentrating upon golden weddings and a reunion of the family, characters singing old songs and making merry with homespun dances or the old-fashioned square dance. Play up the excellent cast. Bill it as a simple but appealing play of real people.

Dear Mr. Rothacker:

I take this opportunity of expressing my sincere appreciation of the whole hearted courtesy extended to me during my several visits to your establishment. I may add that this courtesy was surpassed only by the wonderful work you did on my production "The Woman in His House." Please accept my thanks and congratulations.

Dear Mr. Rothacker:

You might be interested in knowing that as a result of the run of "The Woman in His House" in Washington, where it played to packed houses for three weeks, I have received a number of comments on the exquisite beauty of the picture. A goodly share of this praise belongs to you for your part in the finishing of the production.

In addition to the Anita Stewart Company, I will shortly have two all-star units busy on production. In fact, John M. Stahl, who directed "The Woman in His House" and "Sowing the Wind" has already started on the first all-star picture of a series which will be known as John M. Stahl productions.

The negatives from these additional companies will be sent to you for printing in due time, and I feel sure that the prints will have the same consistently high standard and excellent quality that have marked your work in the past.

Yours sincerely,

Sterile Advertising

THE importance of great posters to the exhibitor cannot be over-emphasized, for ticket sales are begotten of two parents. The photoplay is one—the poster is the other, but the mediocre poster is quite sterile. The judgment, and the thought, and the care, taken in the selection of the film is likely to go for naught if the same policy is not carried one step farther, for a photoplay—no matter how excellent in itself, has to be seen by a good sized audience to be of any real value to the exhibitor—and the size of that audience will largely depend upon the quality of the posters used.

If the exhibitor is satisfied to leave so essential a matter to chance—well and good. Any poster he gets may be satisfactory, but if he is not satisfied to gamble—if he insists upon having a poster that will, beyond the slightest shadow of a doubt, bring in the returns to which he is justly entitled—then he must assure himself that RITCHEY posters are to accompany the film in question.

For the RITCHEY poster is the product of the greatest organization of poster artists and poster printers in the world!

VARIETY of subject is another one of the hundreds of elements considered and applied by Universal in making those "52 Good Pictures a Year." And variety in well-balanced week-in-and-week-out entertainment demands, among many other things, an occasional Western picture of the proper sort. Clean, vigorous, actionful, and with a healthy out-of-doors atmosphere, Harry Carey's western pictures are the kind your patrons want. But Carey's pictures are more than just Westerns—they are pictures with dramatic power and human depth such as to make them, along with the other of those "52 Good Pictures a Year," warmly welcome at theatres where the best in entertainment is required.

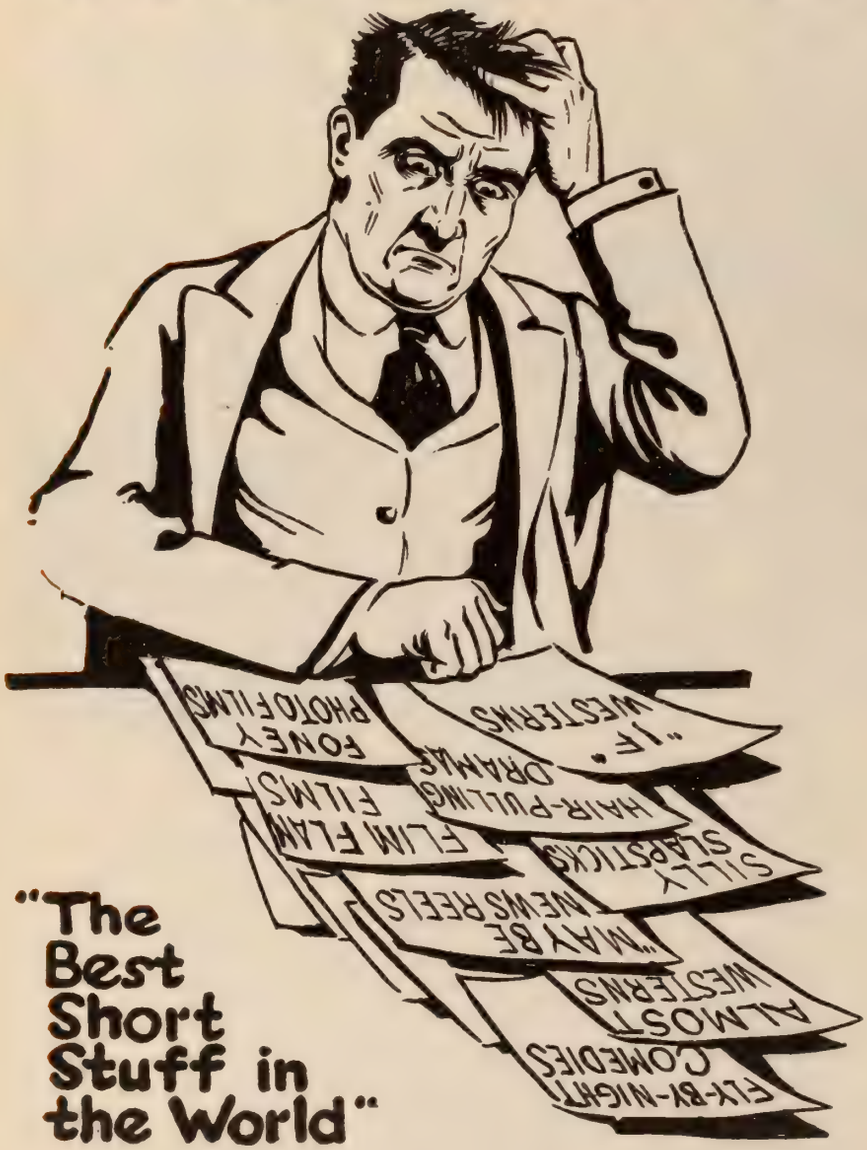
Don't Worry About Your Short Stuff



IT'S actually a waste of time, trouble and money for you to "shop around" for your short stuff when you can get all of it in one place and be sure you are getting the best. And you can be sure you are getting the best short stuff in the world when you get Universal short stuff—and that goes for to-day, to-morrow, next week, next month, next year and always. In Universal short stuff you'll find every variety of lesser-length feature that is needed to round out any kind of a program—such as two-reel Century Comedies, two-reel Westerns, one-reel Star Comedies, International News, the two-reel Red Rider series and many other subjects of a quality to make you realize that Universal always did make the best short stuff.

—Book ALL of it thru UNIVERSAL

THE day has long since passed when the news reel was merely a "filler." To-day it is an attraction—a real seller of seats. And patrons have become just as discriminating about the news reel as they are about features. Because this is true, and because your choice of a news reel means actual dollars and cents to your box-office, it is up to you to be just as discriminating in booking your news reel as you are in booking features. The shrewd exhibitor books International News, because he knows that in International News he gets not only everything that any other news reel has, but also additional exclusive news and features—without an increase in price.

A PERFECT CRIME

A comedy drama from the Saturday Evening Post story

by CARL CLAUSEN

Personally directed by Mr. DWAN

The modern Munchausen—

That's Monte Blue in this latest Dwan Production. It is indeed "A Perfect Crime" to tell the tales Mr. Blue as Wally Riggs, does. Your audience will enjoy them with real zest —and then, when the "twist" comes, wonder why such a perfect liar would walk so stupidly into the hands of his arch enemy, who in this case happens to be the district attorney.

The district attorney! Yes, you've caught it—Drama. Along with the high comedy. Plus that terrific "twist" in the story.

Small wonder our branches are wiring back congratulations on "the different picture!" And that we, in turn, congratulate our exhibitor-customers.

A DIFFERENT PICTURE—AT LAST!

Allan Dwan has made it—that long-awaited photoplay which can thrill with its drama, tickle the risibilities with its comedy, tug at the heart strings with its pathos, and do them all equally well. "A Perfect Crime" is perfectly different, perfectly adapted to the showman who knows that 95% of what is termed "showmanship" consists of getting away from the usual—making the public sit up and talk! Presented by Mr. Dwan with a typical Dwan cast, headed by Monte Blue and Jacqueline Logan.

SHE wanted to be decent.

She wanted to be loved by a decent man, to associate with decent people.

She was not bad all the way through; a woman rarely is.

Her sweetheart demanded that she advance his interests by double-crossing the persons who had befriended her. Should she be faithful to him or her better self?

A drama of both the upper and the underworlds, with the regeneration of a woman as the theme. From race-track to the drawing rooms of high society it is always faultless in production.

a drama of san francisco society and new york's five points

"don't neglect your wife" is the story of a love that flowered from cold neglect and blind intolerance. Madeline Talbot's devotion to the man she loved hurled her from the highest place in San Francisco's most exclusive society to the lowest dives in New York's terrible Five Points. A story that is woven of the very stuff of life. It will give your patrons as fascinating an hour as they have ever spent in a motion picture theatre. Directed by Wallace Worsley.

THE NAKED TRUTH

¶ The clever title chosen for the A. M. P. A. "gridiron" dinner next Friday evening is also fully descriptive in another respect.

¶ "The Naked Truth" is synonymous with "An A. B. C. Audit."

¶ The A. B. C. Audit is the only way to get at The Naked Truth regarding trade paper circulation and the quality of that circulation.

¶ So, with our heartiest wishes for the success of the A. M. P. A. affair go our thanks for the nail-hitting phrase—The Naked Truth.

VOL. XXIII MARCH 5, 1921 No. XI

Responsibility

THE one thing we've got to learn about the motion picture is its greatness.

Until then we won't realize our responsibilities.

And until we realize our responsibilities, realize them fully, we won't make effective headway against censorship.

Censorship seeks to put the control of pictures into the hands of an autocratic few.

We say: no. But in reply we don't say: put this control in our hands, we also being but a few.

We say: let us make them and show them in deference to public opinion. Let the great public control: and only the public.

That's what we mean.

And that tells us just what the motion picture is and how great it is.

It is a public servant. It ministers to the public, and like any public minister its service is dedicated to the public and the continuance or recall of its service is in the hands of the public.

That is the greatness of the motion picture and there is our responsibility to make and show pictures as the ruling public opinion, the majority public sentiment, wants them made and shown.

THE motion picture is not the speaking stage. It is only to be compared with the published printed word; and, then, its circulation is much greater and its effect exceedingly more powerful.

The motion picture studio is not a reflex of the ideals of Hollywood and New York. Its walls are those of the wide world: its expression the voice of the broad level of society.

The motion picture theatre is not the theatre of Broadway and the Loop. It is the community center, in this country, of four thousand villages, towns and city neighborhoods.

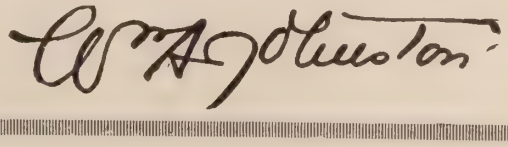
The motion picture audience is not comprised of transient pleasure-seekers. It is the day by day congregation of the American family at home, a vast regular army of from twelve to fifty million folks. They attend daily or weekly to learn the doings of the world outside, to have their thoughts, senses and emotions stirred, to acquire culture.

THE motion picture of today is not the motion picture of yesterday. People went first to see motion photography. Today they go to see expression. And they demand that pictures portray life as it is and struggles to be, that like other established mediums its style and expression shall meet the best levels of art and literature.

And, finally, the motion picture industry is not a fleeting opportunity for the get-rich-quick adventurer. It is a large industry destined to be much larger. It functions in an economic way. It demands solid foundations, sound policies of construction. It asks only for men of patience, substantiability and vision—business men. Any man who attempts to clean up at its expense, who attempts to subsidize the industry's reputation with the public is an arch enemy to the industry, to every man in it—and to himself.

This, we repeat, is the greatness of the motion picture.

And this is our responsibility: to minister, faithfully and continuously, to public opinion along the lines of sound commercial progress.



Snapshots

By William A. Johnston

Theodore Dreiser. A leading American novelist and old friend. States in Bookman his opinion of motion pictures. Very good, but he calls 'em "movies." Most pictures are but they won't be very long.

"Despite many defects," says Dreiser, "I think the movies show more of an advance than our current books or plays. They have a long way to go, but they give some evidence of being on their way. The trouble with movies as they stand and as they apparently must remain, is that they are a composite of applied brains and borrowed ideas. But even so, they are in the main truer to fact than the books and plays from which they are taken. . . ."

Movies. Continuing the subject. The kind of theatres Al Woods is about to build won't house "movies." The kind of picture theatre all over the country today, that is making money, doesn't want and won't book "movies." The public won't pay—any more—for "movies." "Movies" are what—unfortunately—many of our studios and exchanges are still geared up to make and distribute. "Movies" are what the market is glutted with right now. They don't sell because the public has stopped buying them.

Finkelstein & Ruben. Gave free matinee to all St. Paul school children, Lincoln's Birthday. Twenty-five thousand youngsters present. Special programs. Crippled children brought in autos, furnished by Junior Women's Corps. Street railways provided free tickets for all the children. Various women's organizations cooperated. Splendid idea. From many standpoints. Practical as well as charitable. Pays every exhibitor to enlist cooperation of women's club. We repeat: Go to your women's clubs before they come to you.

National Board of Review. Sending out a bulletin to considerable number of people throughout country. Recites—and convincingly—its attitude on censorship. States—in detail—its activities. Asks for funds to continue its work. Appeals to progressive American public and to every one in the industry. Normal income now limited to comparative small sums charged producers for reviewing films. Not enough to meet expenses. Needs help and deserves it. Stands today as one of the best bulwarks against censorship.

George Beban. His transcontinental tour in the interest of better motion pictures. Ten cities visited so far. Receptions, speeches, interviews. His advance agent—J. Victor Wilson. Received by prominent officials everywhere. Doing good work against censorship and blue laws. Next stop Chicago, three weeks, then Northwest and down Coast to San Diego.

Ambassador Theatre. Ambassador hotel, Los Angeles. Just received beautiful art booklet and program of opening week. Barrett McCormack's work. Fine! Calls his theatre "National Art Theatre of the Screen." The slogan, "Toward the Ultimate." Imposing opening program. Musical prelude. Stage prelude. Then "Passion," preceded by symbolic prologue. To quote from booklet: "The Ambassador theatre will present each week the most noteworthy of screen productions, giving them in nearly every instance their world's premiere several weeks before their presentation in other cities—will not be limited to one source of supply for its attraction, but will draw upon the entire field of production activity—for no art can limit its perspective through a veil of selfish motives." Good! This sentiment is on a par with the highly artistic booklet and program. Pictures, music, color—all delightfully coordinated—such is the picture theatre of the future. Our best wishes to the Ambassador—a far step "toward the ultimate."

The Bank and the Industry. First Securities Company of Los Angeles, operating for First National Bank and for Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank is sending out questionnaire to producers and distributors. Wants to finance Los Angeles production. Got to have definite statistics in order to do it. The bank must be a big factor in this business. When it comes in, and comes in right it will cut down much waste. Hope these questionnaires will be filled out and sent back. It's highly important.

"Some Pictures Need Censors"—Gov. Miller

HERE is what Governor Nathan L. Miller, of New York State, has to say thus far on the proposed State censorship of motion pictures:

"As yet I have not had an opportunity of considering the Clayton censorship bill. I have not as yet given much thought to the subject. I do believe, however, that certain pictures need censorship."

The New York State Conference of Mayors has come out with a flat denunciation of State motion picture censorship, expressing itself as follows: "Legalized censorship is a dangerous departure in a free country. It is no less dangerous than a ban upon the press of the stage, as it puts a ban upon ideas. The indecent and improper film can be eradicated by the same means as are used against objectionable books and plays. Legalized censorship may make the passing of films a matter of political influence and result in the consequent abuse of power."

A.M.P.A. Dinner to Be a Brilliant Affair

Completion of plans for the Associated Motion Picture Advertiser's "Naked Truth" dinner, to be held at the Biltmore hotel, March 4, shows a notable list of guests and a brilliant array of entertainment talent, according to advanced reports received. "The Naked Truth" dinner, which has been the subject of constant planning during the last three months, promises to eclipse any similar function in the motion picture industry.

"The Newer Idea" will be a one-reel feature in itself presented by Nat Rothstein, Victor Shapiro, Joe Brady and Arthur Brilliant. A pageant, which will deal with Blue Laws, censorship and other tribulations incidental to the industry, will be a feature of the evening. According to an official statement the usual dinner announcement will be obviated by an innovation in the entertainment by which, according to Vic Shapiro "no announcement will be necessary."

Screens to Promote Work of Irish Relief Fund

The screens of more than 50,000 theatres throughout the country are to participate in a series of benefits being arranged for the American Committee for Relief in Ireland during the week of March 17 to 23, according to a statement emanating from the committee's headquarters at 1 West 34th street, New York. Special matinees will exploit a special film, the receipts of which are to be devoted to aiding homeless women and children in Ireland. At a meeting in the offices of the National Committee of Motion Picture Industries, February 16, at which Patrick Casey of the United Booking Offices presided, a sub-committee was formed to represent the American Committee for Relief in Ireland and to help further its work.

Agitation Roused by Censorship Has Spread From Coast to Coast

Gompers Lends Hand; Big Fight in New York; West Coast Organizing

REPORTS from correspondents in all sections of the country indicate that the question of censorship for motion-pictures has become one of the most discussed topics in the national life of the day. Where measures providing for censorship have already been proposed for legislative action, the fight waged between the opposing forces has become very keen. In some states, the final passage of the censorship bills is considered to be very unlikely; but in other instances, notably in New York, present indications are not so favorable for the motion-picture interests. Among the persons of national prominence who have expressed their disapproval of proposed censorship legislation, Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, stands out especially. In commenting on a bill proposed at Albany, N. Y., and providing for state censorship, Mr. Gompers said in part:

"Nothing to be gained by the possible suppression of a few unworthy pictures can compensate for the loss of freedom that would result, nor for the sense of being subjected in our pleasures to the personal judgment or whims of a court of censors.

"The public will take care of its own standards if left free. The idea of censorship is not an American idea and cannot with safety be introduced into our life. Once we are started upon the censorship road we are again engaged in the age of contest between free government and government by compulsion, by decree, by caste."

New York Faces Big Fight

New York state may have motion picture censorship administered by a commission of five, appointed by the Governor, acting with the Senate, the proposed plan carrying with it a fee for the examination of films which will run annually into the hundreds of thousands of dollars. There is no use denying the fact, following the introduction of the Clayton bill at Albany last week. What is more, the bill can not be downed except by quick work and without any sidestepping or the "letting George do it" stunt.

That the measure stands far more chance of passage than any similar bill introduced in past years is plainly evident from statements that have been made during the last few days by leaders in both the Senate and the Assembly, including the lieutenant-governor himself.

It appears that it was the intention to introduce two censorship bills in the New York state legislature last week. Two or three hours after Assemblyman Clayton had introduced his bill, Canon Chase showed up at the Capitol with the expectation of introducing a censorship bill, practically identical with the Slacer bill of two or three years ago, except with some modification as to the salaries which were to be paid members of the commission. It developed that Canon Chase knew absolutely nothing about the Clayton bill, although he comes from the same city.

It also came to light that Assemblyman Clayton was none too keen in having his bill carry the support of the New York Civic League, or similar so-called reform societies, apparently believing that such would prove more of a detriment in getting the bill through than anything else.

Canon Chase showed up at the Capitol again on Thursday morning, seeking the advice of legislators as to whether or not it would be advisable to introduce another censorship bill. Later on Canon Chase said that he would get behind the Clayton bill and that no second measure would be introduced.

Every foot of whatever progress is made by the Clayton censorship bill will be strenuously fought by Sidney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, who arrived in Albany this week in a preliminary marshalling of his forces. While here Mr. Cohen conferred with leaders and members of both houses in an endeavor to secure a comprehensive idea of the sentiment existing. Every effort will be made to hold the Clayton bill in committee, but failing in this opponents of the measure will ask for a hearing and the fight will be carried to the floor of the legislature. Mr. Cohen is also interesting himself in the present status of the Flynn bill, introduced some time ago and which chiefly concerns operators. Mr. Cohen and his associates expect to return to Albany on Monday of next week and will remain on the ground from now on. No companion bill to that of Assemblyman Clayton has yet been introduced in the Senate.

Over 100 members of the Presbyterian Layman's Union, representing every Presbyerian church in Utica, N. Y., and vicinity, passed a resolution last week, asking the mayor and the common council of Utica, to re-submit the question of Sunday motion pictures to a vote of the people and urging the public to stay away from pictures until "there can be some assurance that they are at least clean and decent."

Meets Setback in Chicago

Reformers and advocates of the proposed new motion picture censorship ordinance received a decided setback when Chief of Police Fitzmorris appeared as the star witness at the third open hearing held by the Chicago council judiciary committee on February 17.

Chicago motion picture men are agreed that the present censorship plan is satisfactory to them and are strongly opposed to the substitution of a paid commission of three office holders who would be given charge of the censor work under the commission plan.

Chief Fitzmorris told the judiciary committee that the present method was far superior to the new plan. He said, "I am opposed to any ordinance that takes control of motion pictures out of the police department. I regard the censoring of motion pictures as an integral part of police work. I am still waiting to hear why the present system should be changed. I have not had an explanation. Has anybody one?

"What's the matter with the present system? Give me evidence that it is a failure. I have heard no complaints against it since I took office."

Martin Quigley of the Exhibitors' Herald, spoke in opposition to the proposed censorship ordinance, declaring the present law was ample as it gives the police full power to suppress unfit pictures and protect public morals, and the power at present is where it should be. Mr. Quigley called attention to the deletion of evidence of moving picture witnesses from the commission report and caused some-

Jersey Exhibitors Meet to Combat Censorship

THE introduction of a censorship bill in the New Jersey legislature this week brought prompt action in return from the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey, who, through their president, John C. Collins, have been summoned to meet at the Trenton House, Trenton, N. J., on March 2d, at one o'clock.

Mr. Collins has sent the following telegram to every exhibitor in the State: "Censorship of screen publications, with all that it means to you as sponsors of clean, wholesome, and necessary entertainment, is proposed in the State legislature. Your duty as public servants and to yourself is plain and imperative. You must combat this un-American attempt to establish imperious supervision over public opinion, which has no appeal to the public themselves. Censorship amounts to confiscation of the American public's rights to decide for themselves what they want. Co-operation and an intelligent presentation of the real facts to citizens of New Jersey will prevent censorship. Don't forget your own theatre is in danger. Meet at the Trenton House, Trenton, N. J., on Wednesday, March 2nd, at one o'clock. The call is serious. Come prepared for business."

what of a sensation when he declared that the report was signed only by ten out of nineteen members of the investigation commission, the chairman of the council commission stating that he had been led to believe that the report of the commission backing the new ordinance had been unanimous.

Although it had been hoped to conclude the hearings at this meeting additional speakers wished to be heard and the aldermen consented to one more public hearing and fixed the time for February 23.

Missouri Again at Ease

Motion picture exhibitors and theatre men throughout Missouri are once again in a state of ease.

The House Committee on Criminal Jurisprudence at Jefferson City rendered a unanimous vote disapproving of the proposed bills, placed before them by the Lord's Day Alliance and the Ministers' Alliance of St. Louis and Kansas City, which, if enacted, would prohibit the showing of Sunday pictures and provide for a rigid state censorship by a salaried board.

The announcement on February 17 of the action of the committee came after four weeks of heated debate, during which numerous Missouri ministers and proponents of the blue laws made drastic pleas for the proposed legislation. When they were informed of the decision of the criminal jurisprudence committee, sponsors of the censorship movement declared their intention of carrying the fight to the floor of the House. From well-informed sources of information comes the opinion that the members of the State Legislature reflect the stand taken by the committee, and that any effort to push the bills through will meet with stiff opposition. Never in the history of the Missouri House of Representatives has a bill been passed over the veto of a committee. No reversal of precedent is probable, it is said.

Among other propositions offered the legislators was the regulation requiring children under certain ages to be accompanied by their parents before they should be allowed to enter a motion picture theatre. This suggestion, while rather violently supported, never reached the floor of either the House or the Senate.

Kansas City motion picture exhibitors will meet with representatives of various civic organizations the latter part of this month in an effort to reach some agreement regarding a proposed revision of city censorship regulations. At present, the Kansas City censorship consists of one man. No radical regulations are advocated by the civic leaders, mostly women, who are attempting to abolish only the cheap, sensational productions, shown mostly in all-night houses.

Indiana Rejects Measures

The pendulum of public sentiment in Indiana has shown unmistakable signs of swinging in the direction of opposition to censorship of photoplays and the enactment of blue laws any more drastic than those now on the statute books.

Two of the three censorship bills which were pending in the legislature were killed last week by unfavorable committee reports. The third, that which places upon the state board of education the duty of censoring every film shown in Indiana, was reported out of committee without recommendation. It has advanced only to second reading. Since the legislature must adjourn March 7, because the law does not permit it to stay in session longer, and since a great amount of imperative business remains to be transacted the exhibitors are hoping that the remaining measure will be lost in the shuffle, which is very likely what will happen, legislative experts agree. The bill flatly prohibiting the exhibition of motion pictures or the playing of professional baseball on Sunday is in committee and without doubt never will come out. Another bill to control the industry was introduced during the past week. This one provides a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $250 for any person, firm or corporation which exhibits, displays or permits to be exhibited or displayed, "any picture, performance, or any other representation which is of an immoral, obscene, inhuman, indecent character, or which presents exhibition or display of any bull fight, prize fight, acts of murder, criminal violence or any other exhibition or representation of such a character as to tend to corrupt morals or incite to crime."

One of the finest things that has come to the attention of the exhibitors is a referendum vote upon the "blue law" question which the Huntington, (Ind.) Commercial Association conducted among the working people of that city. Of the 4,265 working people interviewed, 3,654 voted in favor of the open Sunday.

Bills Before Oregon House

Even Portland club women have joined in the protest led by the motion picture interests against the censorship bill and its two accompanying bills now before the Oregon legislature waiting their fate to be determined at their third reading.

Representatives Childs and Fletcher, representing communities of 300 and 400 persons, respectively, introduced the [bill] known as House Bill No. 172 which [if] enacted will provide for a state cen[sor] board of three members appointed by [the] governor with terms from one to th[ree] years and each to receive an annual [sal]ary of "not more than $1,500."

Opposition to the bill by friends of [the] cinema industry has been based on t[wo] fundamental principles: undemocracy [of] censorship as an institution and the [dis]advantage which Oregon would la[bor] under in competing with Washingt[on], Idaho, Montana and California where [no] such restrictions have been placed on [the] distributors and exhibitors. In addit[ion] the bill was held to be poorly drawn i[n] were conceded that state censorship w[ere] feasible as it provides for no appeal fr[om] the judgment of the censors and allo[ws] only a salary of $125 a month to its cen[sors] paving the way for employes of unwor[thy] calibre and for bribes and grafts.

Members of Portland Progressi[ve] Women's club took action branding [the] principle of censorship as un-Americ[an]. "It fosters an antagonistic spirit tow[ard] the law," declared one of its members.

"Whether motion pictures need sup[er]vision is another question. We feel t[hat] drastic acts of this type foster an into[l]ant spirit in the masses which has com[e] look upon the government not as a frie[nd]ly, protecting spirit but as an iron h[and] that is slowly and surely taking away [the] rights of the people."

The press of Portland took the attit[ude] that censorship of some sort is a real n[eed] but that the problem should be solved [in] Federal manner. Local film exchan[ges] with two exceptions, announced [that] should House Bill No. 172 pass, headqu[ar]ters would within 60 days be moved [to] Seattle as the disbursing centers now [lo]cated in Portland supply territory in [the] joining states near the boundary li[ne]. This would mean depriving Portland [of] ing financial times, of payrolls aggrega[ting] several hundred thousand dollars.

Manufacturer Takes Issue with Minister Following Sermon on "Square Deal"

GEORGE F. JOHNSON, president of the Endicott-Johnson Company, of Johnson City, New York, foundeer of the "Square Deal" town, and one of the largest and best known manufacturers in New York State, has taken issue with Rev. L. E. Ford, pastor of the First Baptist church in Johnson City, for a recent sermon on Sunday movies.

"It does not occur to you, Mr. Ford, that this is a free country, and that many people of intelligence quite equal to your own, may disagree with you," says Mr. Johnson.

Dr. Ford claimed in his sermon that the showing of motion pictures on Sunday is not a square deal. The reply which Mr. Johnson has just made to the Reverend Mr. Ford follows:

"Has anyone interferred with your doing the things which appeal to you as right and proper, for you to do, on Sunday? Certainly you call this a square deal, do you not? Why should you therefore attempt to interfere with others who have different views than your own?

"You would force people to do your will. Force has never yet been a successful moving power.

"I think, Mr. Ford, you will have to compete with other attractions, equally legal and lawful, on every day in the week. People are not forced into Sunday movies or Sunday ball games. They go from choice. If you can't compete, wherein lies the fault?

"Freedom of action, as long as it does not interfere with the rights of others, is the 'square deal.' Do you practice it?

"How would it work if you, in Christian charity and love of your fellow man, would do good, seven days in the week, even as the Master?

"You are certainly doing no good, when you seek to stir up strife among your fellow citizens, in a community where 'good will toward men' is more in evidence (I can say this, I believe, in confidence) than in any community where you, heretofore, may happen to have been permitted to live and carry on your work.

"Kindly permit us, whose duty it is to try and keep our fellow workers contented and happy, to be the judges of what, under the law, is best. You may find it perfectly easy to keep your congregation harmonious (?), and to keep your choir and official board in perfect harmony (?); but I would like to assure you that it is not easy to keep an army of people, and their dependents, contented and happy, especially when a certain element in the community, constantly interfere with their personal liberty, which under the law is guaranteed."

William A. Brady Reaches Coast in Transcontinental Tour

Exhibitor Leagues Voice Disapproval; Carl Laemmle Answers Protest

DURING the past week, William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture ndustry, has been appearing in various ities along the West Coast delivering ddresses designed to unite all branches of ne film business in the fight against proosed legislation hostile to the motionicture industry. According to advices rom the New York headquarters of the National Association, Mr. Brady's tour is proving of tremendous value from the tandpoint of at least arresting and probbly killing off hostile legislation, which, revious to his appearance before legislave bodies, was in a fair way of being assed."

President Brady's itinerary for the eek took him from Seattle to Los Aneles. Arriving in Seattle Friday night, ebruary 18th, he proceeded on the folowing morning to Olympia, the State apitol of Washington, and on Sunday, ebruary 20th, went to Portland, Oregon, nd from there to Salem, the State Capiol, on Monday, February 21st. His chedule called for his arrival in San rancisco on Wednesday, February 23rd, nd in Los Angeles on Saturday, February 6th.

The breach between the National Assoiation and the Motion Picture Theatre)wners of America, occasioned by the ormer's invitation to the exhibitors of the ountry to join the National Association, ill remains in force. According to word om the headquarters of the Motion Picire Theatre Owners of America, additional evidences have been received from xhibitors' state leagues which demonrate the disapproval of organized exhibors of William A. Brady's call to motionicture threatre-owners to enroll in the ational Association. A wire from the ebraska exhibitors' state organization is uoted as follows:

"Resolutions passed by Nebraska anch of Motion Picture Theatre Own-s of America condemns William A. rady and his associates for affront to our ational officers and the attempt to bring ssension into the ranks of the national ganization. A one hundred per cent vote confidence was extended to the national ficers, and believe us, we stand like a lid wall for principles of the Motion icture Theatre Owners of America."

A new development was projected into e controversy between the National Asciation and the exhibitors' organization uring the past week. A statement of Carl aemmle's, published in the Moving Picre Weekly, in which the president of e Universal Film Manufacturing Comny urged exhibitors to join the National Association, was taken exception to by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Maryland assembled in state convention in Baltimore last week. After Mr. Laemmle was notified of the resolution adopted by the Maryland exhibitors' convention, he sent the following telegram to Eugene B. McCurdy, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Maryland:

"Article in Moving Picture inviting exhibitors to join National Association no reflection whatsoever on any other organization. Had no idea it would be taken as such by exhibitors. Was inspired solely by censorship crisis and our desire to cement industry and do everything possible for exhibitors and ourselves to counteract censorship. I was not present at meeting but was advised by telegraph of all that took place. I have never been and never will be party to attacks on exhibitor organizations. If I thought the National Association was doing this, which I know it is not, I would resign."

Mr. Laemmle's invitation also occasioned the following comment from Thomas D. Goldberg, vice-president of the Maryland exhibitors' body:

"As vice-president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Maryland, I for one, feel deeply grieved that the producer should attempt to corrupt the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. I feel quite satisfied in my own mind and I believe every exhibitor in the state believes that this is not from the pen of you personally and were you aware of the contents of this, personally, you would never have sanctioned it going into your weekly.

"There is only one way that we can hope to attain the recognition from the country that our industry is entitled to and that is by working together. Adverse legislation of all kinds and anything that may affect the industry will never be overcome if the producer and distributor fight against the Motion Picture Theatre Owners. There is no reason in my mind why a representative body from each of the organizations could not work together as business men and try to destroy anything that might hurt the industry. There is no doubt in the world but we need each other and with the screen of the exhibitor and the loyalty of the manufacturer, producer and distributor working in one common cause that the enemy will always be defeated."

Paul Gulick, editor of the Moving Picture Weekly and also director of publicity for Universal, has addressed the following reply to Mr. Goldberg:

"I was a great deal more surprised that any serious body of exhibitors should take offense at Mr. Laemmle's inviting them to join an association of which he is a member, than you were at the advertisement in the Moving Picture Weekly.

"I cannot conceive how anything detrimental to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners could possibly have been read into that invitation, and I assure you personally, because I was present at the meeting, that such intention was furthest from the thought of every man in the room when the project of inviting all of the exhibitors in the United States to join the National Association was proposed. It was freely discussed and unanimously carried, and every moving picture producer and some who were not in the Association at all agreed to make this appeal to the exhibitors whom he knew best, as one very definite way in which we could concentrate the industry fight against censorship.

"As I say, I do not know who could possibly have attached any sinister or ulterior motive to such an appeal at such a time. Whoever it was, was not only mistaken, but is going very far afield in an attempt to keep the exhibitors and the producers of the country from getting together on concerted action against censorship."

Another factor in the situation took form during the week when the executive committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry met on Feb-

Praises Exhibitor for His Hoover Fund Campaign

A STATEMENT from the headquarters of the National Association pays special tribute to the industry of H. G. Bemis of the Gem Theatre, Inkster, N. D., in behalf of the fund for the European Relief Council. He donated a day's receipts to the fund, but it is not for this that the National Association accords him special honors, for many other theatre-owners did the same thing. It is the fact that "he must have put a lot of steam behind his campaign" that has called for the encomium. The National Association explains the affair as follows:

"There are only 350 people in Inkster. But the check for a day's receipts which Mr. Bemis forwarded to C. C. Pettijohn of the Motion Picture Division of the Hoover Committee was $48.75.

"It wasn't the size of the check that made such a hit with the Hoover Committee—it was the fact that Mr. Bemis had made the most of the town's limited population. If the big cities had responded proportionately all the hungry children in the world could be fed for a year from the funds collected through the picture houses on Hoover Day."

Federated to Have 26 Features, Convention Decides

First Year of Existence Rounded Out by Successful Convention

THE Federated Film Exchanges, Incorporated, begins its second year under most favorable circumstances with prospects of material increase in number of productions to be distributed and also advancement of quality of productions handled, according to reports made by officers and members at the close of their annual meeting at Los Angeles on February 19.

This organization, composed of independent film exchangemen who organized at St. Louis and Chicago one year ago, are now 100 per cent. in strength, having exchanges in all the key cities of this country, franchise granted for five or six exchanges in Canadian territory and advantageous connections for sale of foreign rights.

Material increase in the business of Federated Exchanges is anticipated for the second year by all members and all demonstrated their faith in the project by doubling the capital and thereby voted an increase in capital stock of 100 per cent., this raised the amount to $200,000 paid up capital. With this revolving fund, it will be necessary for the officers and directors to materially increase the buying and distributing power of the incorporation, thereby enabling them to contract for feature productions sufficient to more than triple the output of the past.

Contracts made at the annual meeting at Bryon Springs, Cal., and Los Angeles provide for the purchase of twenty-six features during the coming year. All of these will be purchased from producing and distributing companies organized by Walter E. Green, Keneth Fitzpatrick and Ben McElroy, the latter two composing the firm of Fitzpatrick & McElroy, distributors of Ford Weekly, with principal offices in Chicago. While the plans of Green, Fitzpatrick & McElroy are not wholly outlined at this time, they state they will organize a company, the name of which is to be announced later, which will produce features and buy subjects from the independent makers. All of these films are to be submitted to the buying board of directors of the Federated.

In addition to the twenty-six features contracted for, Federated will have two Fred Stone productions which are to be released together with a few more of the National Film Corporation.

The first of the Green-Fitzpatrick-McElroy will be released about March 15. This is a film directed by Alan Dwan, titled, "The Hidden Woman," the second released from this organization is a subject titled "They Shall Pay," starring Lottie Pickford, produced recently by Mrs. Charlotte Pickford.

A contract was entered into with Warner Brothers for twelve two-reel Monte Banks comedies to cost twice as much as previous Banks comedies, which were issued at the rate of one very two weeks. The new series will be issued one every month. Through Marion H. Kohn, acting for C. B. C. Film Sales, the convention contracted for twenty-six two-reel Hallroom Boy comedies featuring Sid Smith and Harry McCoy. The first release will be in April. The Chester contract, made in January, was revised and the thirteen Parlor comedies previously arranged for, were cancelled. The Warner Brothers wild animal serial, "In Dangerland," was purchased for $200,000 and other considerations. Federated will continue to handle the Ford Scenic Weekly, and the comedy output of Special Pictures Corporation.

The second annual meeting, according to statements by members and officers was a highly successful one in every detail. The plans discussed throughout the year were worked out in detail to the satisfaction of all concerned and with harmony throughout. Success of the meeting was largely contributed to the fact that the important business sessions where matters of policy were decided upon, were held at Byron Springs, the "French Lick" of the West Coast, where there were no counter attractions of any description and all members and officers gave their undivided attention to the business of the incorporation.

When members and officers came to Los Angeles they were in position to go over the various propositions placed before them with the producers and in a highly advantageous manner, thus, each proposition was disposed of without loss of time. A most enthusiastic vote of thanks was tendered to D. J. Chatkin, the retiring secretary, George N. Mann and Marion Kohn of Los Angeles and San Francisco Federal exchanges, who were responsible for all arrangements and plans for the convention meeting in the West. The convention was adjourned on the evening of February 19, and the delegates departed for the East the next day.

The representatives of various Federated exchanges, who attended the convention were: Abe Warner, Warner Brothers, New York City; Walter Green, Empire State Film Co., Buffalo; Sam V. Grand, Federated Film Exchange, Boston; Ben Amsterdam and L. Korson, Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia; Harry Lande, Quality Film Service, Pittsburgh; Harry Charnus, Standard Film Service Co., Cleveland, Detroit, and Cincinnati; J. L. Friedman, Celebrated Players Film Corp., Chicago; F. W. Thayer and Albert Wunderlick, Merritt Film Corp., Minneapolis; Ralph Nettsten, Mid-West Distributing Co., Milwaukee; Al Kahn, Crescent Film Co., Kansas City; Sam Werner, United Film Service, St. Louis; H. A Kyler and M. Parr, Supreme Photoplay Co., Denver; W. G. Underwood, Specialt Film Co., Dallas; J. E. Pearce, Pearc Films, New Orleans, and D. J. Chatkins George M. Mann, Marion H. Kohn, Consolidated Film Corp., Los Angeles an San Francisco.

"Convention Chattings"

Convention enthusiasm did not reach the maximu height until after the Rockies were crossed. The gree cloth of a billiard table with an inviting pair of dic worked wonders at lonely Byron Springs, and Griever is said to have waltzed away with a satisfie expression. Al Kahn was content to permit the past boards to add to his exchequer, and they do say th Kansas City lad has an unbeatable poker face.

Because he was the only Jewish lad in one of th several special cars put on the Pacific Limited fo accommodation of the Federated hosts, Kenneth Fit patrick, early on the trip was taught to answer to th name of "Rabbi." Rabbi stayed with him and wi stick for some time. He shakes a wicked "shimmy," as was demonstrated before the camera with Chester charming Charlotte, who is called Miss Dawn.

As a server of cider, C. L. Chester was awarde the "Green Derby" and all the other articles of th nut line qualifications.

Harry Williams, who directs the funny capers Chester comedians and who by the way wrote "Und the Old Apple Tree," "Cheyenne," "Tipperary," an a lot more popular songs, wrote one especially for th Federated gang, and sung it to them at the Chest luncheon. It is entitled "Father's In the Movi Now." They wore their palms sore trying to urg Harry to come back again.

In speaking of studio luncheons, the Federates a doffed their hats to C. L. Chester. It was a Rit Blackstone-Ambassador feast all in one, and gra juice was poured.

C. L. Chester introduced his entire film family i cluding directors Williams, Taska and Del Ruth, ar then the comedians Jack Cooper, Jimmie Savo, ar others stepped into vaudeville.

The Warner Brothers—Abe, Jack and Sam—were the receiving line all the time, but most especially Sunday when at Selig Zoo they put over a sumptuo Spanish barbecue dinner. It was a sad event for wh everyone was filled to the root of their tongues wi spiced delicacies on came the barbecued steak, and was steak.

Special Pictures officers dined the visitors on Mond and then jaunted them to the Studio where a fun fea was given, and everybody became a movin' pitch actor.

Ben Amsterdam was made the chairman of a Fe erated meeting, which Reggie Morris directed. I rose and made the motion that the Federated buy certain film for $500,000. What they did to his he with mailing tubes, rolled up newspapers and stuff clubs was scandalous, but what pained Amsterdam t most was advice from the director that a re-take w necessary.

Modest little Louie Korson, the Philadelphia Quak was named Chief of the Bathing Suit Censors a P. Oletsky as his assistant, and while they and othe were in the act of closely scrutinizing a 1930 garme the wives arrived. Margaret Cullison, who could w a home in any side show was on display to the sat faction of the wives.

Harry Cohen, the Hall-Room Boys maker, made introductory film of each of the visitors separately.

Movie Night at a beach cafe was turned into Fe erated Night.

Sam Rork gave the Federated visitors a treat showing them the first Snowy Baker production titl "The Man From Kangaroo." What the viewers s would cause Snowy, the Australian champion of eve thing, to demand a million dollar salary.

When the Federated visitors left Los Angeles th were still in a daze.

Yes, it was a successful party, and a good ti was had by all.

Associated Exhibitors Reorganize on Bigger Lines

Samuel Harding Heads New Company, Still Releasing Through Pathe

REORGANIZATION on much bigger lines of Associated Exhibitors has just taken place. This company, which was formed a year ago to handle feature films through the Pathe exchanges, has been reincorporated with a great extension of its present activities. The new company will begin business March 1.

A charter under the laws of Delaware was obtained in Dover last week and at a meeting held in New York City on Monday, February 21, Samuel Harding of Kansas City, Mo., was elected president, and Paul Gustanovic of Cleveland, Ohio, vice-president. These men, with Paul Brunet, Elmer R. Pearson, Arthur S. Kane and John C. Ragland, were chosen as directors. Mr. Kane was named chairman of the board.

High among the stars whose pictures will be distributed by reorganized Associated Exhibitors, Inc., is Harold Lloyd, who is rapidly becoming known as America's foremost film comedian. Mr. Lloyd's comedies have been handled by Pathe for four or five years and last summer he entered into a new contract with Associated Exhibitors, Inc. His first picture under this contract, "Now or Never," is to be released on March 27.

Already contracts are being negotiated with the new company by independent producers for other star pictures and specials, and announcements of the first attractions of their new output to be distributed by Associated Exhibitors, Inc., are promised within a few weeks.

The preferred capital stock of the new concern is $1,000,000. A complete merger of the two companies is to be effected, the new organization taking over all of the assets of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., of New York. The preferred capital stock of the latter company is $100,000. The main offices of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., of New York, are at 25 West Forty-fifth street. Phil Ryan is in charge of the present company's headquarters.

The turn in affairs that brought about the reorganization means a brilliant future for the organization, according to Paul Brunet of Pathe. Associated Exhibitors will continue to distribute their product through the thirty-two Pathe exchanges throughout the country.

Mr. Brunet, thoroughly pleased with the manner in which the reorganization was perfected, as well as with the governing personnel, looks for an immediate upturn in the activities of the Associated Exhibitors.

"As an exhibitor Mr. Harding has long since gained the highest reputation for ability and resourcefulness. He typifies the leader in showmanship, and with his thorough knowledge of the problems of the exhibitor, he will be a prime mover in the future progress of the Associated Exhibitors.

"In the producing and distributing end of the industry, Mr. Kane has for years been a dominant factor. He possesses, too, the fullest confidence of the exhibitor, a reputation gained through square dealing and honest efforts on behalf of the motion picture theatre owner."

Of Paul Gustanovic of Cleveland, now vice-president of the Associated Exhibitors, Mr. Brunet said:

"I have ever been an admirer of Mr. Gustanovic. Like Mr. Harding, he has been a moving factor in the field of motion picture showmanship. He will be an able leader in the coming affairs of the Associated Exhibitors."

Elmer Pearson, director of exchanges of Pathe, will sit on the Board of Directors of Associated Exhibitors. In the summer of 1919 Mr. Pearson assumed the sales managership of the feature department, which under his guidance, soon assumed a plane with the other and older divisions of Pathe's sales force. About a year ago Mr. Brunet named him director of exchanges. Mr. Pearson will advise with the Associated Exhibitors' sales force on all matters in which his opinion will be of value.

Pathe again becomes "the house of short subjects," now that Associated Exhibitors has assumed the sales responsibility for Pathe features in towns of more than 1,500 population. The Pathe short subject salesman will continue, however, the selling of Pathe and Associated Exhibitors features in towns of less than 1,500 population.

Paul Gustonovic Sam Harding

President Brunet has long considered that the best interests of Pathe exchange, would be served by concentrating all its activities and resources in the development of the tremendous possibilities of the short subject field, including serials.

On the Associated Exhibitors' schedule at present is "The Devil," starring George Arliss; "What Women Will Do," the Edward Jose production featuring Anna Q. Nilsson, and Geraldine Farrar in "The Riddle: Woman."

Famous Players Announces Recent Promotions

S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution, recently announced the following promotions in the Paramount sales organization:

Joseph H. Gilday, who for some time has managed the branch exchange at Kansas City, has been appointed district manager in charge of the Chicago and Indianapolis exchanges, with headquarters at Chicago. Mr. Gilday succeeds Harris P. Wolfberg, who recently resigned.

Herbert Elder, branch manager at Cleveland, is promoted to the position of assistant sales manager at the home office, succeeding John W. Hicks, Jr., who goes shortly to Australia as managing director of Feature Films, Ltd. Mr. Elder is succeeded as branch manager at Cleveland by P. A. Bloch.

Philip Reisman, branch manager at Minneapolis, is promoted to the position of district manager in charge of the Minneapolis, Omaha and Des Moines offices, R. C. LiBeau remaining in supervision of the Kansas City and St. Louis offices.

State-Wide Organization For Pennsylvani

A GREAT rally of Pennsylvania motion picture exhibitors will be held in Harrisburg March 8 and 9 at the instigation of Sydney S. Cohen of New York, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. The two-fold purpose of the convention is the cementing of the existing exhibitors' organizations of the state into a branch to become affiliated with the national body, and to take aggressive steps through the organization of legislative committees, to combat the many measures hostile to the motion picture industry now pending before the legislature and such as may be introduced during the remainder of the law-makers' session.

The fact is that up to now there has never been a very effective state organization of exhibitors of really state-wide scope in Pennsylvania. There are aggressive bodies of exhibitors in both Pittsburgh and Philadelphia, but the plan of the coming Harrisburg convention is to branch out and bring the exhibitors of smaller cities and towns of the state into a Pennsylvania branch of the national body, which Mr. Cohen heads.

Peter Megaro, owner of the Regent theatre, Harrisburg, has been assigned to the duty of making the local arrangements for the convention, which will be held in the Penn-Harris Hotel. He has stated that, from the way exhibitors are sending in hotel reservations, fully eighty per cent of the 1,100 theatre owners of the state will be represented. While a state-wide branch of the national body is to be formed, it is proposed, Mr. Megaro said, to divide the organization into two sub-branches, one centering about Pittsburgh, in western Pennsylvania, and the other for eastern Pennsylvania, with headquarters in Philadelphia.

This is for convenience in handling the interests of the two ends of the state. For each zone there will be a separate legislative committee, said Mr. Megaro.

In the matter of protective legislation for the theatre owners, the draft of a compromise tax bill, which is now being prepared, will be presented to the convention for its endorsement, to submit to the legislature. This bill will be in the nature of a compromise for the half dozen measures now in various stages of progress through the General Assembly, which are generally opposed by the theatre men.

These bills include that which would impose a tax of one cent a foot on all films approved by the Pennsylvania censors; impose one per cent tax on the gross earnings of theatres; prohibit the curtailing of the length of Saturday shows as compared with those of the other days of the week; impose penalties on theatres which fail to show films advertised in advance when such failure is due to no fault of the theatre owners, and, especially the pending measures which would greatly increase the license taxes on all classes of motion picture theatres in the state.

The compromise bill that is being p pared, it is understood, would substit for all the other proposed taxes some p under which the theatre owners would required to pay perhaps double their pr ent license fees, if relieved of all the ot newly proposed tax burdens. The hibitors interested in the drafting of t proposed compromise measure take ground that, as good citizens, the pict men should bear their share of the b den of raising the increased millions revenue that Governor Sproul, in his m sage, said it is necessary to raise fr new sources this year to finance the st government. They point out, howev that if the various pending bills now b fore the House and Senate were to enacted into law the aggregate of the i creased financial burden piled upon t motion picture industry would be ruino to the business. They believe, therefo that the compromise to be proposed wo be fair both to the state and to the selves.

President Cohen, of the national orga zation, will be present at the conventi The Philadelphia delegation will atte under the leadership of John S. Eva who has been prominent in organizati work in that city, and the Pittsburgh c horts will be marshaled by Henry Po Fred J. Herrington, organizer, of Pitt burgh, national organizer, also will among the speakers.

Morosco to Release Through First Nationa

FROM New York, where he is now arranging his affairs so that he may return in the near future to Los Angeles to concentrate his activities here, word was received yesterday that Oliver Morosco has concluded a contract by the terms of which the recently projected Morosco Productions, Inc., will release its entire film output through Associated First National.

The consummation of this deal is the biggest distribution contract concluded by Associated First National since the transaction with Joseph M. Schenck for the release of Norma and Constance Talmadge attractions through that concern.

By his new releasing agreement, Morosco takes precedence as the first of the big theatrical producers to align himself with an independent distributing organization. By the terms of the new agreement the Morosco Film Productions will be exhibited in more than thirty-five hundred theatres affiliated with the exhibitors banded together under the banner of Associated First National.

"In lining up with Associated First National, Morosco is continuing the policy that has characterized his upward climb in the theatrical world," declares the statement issued from the Morosco office in New York. "After having risen to the position of the largest producer in the West and given Los Angeles the distinction of being the second largest stage production center in the United States, he boldly invaded New York and successfully fought the large interest that attempted to engulf him and his daring enterprise. He now has three theatres in New York and the indications are that he will have a fourth, in addition to a third theatre in Los Angeles. His new film contract is of particular significance locally, due to the fact that he now plans to produce practically all of his new stage plays here so that he may give them his personal supervision while attending to the affairs of his film corporation.

"By the plans which Morosco is now completing rehearsals will begin immediately upon his return to Los Angeles on some new stage productions. Simultaneous with their appearance on his stages in Los Angeles the Morosco casts will also be engaged during the day in making film versions of these plays.

"By his new contract Morosco discloses plans that will make him an even more important factor in the film world than he has been in the theatrical production field. He has available for picturization more than thirty of his stage plays, including the perennial and everlasting favorite, "The Bird of Paradise," whi he has steadfastly held for the day wh he could make the screen version with h own organization and in his own manne

"The first of the Morosco feature 'The Half Breed,' is now well under wa Arrangements are now being made for t filming of 'Linger Longer Letty,' wi Charlotte Greenwood in the leading rol Among the other successes which w soon be picturized under the new contra are 'The Humming Bird,' 'The Fugitiv 'Slippy McGee,' 'The Gilded Cage,' 'T Master Thief,' 'The Fox,' 'Judge a Jury,' 'Watch Your Neighbor,' 'Wh Next,' 'Conquering Kate,' The Imperi Highway,' 'In South Caroliny,' 'One Us,' 'Look Pleasant,' 'Mile-a-Minu Kendal,' 'Pamela,' 'Just a Suggestio and 'Wait Till We're Married.'

"Work is being rushed on the ma nificent new Morosco studio, which wh completed will be known as Moroscotow and will be the home of Morosco's fil productions. Moroscotown will, it is e pected, be the film production show pla of Los Angeles. Until its completio however, the first of the Morosco picture under his new Associated First Nation contract, will be produced at the Louis Mayer studio."

M.P.D.A. Suggests Screen Organizations Unite

In an effort to present a strong front to the forces of reform, William D. Taylor, director of the Motion Picture Directors' Association of Los Angeles, has sent the following letter to Motion Picture Producers' Association, Motion Picture Art Directors' Association, Assistant Directors' Association, American Society of Cinematographers, Society of Illuminating Engineers, Screen Writers Guild of the Author's League, Western Motion Picture Advertisers, Photoplayers Equity Association, Los Angeles Film Exchange, Theatre Owners' Association, Los Angeles Theatre Association, Motion Picture Operators' Union, Ethical Motion Picture Society of America, Girls' Studio Club:

"The necessity of immediate and united action on the part of the Motion Picture Industry to defend itself against legislative menaces of censorship and so-called 'Blue Laws' is recognized by every member of this Industry.

"Our Motion Picture Trade publications are urging united and unselfish action of every one connected with producing, distributing and exhibiting of motion pictures to defend this great industry against those who would weaken and destroy it.

"It is regrettable to note at this time of peril that some factions are quarreling with each other at a time when paid reformers, with millions of dollars behind them, are preparing to come over the top from the opposite trenches. It is imperative that any petty differences be forgotten until the paid reformer is definitely defeated in his attempted assault on the screen.

"With the ambition simply to see something started and not from any desire to attempt to dictate or to run the affairs of the Industry, the Motion Picture Directors' Association urges the immediate organization of a Central Committee of Western Motion Picture Organizations, the purpose of which is to unite every phase of Motion Picture production, distribution and exhibition, for the purpose of protecting ourselves from all enemies, and of furthering our common interests. It is suggested that this Committee be composed of one representative from every existing recognized association, whose vital interest is the welfare of motion pictures.

"Your organization is urged to name an official representative, who will meet with one representative apiece from other organizations at the Los Angeles Athletic Club, Monday, February 28, at 8:30 P. M., to perfect and form such a Central Committee. Kindly notify me at Lasky Studio, as soon as possible, the result of your action on this matter.

"Sincerely yours, for the welfare of motion pictures,
"WILLIAM D. TAYLOR."

Jack Pickford Ill

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 23.—Stricken ill suddenly with bronchial pneumonia while engaged in filming a new picture, Jack Pickford, widely known film star, was reported tonight to be in a serious condition at his home here. He was said to have a temperature of 103.5 degrees and his sick room was barred to all but his mother, Mrs. Charlotte Pickford.

Pickford became ill Friday following a baseball game. He developed pneumonia Saturday. Owing to his illness, work on a new picture he was directing for his sister, Mary, has been delayed and a scheduled pleasure trip to Douglas Fairbanks and Miss Pickford to Mexico City has been postponed.

Big Fire in Vitagraph Branch in Albany

Spontaneous combustion is said to be the cause of a fire in the Vitagraph branch at Albany, N. Y., on the night of February 22nd. The fire started in a vault where the films were stored. The loss, it is said, will run into the thousands. The branch occupies a two-story brick building.

New Pantheon Corporation to Produce in East

Reports that a new group of financial interests were planning to enter the motion picture field were confirmed this week in the announcement of the formation of the Pantheon Pictures Corporation. The new company has taken over the Port Henry studios at Port Henry, N. Y., and will begin production there as soon as the necessary equipment can be installed within the next three weeks.

While the establishment of only a single producing company at Port Henry is all that is at present contemplated, other units will be formed to produce, both in New York and on the Pacific Coast, it is declared.

The president of the new corporation is Mr. Paul Schoppell, formerly head of Paul Schoppell & Co., investment brokers, of Chicago, who is almost as well known in financial circles in New York as in the Lake city.

Australian Film Men Are Coming to America

Mr. W. A. Gibson, who controls Australasian Films, Ltd., Film Distribution Organization in Australasia, left for America on February 10th, in company with Mr. Stuart F. Doyle, general manager and managing director of Union Theatres, Ltd.

Mr. Gibson's mission is for the purpose of thoroughly investigating the film situation and closing certain film contracts for the supply of Union Theatres' circuit as well as Australasian Films' customers in the various centers.

Mr. Gibson expects to remain in New York for two months and then to proceed to England and the Continent. Mr. Gibson and Mr. Doyle are expected in New York about the middle of March.

Believe Arrest Holds Key to Mystery of Thefts

With the arrest of Kark G. Weigel, 29 years old, 1380 Linwood avenue, Niagara Falls, N. Y., the officials of the Buffalo American Express office and the Universal and Vitagraph exchanges in the same city believe they have solved the mystery of the alleged disappearance of many thousand dollars' worth of films. Besides arresting Weigel, Buffalo police recovered over 70 films, valued at $50 to $1,000 each. The exchanges, besides suffering the loss of the films, were also forced to pay many thousands of dollars in penalties, it is declared, because of the non-appearance of the pictures at the theatres in time for presentation at the appointed time and date.

Weigel, it is declared, had a plan of making his rounds at about the same time as the expressmen were delivering films to the exchange. While the drivers were taking the cans into the exchanges Weigel is alleged to have helped himself to a can or two himself. Weigel is also charged with having formed a partnership with two other men for the disposal of the films. These men had all the paraphernalia necessary for the projection of pictures, it is declared. The duo, it is stated, took the films to small towns where there was no regular theatre, making one-night stands each week. Weigel is alleged to have received one-third of the receipts. The local Universal office alone claims that it has lost $15,000 in broken contracts because of the loss of the films.

The police believe that the arrest of Weigel will lead to the arrest of others, not only in Buffalo, but other cities.

Coast Companies Combine to Fight Censorship

All motion picture organizations of San Francisco combined in what is known as the Allied Motion Picture Industries of California for the purpose of giving a ball on the evening of March 5th at San Francisco to raise funds to combat adverse legislation in California and nationally.

Eugene H. Roth of the California, Imperial and Portola theatres in San Francisco is acting as general manager of affairs for the ball, and in this capacity spent the past week in Los Angeles arranging for a number of screen celebrities to attend the ball.

Symphony Theatre Reopens in Los Angeles

A wire from the Coast announces that the Symphony theatre in Los Angeles has been reopened with a new lobby and renovations throughout the interior of the structure. A stage orchestra pit has been added to the stage equipment. The theatre is to be made the premiere house for productions released by Associated Producers. The new schedule of prices provides for 80 cents top.

Legislature Investigating Picture Conditions in Minnesota

Seeks to Determine if Trust Law Is Being Violated in This Stat

AN investigation of motion picture exhibitions in Minnesota by a committee of the Minnesota Legislature is now underway. The investigation was instituted following authorization in the adoption of a resolution by John I. Levin of St. Paul and is being carried in an effort to determine whether the firm of Finkelstein & Rubin, which operates houses in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth, is a trust in violation of the Minnesota statutes.

The investigation has been of an exhaustive nature. Seating capacity of show houses in the Twin Cities, admission prices, exhibitors' arrangements with film distributors, and other matters have been taken up at the various hearings.

William Hamm of St. Paul, a member of the Twin City Amusement Trust estate, the Finkelstein & Rubin organization, declared that prices in the Twin Cities are lower than in other centers. There is a maximum admission price of 50 cents in Minneapolis and St. Paul, he said, as compared with prices ranging from 66 to 83 cents in other cities.

The hearing, naturally, touched on matters of censorship.

J. F. Cubberly, Minneapolis manager of the First National pictures, told the committee that the company he represents was organized by leading exhibitors throughout the country to keep down prices for films. He insisted that the company's aim was to promote competition.

Mr. Cubberly gave the committee some idea of prices being paid for story rights to pictures, saying they ran as high as $75,000. He also told of what film rentals for first run in the Twin Cities cost. He said that "Humoresque" and "Broken Blossoms" cost $7,500 each. "Kismet" was listed at $17,500 for the first run, he said. Pictures made by Norma Talmadge cost from $3,000 up for first runs, he said, all regardless of producers.

Speaking of First National pictures, Mr. Cubberly said: "Its purpose is to keep the other fellow in his place, and to promote instead of stifling competition."

Morgan, Dupont and other big financial interests entering the producing field, and film prices steadily advancing, he testified, the First National was organized by the leading exhibitors of the country to prevent centralized control. Although producing only from 30 to 40 pictures a year, compared with 125 to 150 by some of the big companies, the First National, he added, is nevertheless a factor for good in the business.

This was in answer to inquiries by Chairman John L. Levin, St. Paul, whether the organization by bidding in the open market only operated to force up prices. Mr. Cubberly said it had made purchases at lower prices and further that it effects economy in distribution and eliminates middlemen's profits. The policy of the management of the principal picture theatres is opposed to price changes, he said, Mr. Levin expressing his pleasure to know it.

Giving an idea of prices paid for story rights, the witness said copyright holders were paid $50,000 each for "Daddy Longlegs" and "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," while $50,000 was recently paid for each of two stories in which Constance Talmadge is to be starred, and $75,000 each for three for Norma Talmadge.

If a press story was true that rights to screen "Turn to the Right" were sold on a basis of more than $1,650,000, the first run in Minneapolis would cost $20,000 and in St. Paul $15,000, the witness estimated. But he was inclined to discredit the story and said any such rights probably would have been taken on a percentage basis.

"The box office admits that it is dependent upon known stars," said Mr. Cubberly, adding, however, that temperamental makeup of the stars and their desire to get into the best theatres will prevent single control of the entire galaxy in the screen world.

The witness testified that the Loring theatre, Minneapolis, was located at Nicolet avenue and Fourteenth street only after other sites considered more desirable could not be procured and not with any purpose of driving out competitors. He stated that the account of J. W. Cohen, former owner of the Lagoon theatre, at Hennepin avenue and Twenty-ninth street, Minneapolis, one of the first witnesses, was not rated desirable among film distributors and that there were sufficient reasons for cancellation of his film contracts without competing houses attempting to force him out of business.

ruary 19th and formally adopted a resolution soliciting exhibitors of the United States to join its theatre division. Percy L. Waters, chairman of the executive committee, presided. The appointment of a committee to organize the theatre division was authorized. This committee will be appointed in the near future, it is stated. A copy of the resolution adopted at the session of the executive committee follows:

"Whereas, Members of the National Association of the Motion Picture Indu try recently invited exhibitors of t United States to join the theatre divisi of the National Association of the Moti Picture Industry, and

"Whereas, The purpose of such invit tion was to bring about a more perfect c ordination of all branches of the industr to combat legislation seeking to establis legalized censorship of motion pictur prior to publication, the enactment of s called blue laws, and all other adver legislation, it being always understoo that membership in the theatre division c the National Association would and sha not in any way conflict with membershi in any local, state or national exhibitor or ganization now existing, or that may here after be formed; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the National Associa tion of the Motion Picture Industry ap proves and confirms such action of it members, and now as an association in vites and solicits the exhibitors of th United States to become members of it theatre division."

Censorship Fights Spreading

West Coast Organizing

The Idaho legislature has also unde consideration a bill providing for stat censorship. Active opposition to the meas ure is being organized by the Idaho Thea tre Managers' Association. Word als comes from Los Angeles that practically every organization of the motion pictur industry on the West Coast is at work t counteract effects of contentious censor ship promoters and the various state laws introduced, that are of an antagonistic na ture to film interests.

The Motion Picture Directors' Associa tion has named a committee of active members and President William D. Taylor of the Association has written to all film industry organizations urging necessity o a central committee composed of one mem ber of each of the organizations in Los Angeles.

The anti-censorship committee of the Screen Writers' Guild affiliated with the Editors' League of America, under the chairmanship of Frank E. Woods, general production of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has several projects under way.

Michigan Opposes Idea

Opposition to the plans of Michigan reformers to institute state censorship of motion pictures is rapidly developing. Perhaps the greatest opponent of all is the new governor, Alex. J. Groesbeck of Detroit, who has come out openly against the project.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

Watterson R. Rothacker left for New York Sunday, to be there several days, and Douglas D. Rothacker is spending several weeks at the New York Industrial Division branch.

A. E. Pattison, secretary and treasurer of the Pathescope Company, announces his resignation from that office and as a director of the company. The following directors also have resigned: E. C. Lowe, who had charge of motion picture work in the American Expeditionary Forces; Fay-Cooper Cola, associated with the department of anthropology of the Field Museum and famous as a scientist, and George F. Hart, vice-president of the Guardian Savings and Trust Company of Cleveland, Ohio.

The building at 1029 W. Adams street, occupied by the Consolidated Portrait & Frame Company, well known to the trade as makers of lobby display and other frames, was badly damaged by fire early on the morning of February 19. The fire is believed to have been caused by combustion of oil rags or varnish compounds used by the firm. Plans for the continuance of manufacturing have not yet been given out, but it is understood that production will be resumed at the earliest possible date.

Harris P. Wolfberg, whose resignation as district manager of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation was recently announced in these columns, left Chicago on February 19 for Pittsburgh, where he will assume his new duties as vice-president and general sales manager of the Lake & Export Coal Corporation, one of the biggest fuel companies in America. Mr. Wolfberg's square dealing and ability have won him hundreds of friends in the motion picture industry, who regret to see him leave this field but wish him the greatest success in his new venture.

B. A. Wormold, of the Marquette theatre, La Salle, Ill., is planning to enlarge and remodel his theatre and has just returned from a trip to Cincinnati, where he went in search of ideas which he can utilize in improving his house.

Ray Brian of the Capitol theatre at Pekin, Ill., is back after being confined to his home for eight weeks with an attack of typhoid fever.

Armbruster and Randigger, both Chicagoans, have opened a new theatre at Booneville Ind., and report business starting off in a satisfactory way.

The Wonderland theatre at Clinton, Ind., is to be closed during the summer months in order that it may be entirely remodeled and refurnished. When its doors open again in August it will have seven hundred seats and be a house that is modern in every respect, according to the plans made by Scheu and Scheu, the owners.

During his recent trip through Illinois and Indiana, Harry Weiss, of Superior Screen Service, gathered data on business conditions from the exhibitor's standpoint and reports the consensus of seventy-five theatre owners is as follows: Business is not as good as it was during the war, but when the bottom is reached it will still be twice as good as it was before the war. There is probably not one house in Illinois or Indiana that actually is losing money and twenty-five new houses are either planned or being constructed at the present time. Mr. Weiss expects to leave on another trip over the territory about March 1, traveling in his auto, as the mild weather has put the roads in excellent condition.

The Riviera theatre at Peru, Ill., has been purchased by F. J. Schloeser, owner of the Royal theatre of that city.

Chicago film circles were saddened by the death of Frank D. Ward, partner of Max Hyman in the Dearborn theatre, and a veteran exhibitor.

Harry Gramp, owner of many theatres throughout this territory, has purchased two more theatres at Beloit, Wis., thus getting exclusive control of the motion picture situation in that town.

Savage Amusement Enterprises have moved into their new offices at Alton, Ill., which embody all the latest conveniences and will give W. N. Savage and his office force the necessary space to conduct their business. Mr. Savage is one of the most versatile and prominent of Illinois' motion picture exhibitors and besides conducting his amusement enterprises, is mayor of Alton, owner of the bill posting plant, the steamboat lines, having headquarters in Alton and plying the Mississippi River, three theatres, one aerdrome and several road shows.

Brentlinger and Mason, well known to Chicago moving picture circles as owners of a string of movie theatres throughout Indiana, have opened up offices at Indianapolis in order to better serve their interests.

Victor Kramer, during his recent visit to Chicago, sold the Illinois and Indiana rights for Lina Cavallieri in "The Mad Love," Diana Allen in "Voices," and for the Drury Lane spectacle, "The Handicap," to Superior Screen Service.

Universal Chicago Exchange has added two more men to its sales staff. They are J. E. Armgardt, formerly with Goldwyn and Richard Fox, who has been salesman for First National and Celebrated. Both are well known throughout the territory and will cover country territory for Universal. Word reaching Chicago from Manager Lesserman, who is vacationing at Hollywood, reports that he is having such a splendid time that he will not start home until sometime in April.

Franklin B. Coates, director for Mesco Pictures Corporation, of Kansas City, passed last week at the Rothacker laboratories making the final cuts and putting the titles in the two six reel features, "Jesse James Under The Black Flag" and "Jesse James The Outlaw," which will be released by Mesco at an early date. Premier showings of these two pictures will be held in Kansas City this month.

Ascher Brothers have completed plans for a house organ to be called Ascher's Theatrical Magazine, the first issue of which will appear at an early date. Fifty thousand copies of the magazine will be distributed each month free to patrons of Ascher Brother's houses in Chicago and other cities. The magazine will be printed on heavy enamel stock and will be profusely illustrated. Among its features will be a list of attractions for all Ascher theatres following the month of issue, an answer and inquiry column and snappy items about stars and pictures. C. E. Young of Young's Publicity Service, Grand Rapids, Michigan, will be the publisher of the magazine, which will be edited by Roy Swan, publicity man for Ascher Brothers, with headquarters at their Chicago office.

The Society for Visual Education has purchased the Acme Motion Picture Projector Company's plant at 1134 West Austin Avenue, for a reported consideration of $100,000. The Society will continue to make the present Acme models in addition to a new projector developed by Professor Forest Ray Moulton, of the University of Chicago, who is also secretary for the Society of Visual Education. Both moving pictures and stills can be shown on the Moulton machine. An apartment house on the lot adjoining the Acme plant will be torn down to make way for a four story factory addition.

Miss Lillian Walker, who has a big following among Chicago movie fans, although she has not been seen on the silver screen here for sometime, was making personal appearances at Jones, Linick & Schaefer's McVicker's Theatre this week and proved a decided drawing card. One of the pleasant features of her stay in Chicago was a luncheon given in her honor at the College Inn by Ralph Kettering, to which representatives of the trade and daily press were invited.

Manager Ben Beadell, of Stoll Film Corporation's Chicago Exchange, reports that the number of contracts he and his salesman have booked for the series of thirteen Stoll features has passed the two hundred mark, and that every key center in his territory, which includes Northern Illinois and Northern Indiana, has been closed. Mr. Beadell had been forced to borrow extra prints from other territories in order to meet the demand for playing dates and is wearing a smile known as the kind that won't come off.

Joe Friedman, of Celebrated, caught cold a day or so after his return from the Federated convention in San Francisco and has been suffering from a touch of lumbago, but is pluckily sticking to his desk so far and hopes to get to feeling right again without taking a lay off.

A good crowd of exhibitors attended the preview of "The Wrong Woman," the Abrams feature being released in this territory by Favorite Players Film Corporation, and Manager Ike Von Ronkel was very much pleased with the favorable comments on the story and acting of Rubye De Remer, who has the star part.

M. J. Mintz, who has been touring the country in the interests of Synchronized Scenario Music Company, returned to Chicago from New York this week with A. J. Abrams, and states that the scores being prepared by the Company will be ready for distribution about the first of April. The first opportunity that Chicago has had to hear one of the Synchronized scores was at the Randolph Theatre Tuesday where the Synchronized score was used to give "The Kid" the proper musical setting and proved to be most excellent.

Music and the Picture

The Man in the Music

By Charles D. Isaacson

WHEN you look down the right side of your program if it happens to be in a restaurant, you see the prices of the dishes and nowadays they give you the clue as to what you wish to order. But at a concert or the motion picture show, you see names—names of composers long dead—Beethoven, Verdi, Mozart, Berlioz, Dvorak, Mendelssohn, Chopin, Liszt and others. Even if you are a seasoned music lover, these names are little more than plain type on paper. They mean nothing. And nothing which means nothing should be allowed to remain.

For me, every name on the program suggests a living entity. The composer even if he be dead, is recreated for me. I see him shining out of the printed page; I see him materialized in the performance on the stage, whether it be through the orchestra, the pipe organ or the violinist. What is the music but the reflection of a man? As he lived he wrote; if we can understand his life, we can the better know his music. His hopes and ambitions are in the notes; his sufferings and his successes are there too. Some may think it queer that we try to "see" through the music the man long dead. But let me tell you something—a little aphorism of mine concerning good and bad music. It is this; There is music by composers long dead—music that is living; also there is music by composers that are living—music that has long been dead.

But to return to the narrative. Let me tell you a little story. I was in a group of men and women during the war. One young woman read a bit from a letter she had received from a boy "over there." It was interesting but made no particular impression on the folks. Then the young woman mentioned the name of the boy—several knew him. The whole attitude changed; those who knew the writer, wanted to hear his words again—and they listened in an entirely different way.

What then if the listeners in your theatre "know" the man in the music!

I am mentioning this phase of our subject because I want to touch on every angle of the project of music-development—every angle which will serve to make the music a stronger, more intimate thing with your patrons. I am giving you the benefit of an experience I have had with my millions in The Globe Concerts for the People and I can say very frankly, that the "Man in the Music" Idea has opened up new vistas in our scheme.

Thus when people see the name of Beethoven, or hear his music, the man in the music appears somewhat in this way:

*"He does not see us as he enters the room but we behold him with awe. He is little, just five feet five inches in height, with very broad shoulders, which make him look the image of strength, like a little Gibraltar ready to stand almost anything, prepared for any shock.

"He is dressed in a light blue frock coat, with yellow buttons; underneath is a white waistcoat and sackcloth. But both coat and waistcoat are unbuttoned and show the signs of long wear. The whole appearance is untidy—one can tell that the coat-tails are heavily weighted with something—probably books. ("He keeps his ear-trumpet in there," the housekeeper explains, "but it's useless to him now.") His hat is a gray felt, thrown on the back of his great forehead.

"The moment Beethoven enters the room, he puts his hat on the top of a coat-tree; it is dripping with water, and his unkempt hair is also wet. He instantly goes over to the piano, noticing nothing or nobody; puts on his double eyeglasses and sits at the desk, taking a pen in hand. The hands are hairy and large, and seem scarcely the sort to belong to an esthete.

"But the face! What a study! The forehead is high and commanding. The eyes are large and gray, shining brilliantly. The mouth is firm and tightly closed, the nose long and heavy, the chin square and cleft. What a face! What tragedy is written there, what pent-up suffering is depicted in that countenance.

"I cannot talk. Speak louder; I am deaf. I cannot talk with anybody," he says to us.

"We move forward and hand a paper to the Master. He adjusts his glasses more carefully and reads it with a concentrated expression on his face.

"So? You come in and you beard the lion in his den," and on his stern face a very human smile appears, showing two rows of sparkling teeth. "You are very brave. Are you sure I will not bite you? You will find it difficult to understand me and make me catch what you say. Here, come and sit down beside me. You see, I cannot hear," and he taps his ear, and hands a paper and pencil to us.

"Here I sit alone, endlessly writing down the notes, the music which I never hear, but which nevertheless resounds in my heart in greater beauty than any living man might play it. Sometimes I sigh that I am so weak and such a worthless instrument to transcribe the magnificence which makes joyous my spiritual existence.

"Can you think of me—a volcano whose summit is riveted down, while underneath burning lava, boiling, shoving, moved upwards by tightened strength, is fighting its way outward Can you feel within your own breast the agony of this volcano, feeling wthin me the burning lava, fighting, rushing onward and striving to flow out with a gush that might lay me dead at a stroke?"

"'The first duty of a musician is to hear what is to be heard. Is it not so? He must be eternally on the alert to catch the song and laughter of the brooks and the flowers and men and women. The greatest tragedy that could befall any musician is to be rendered incapable of hearing.'"

When the strains of Verdi sound, I have taught the audience to see:

"The grand old man of opera stood out on the veranda and watched the moon rise in its zenith, and with his eyes followed a night bird in its flight. Tall, erect, white-haired and white-bearded, he held his lonely station, surveying the expanse of his farm lands. The cool perfumed air of the summer night cast a mystical spell over the scene, while the once-in-a-while chirp of the droning insects made a theme for a nocturne in B flat.

"He glanced over the grounds, saw the little theatre he had made to give free concerts for the people, saw the park he had given over to the neighbors, saw the low-walled entrance to his house which was open to all his friends—and that meant all the world.

"On his face was a slight tinge of sadness, but it was a sadness which broke into a tender smile of humanity and intense understanding. Here was the face of a noble father, or a beloved minister, or a benefactor of man—a friend, a sympathetic protector of supremely superior wisdom.

"All alone, like a giant elm tree on a level plain, the fine old creature towered. His physique was over-powering, commanding, and yet with it all he had a courtliness of manner like a young man's. For hours he stood there motionless—the moon faded, the farm lands faded, the world of reality faded—and before his eyes there passed in panorama the drama of his life, the true story of Giuseppe Verdi, a more exciting romance than any opera he ever

The Committee of Five, which is to draft the by-laws, and to summon the executive board, are to meet on the afternoon of February 25th. They are Messrs. Briel, Luz, Riesenfeld, Rothafel, Tremaine, with your chairman pro tem. as ex-officio member.

The call is issued to the field to suggest the names of such representative producers, exhibitors, musicians, composers, publishers, who ought to be upon the executive board. Whom would YOU suggest?

The call is also sent forth for any ideas, suggestions, etc., concerning matters which should be incorporated in the constitution and by-laws of the Association of Motion Picture and Musical Interests.

Have you registered your name among the first members?

Notification is received that the National Association of Organists, as a result of the agitation of the First Conference at the Astor, has organized a Committee of Reference, headed by F. S. Adams of the N. Y. Rialto and Firmin Swinnen, to furnish without charge information concerning organs, their installation, position, acoustical properties, voicing, repairing, etc. (See special article concerning the Committee, as published in this week's Music department.)

Word is received that the Chicago Herald and Examiner in an important article about the Conference, predicts the engagement of the biggest musical artists in the film theatres.

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

Frontier of the Stars—

Thomas Meighan always draws well for me and this picture was no exception. Business was fair and comments on the picture showed interest, though not the enthusiastic applause of the other pictures which I have played with this star. (East.)

Meighan is a great favorite here and will always pack a house. This vehicle is satisfactory, but a startling winner. (Middle West.)

Picture pleased generally and drew well. Business fine.

Forbidden Fruit—

This picture drew well and brought excellent business. (East.)

Held over a second week to excellent crowds. Pleased everyone who saw it. (Middle West.)

Midsummer Madness—

Did fair business but had a flock of objections from the long hairs, who perhaps did not see it. (West.)

Found this to be an average picture with fair business. Some censorship comment on same. (West.)

Inside the Cup—

Fine picture but one that appeals most strongly to the thinking class. Held up comfortably for two weeks. (Middle West.)

Paying the Piper—

A good picture that played to good business. (East.)

A model display for "Hush" by one of the cleverest advertisers considering his facilities in the business, D. H. Schumann, manager of the Florence theatre, Pasadena, Cal.

Idols of Clay—

Continued to draw big crowds in second week. (East.)

The Charm School—

Very good. Good business for entire week. (East.)

Brewster's Millions—

Good comedy bringing the usual business. (West.)

Always Audacious—

Best picture Reid has made. Kept house in continuous uproar. (Middle West.)

Passion—

Offered at advance prices ranging from 25 cents to $1. Big advertising campaign. About the usual attendance but box office totals much higher. Continued for second week. (Middle West.)

Dangerous Business—

One of Constance Talmadge's best and went over big at this house. Did splendid business for week. (Middle West.)

The Great Adventure—

A treat for those who like a good time. House was in a chuckle all the time. Good business. Steady all week. (Middle West.)

The Kid—

Wonderfully entertaining. Sure did go over big. Packed houses each performance. (West.)

GOLDWYN

The Northwind's Malice—

This went over splendidly. Vera Gordon's work received much praise, and the consensus of opinion was that the "romance" of the young couple could have been dispensed with. (East.)

The Branding Iron—

Fine. A corking picture sure to please the best audiences, and with a sure-fire feminine appeal. Sure got the money for me. (East.)

The Penalty—

Depressing subject. Good acting. Fair business. (East.)

Bunty Pulls the Strings—

A very good production, splendidly acted and mounted, but which did not seem to attract average business. (East.)

The Great Lover—

Only fair picture and played to average business for a week. (Middle West.)

METRO

Cinderella's Twin—

A real nice little play, if you like light stuff. (Middle West.)

Body and Soul—

A mediocre picture playing to fair business. (East.)

Polly With a Past—

Not much above the average production. Fair. (East.)

UNITED ARTISTS

The Mark of Zorro—

Great picture. Away and the best Fairbanks has ever offered. Packed houses all the time, both because of popularity of star, and because of merit of production. (Middle West.)

The Love Light—

Picture fairly interesting but disappointed some of the fans. Busines only fair. (East.)

ROBERTSON-COLE

One Man in a Million—

Beban made personal appearances during the run here of the week. Absolutely capacity daily. Picture highly enjoyed. (Middle West.)

So Long Letty—

Good picture to good business. (East.)

ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS

A Thousand to One—

An ordinary picture with which we had poor business during run. (West.)

Good picture but not a money getter here. Bosworth name has absolutely no box office value here. (Middle West.)

Lying Lips—

Consider this one of the biggest productions of the season. Corking story, unexcelled cast, magnificently mounted, sure to please. Sorry I didn't have double my seating capacity. (East.)

Love—

Elaborately mounted sex story that help up fairly good for seven day run. (East.)

STATE RIGHTS

Isobel or the Trails End—

Very entertaining picture. Not quite up to the standard of the last few Curwood pictures. Good average. (Middle West.)

Excellent story, well acted and fairly directed. Author known and liked. Good crowds. (Middle West.)

Splendid production. Received unstinted praise. Prologue especially praised. Opened to full houses at two first-run theatres simultaneously. (Middle West.)

Very good picture which drew more than usual business. (West.)

The Golden Trail—

Not such a bad little picture, though surely not a good one. Had some wonderful snow-stuff, and some very good photography, altho parts of it was very bad. Just an average state-right production. (East.)

Up in Mary's Attic—

Title lends itself readily to advertising but the picture was considered off color by our people and they didn't enthuse. (Middle West.)

PATHE

The Riddle: Woman—

Only an average picture and not up to some of Geraldine Farrar's previous productions. Business was only fair during the week we ran it. (Middle West.)

The Devil—

One of the photoplay masterpieces of the age. Wonderful production. Excellent acting. But a picture that will appeal only to the discriminating. (Middle West.)

SELZNICK

Broadway and Home—

An average picture which because of popularity of star at this theatre did well at box office. (East.)

REALART

Blackbirds—

One of the poorest features I've ever had the misfortune to play. Story was worked to death, and star did not live up to one-tenth of her press notices. My audience was much disappointed. (East.)

VITAGRAPH

Dead Men Tell No Tales—

Attracted large crowds of patrons who like melodrama. Title gives clew to character of story so those who came were prepared for thrills and got 'em. No picture for anyone with nerves. (Middle West.)

This display for "The Money Changers," is by the Terminal theatre, Newark, N. J.

Mayer's Exploitation Astonishes Akron

"Outside the Law" Engagement at Allen Theatre Gets Much Publicity

A. T. SIMMONS, manager of the Allen theatre, Akron, O., and J. H. Mayer, Universal exploitation representative, worked up an exploitation campaign for the showing of "Outside the Law" at the Allen last week that broke rceords for the Ohio city.

The most fruitful tie-up was the giving away of 100 Priscilla Tams through the Akron Daily Times. A mysterious woman called "Silky Moll" (the name used by Miss Dean in "Outside the Law") appeared on the streets of Akron at certain hours, wearing a Priscilla Dean Tam, a standard tam o' shanter now on the market.

Women approaching her and saying "You are Outside the Law" received coupons entitling them to a Priscilla Dean Tam. "Silky Moll" wrote up her experiences every day for the Times. She was almost mobbed on several occasions by women eager to get the tams. It is estimated that more than 3,000 women visited the business streets of Akron solely to catch "Silky Moll" the first day.

Another fruitful tie-up was made with the Akron Press, having to do with different expressions of Miss Dean's eyes. Hundreds of Akron residents took an active interest in solving the problems presented and wrote either to the newspaper or to the theatre concerning the star. A third stunt which created great interest was the search for a girl with a thumb print resembling that of Miss Dean. Thousands of heralds boosting this search were scattered through Akron. Interest ran high. Miss Katherine Ward, of No. 895 E. Market street, Akron, was found to have the most closely resembling thumbprint. She was the recipient of a handsome gift by the management of the Allen.

The Priscilla Dean Tams also were used for further exploitation. Yeager's, one of the leading department stores, devoted a window to tams, with picture of Miss Dean and cards announcing the coming picture. The ushers and ticket sellers at the Allen also wore bright red tams.

Further newspaper publicity and general interest was obtained from a series of 24-sheet stands bearing the caption: "If You Dance on Sunday—Are You Outside the Law?"

There was some consternation in Akron as to the possibility the city was being visted by Blue Law agitators. The posters were followed by pictorial stands.

Among the other interest-creating stunts worked by Simmons and Mayer were the mailing from Cleveland of 16,000 teaser postcards to Akron residents, and for the second week telephonic communication with every telephone subscriber in Akron, asking if they had seen "Outside the Law."

Lobby decorations for "The Stealers" designed by Manager A. B. Cook of the Istrione theatre of Jackson, Miss.

Lobby display for "Back to God's Country" by the Grand theatre of Knoxville, Iowa

Red Line Extra Gets Cheyenne Attention

A big red line across the top of the front page of several hundred State Tribunes was a recent exploitation stunt which M. H. Todd, manager of the Princess theatre, Cheyenne, Wyoming, recently put over in the interests of his vaudeville and picture program.

The papers were purchased and rushed to the job printer who added the red banner immediately, the special edition going out with the regular one, so far as the public was concerned.

The Tribune gave Mr. Todd a front page story about the stunt and the red line extras caused a lot of talk.

Ray Has New Angle to Special Section Stunt

The opera house of Abbeville, S. C., worked in a new angle to the cooperative newspaper display tie-up in a special section gotten out for "Something to Think About." R. Glen Ray, advertising manager of the opera house, conceived the idea of hiding one word of a sentence boosting a local hospital fund in the text of each ad and offering prizes for people who would pick out the sentence from the advertising and write a short story why it was "something to think about."

The prizes offered were only admissions to the theatre, but the stunt aroused no end of interest.

Shea Theatres Have New Magazine

"The Sheaology" is the title of a li tle magazine which Harold B. Frankli managing director of the Shea Amus ment Company, Buffalo, has originat for the benefit and guidance of the She theatres employes.

While "The Sheaology" carries a litt advertising from local firms, it is most devoted to the interests of the She houses and the people who are employe in various capacities. There is little "h air" in the first number issued for th month of February. Advice and admon tions are given considerable attention.

The mission of the magazine is ev dently to aid in building up an efficien organization. The text is written by th Shea employes with Mr. Franklin spon soring the opening page. Others who con tribute to the first issue are Charles Lodge Arthur Amm, Vincent McFaul and Henr Carr. Ralph M. Moseley is the editor.

Dubuque Theatre Presentation Artistic

Manager Frank Burlingame of th Strand theatre at Dubuque, Iowa, put on a stunt during the week of January 13th that not only netted him a goodly shar of profits, but established a reputation fo himself and his theatre of always being first with the new and original.

The picture billed that week was "Be hold My Wife," the opening scenes o which are laid in the Canadian snowbound lands. Just before the showing of the pic ture, the theatre was completely darkened and then, by means of electrical appli ances, a snow scene effected, with seem ingly hundreds of snowflakes falling over the audience.

This is the exploitation which the Pelosis theatre, Old Forge, Pa., used to aid in putting over "Down on the Farm" playing recently at this house

Plunkett Stages First Prologue for "The Kid"

Joe Plunkett, manager of the Strand heatre, New York, has the honor of beng the exhibitor presenting the first prologue for "The Kid," which was given ts first showing at that theatre for the ast two weeks.

The setting represented the rear court of a tenement alley, and required a horizon drop, a tenement wall, two wings, a couple of lamp posts, several boxes and wo barrels.

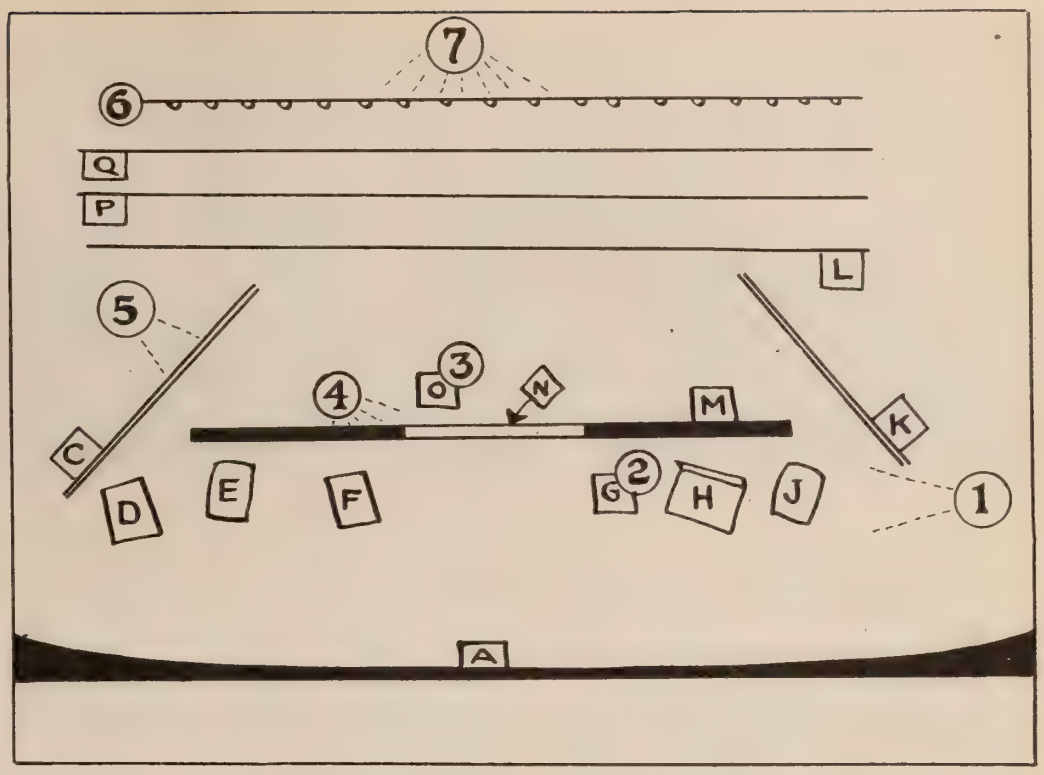
The cast required five persons, a male quartette, and a man dressed as a policeman. The action was as follows:

At rise of curtain, four men made up as tramps are squatting within boxes and barrels. Only their heads and shoulders are outside the boxes. The quartette is singing. At the end of the chorus, policeman strolls through the scene. At sight of the cop, the men immediately duck their heads inside the boxes. The cop is satisfied that nothing is wrong, and he goes along his beat, swinging his club easily. As soon as the cop is out of sight, the quartette swings into "For She Lives Down In Our Alley." The curtain drops at the end of this song.

Mr. Plunkett got over the night effect in the alley by using a nice combination of green and blue lighting tones.

The following is the key to the accompanying diagram:

A—Footlights; not in use.



Line drawing cut referring to the prologue wh ich Manager Joseph L. Plunkett presented at the New York Strand Theatre for "The Kid"

E—Barrel.

F—Box.

G—Lamp post, eight inches in front of tenement wall.

H—Box.

J—Barrel.

K—Right wing, tenement frame.

L—Blue horizon drop. (Would be all right to substitute a tenement drop showing tops of buildings, alleys, clothes lines, etc., for this.)

M—Tenement wall. (Mr. Plunkett had this painted. Its construction is simple and the painting is easy.)

N—Archway in tenement wall.

O—Lamp which is placed two inches in front of horizon drop, and which is one half height of other lamp. This difference in size gives effect of distance.

P and Q—Plain blue borders.

1—Calcium light placed in right wing about five feet six inches from floor. This light is heavy blue tone.

2—Light in back of street lamp. This is deep orange color. Be careful not to let this light shine red.

3—Light in back of other street lamp. Same color as No. 2.

4—Blue bunch light, $1,000, to light up horizon drop.

5—Spot from right wing. This is about ten feet high and is aimed almost at centure of stage. This light is dark green.

6—Border lights. Deep blue.

"Bunty" Prologue Goes Big at Los Angeles

An atmospheric prologue was staged for "Bunty Pulls the Strings," when it was presented at the California Theatre, Los Angeles. I. P. Wilkerson, production manager for the California, was responsible for the stunt. It aroused much comment and appreciation on the part of patrons and undoubtedly helped to stimulate interest in the showing.

Mr. Wilkerson had a special back-drop painted representing a typical Scotch village scene. In the foreground was a practicable house. Four persons were engaged to sing popular Scotch songs, solos, duets and quartettes. The singers were dressed as Bunty, her father and brother and as Ellen Dunlop in the photoplay.

A very pretty effect was gained by means of a cloud machine. As the curtain rose, white clouds drifted across the backdrop, gradually turning to black as the action proceeded. At the finish the lights were dimmed very low, except those in the cottage window, and rain began to fall, gently at first, but increasing to a drenching downpour at the close of the prologue.

Special Show for Newspaper Fraternity

Fort Smith, Ark., theatres are closed on Sundays. Upon that fact, C. B. Woods, manager of the Palace theatre, decided to base his exploitation campaign for "Go and Get It."

Knowing that "Go and Get It" made a direct appeal to newspaper folk, and in view of the fact it was dedicated to such workers, Mr. Woods sent the invitation to all newspapers, stating that all employes in all departments of the paper would be admitted to a complimentary showing to be held Sunday. Undoubtedly he felt that the Sunday performance would result in many reviews of the picture. He was right in the belief, for the Monday issues carried columns of comment on "Go and Get It."

Incidentally, Mr. Woods also very subtly showed the newspaper folk that Sunday motion pictures are not bad at all, and that it is not perhaps fair for the great citizenship of Fort Smith to be deprived of this entertainment. At least, this is the thought that stuck with the editorial writers, and several printed editorials in favor of Sunday motion pictures resulted.

Brooklyn Strand Payin Special Attention to Holiday

Chapters out of American history, r produced with a faithfulness for the a tual events that rarely characterizes suc an attempt, was the Brooklyn Ma Strand theatre's method of observi Washington's birthday, the entire overtu number having been constructed into wh amounted to a brief story of the patriot life in music, costume tableau and motic picture.

School children had presented to the in ten minutes more accurate historical a mosphere from Washington's period tha twice that time put in in reading wou have created. Managing Director Edwa L. Hyman designated the historical ove ture, "Pages of History."

A George Washington novelty fil opened the overture with the symphon orchestra as accompaniment. The Brook lyn Mark Strand quartette in colonia garb, from silken breeches to powdere wig, sang against a background of blac cyclorama and scrim with a faint outlin of Betsy Ross barely visible. As the son concluded the lights brightened an brought out a tableau of Betsy Ross sew ing on the first American flag and singin "The Sweetest Story Ever Told." Es telle Carey, soprano, was Betsy Ross. Sh was elevated on a platform which brough her absolutely in the center of the scrim

The lights came up and disclosed a colo nial set with Mlle. Sylvia, danseuse, as revolutionary period madame, interpretin a dignified gavotte. The climax of th overture was a reproduction of the cele brated painting, "The Spirit of '76." Th male quartette sang "Hail, Columbia, against the scrim upon which was super imposed a short motion picture of th flag. The effect sought was that of th singers hardly visible in the fluttering fold of Old Glory.

Divorce Signs Help Put Over Picture

The lobby of the Alamo No. 2 Theatre, Atlanta, attracted considerable attention during the playing of "The New York Idea" recently.

Divorce, and the ease with which it is secured was the basis of the simple and inexpensive, but distinctly effective lobby. Two immense barrel-hoops, gilded, swung from white ribbons at either side of the lobby. On these hoops were signs which read "In New York, they make wedding rings this size so they'll be easy to slip out of!"

In the center of the lobby, in front of two big frames which held photographs and stills, was a compo-board cut-out, the main feature of which was a clever copy of a railway ticket, reading "From Atlanta to Reno, Incompatability Railroad."

On either side of the lobby, were other signs, one reading, "If you contemplate getting a divorce, be sure to see how Alice Brady gets hers, in 'The New York Idea'", the other reading, "She wanted a divorce—or thought she did. See how she got it. Alice Brady in 'The New York Idea'".

Hyman Originates Another Presentation Novelty

Ingenuity and a touch of the artist's imagination added to a Prizma colored reel showing blossoms in the varying stages of opening and closing doubled the life that was injected into a novelty dance featured recently at the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre.

Managing Director Edward L. Hyman gave the dancer, Grace DeCarlton, living scenery for her toe-stepping. He took a Prizma reel originally titled "If Flowers Could Speak." The colored moving blossoms were projected upon scrim which had a black drop for a background. Red border lights helped frame the moving pictures and the dancer. The effect was that of a dancer within the opening and shutting blossoms. It seemed as if Miss DeCarlton was in a mist which raised and lowered among the delicately hued blooms.

"Kismet" Given Elaborate Presentation in Small Town House

"Kismet" received an elaborate and artistic presentation at the Daffin theatre, Tallahassee, Florida, as will be shown by the accompanying cuts. Manager C. E. Daffin staged an atmospheric prologue with members of the Dramatic Club of the Florida State College for Women providing the talent. The prologue opened with a singer rendering "Sands of the Desert" to be followed by a solo dancer who was covered by different colored floods. After the solo dancer came a group of eight dancers all dressed in typical harem costumes with spangled veils and vari-colored shawls. In concluding the dance the performers fell to the floor with their heads bowed at the feet of the Caliph. Thirty people took part in the prologue. The presentation ran thirty minutes.

The lobby and house decorations for the showing are best explained by the cuts. The ticket seller was attired in oriental costume. All the indirect lights were inclosed in rose silk draperies. Incense burners were placed throughout the theatre. The ushers were also attired in oriental costumes.

The Dramatic Club of the Florida State College for Women received ten per cent, and the Silver Cross Hospital, controlled by the King's Daughters, was given fifteen per cent of the gross receipts. These organizations sold the tickets and they were exchanged at the box office for reserved seats. Their participation in the affair added local interest and resulted in record business for the four performances. Those who witnessed the prologue pronounced it the best entertainment ever given in Tallahassee.

Gets Out Press Book for the Newspapers

Because different conditions require different methods of exploitation, Leslie Whelan, exploitation representative for Paramount's Detroit territory, decided to handle the situation differently in planning the exploitation for "Midsummer Madness" at the Temple theatre, Toledo, Ohio.

The usual array of window displays, recruiting tie-ups and outdoor signs were subordinated to the Temple Theatre News, which made its appearance with a full-page clip sheet of press stories and cuts on "Midsummer Madness." The page provided substantial ammunition for the local papers, which gave the Temple theatre much better stories, by virtue of the abundance of prepared articles at their disposal, than they might otherwise have done.

The clip sheets, marking the debut of the Temple Theatre News, were also distributed among the house's patrons several days prior to the opening of "Midsummer Madness," and scored a hit. It was a New Year's number of the paper, and the year opened auspiciously, according to preliminary reports from the box-office on "Midsummer Madness."

Inexpensive Stunt Gets Box Office Receipts

An inexpensive stunt that doubled box office receipts for a three day engagement was staged by Manager J. G. Knapp, of the Strand theatre, San Bernardino, Cal., during the showing of "The Truth About Husbands."

Manager Knapp arranged with a woman of striking appearance to attend the theatre and during the showing of the last reel for her to rise in her seat and scream, "It's a lie!" He saw to it that the frenzied emotional act reached the copy desk of the Daily Sun city editor. The next morning's paper carried a front page story that created among the women a desire to see the picture. Herewith is a reproduction from the story from the first page of the San Bernardino Daily Sun:

"A sensational incident occurred at the Strand theatre last night when a young woman arose in the audience and screamed: 'It's a lie!' during the screening of the picture play, 'The Truth About Husbands.'

"'It's a lie! Men are not like that,' she declared as she was led into the manager's office. 'I refuse to let my faith in my husband be broken by this picture.'

"The house had been lighted during the excitement and it was several minutes before the excitement subdued and the picture continued.

"The woman, who said she lived in a nearby city, apologized to Manager Knapp and then left the theatre. She said she did not know what she was doing."

Dan Burgum, manager of the Garden theatre, Des Moines, Iowa, whose exploitation for "Once to Every Woman" is described in the accompanying article

Naturally in pulling this sort of a stunt it is advisable to tip off the newspaper men, else in case of a slip up the idea might prove a bomerang.

Gives Phillips Picture Artistic Presentation

"Once to Every Woman" has be given artistic presentation by Dan Bu gum, manager of the Garden theatre, D Moines.

Manager Burgum engaged a noted l cal singer and then presented the pictu somewhat as was done at the initial sho ing at the Hotel Astor, New York, e cept that the Des Moines exhibitor add some novel effects.

Accompanied by an augmented orche tra, the picture was run in the usual ma ner up to the point when the screen moth says in subtitle, "My baby makes her d but in New York tonight."

Here Burgum stopped the picture ar threw a spot light on his stage, revealin the local singer, attired as Margueri in "Faust." She sang the Jewel Son from that opera. When she had complete and was acknowledging the applause o the audience, the picture was starte again, showing Dorothy Phillips being a plauded by the audience on the screen.

The picture then proceeded until t scene just before Dorothy Phillips is fir upon from an opera house box. T singer took up "The Lullaby Song," fro "East is West," which fitted in with t Oriental lullaby being sung by the scree star. The song continued until the sh —which was reproduced by the trap ma

This cut is fully explained by the story appearing below relative to how S O'Hare, manager of the Armory theatre, Clarinda, Iowa, put over "Nineteen and Phyllis"

O'Hare's Latest Exploitation Idea

Again S. O'Hare, manager of the Harand Company theatres, of Clarinda, Iowa, s the originator of another brand new exloitation stunt, this time for "Nineteen nd Phyllis."

Above is a cut that shows the six pages f a little calendar which is self-explanaory. The pages of the book were fasened together with red "baby" ribbon, ied through two holes punched through he top of each page.

The pages were printed, locally, all toether and then cut and assembled. The ibbon cost $1.25, a hundred and twenty-ve yards being required for the job.

In assembling and tieing up the "love etters," Mr. O'Hare displayed unusual oresight and knowledge of human nature. He secured the services of a number of retty local girls by telling them that they ould be assisted by one film salesman nd the services of the film salesman by ust mentioning the pretty girls. The ctual work of fixing up 500 books took bout four hours. How long was actually onsumed during the process, figuring that evoted to recesses, is not stated by Mr. O'Hare.

As an advertising stunt, the letters went ver like a house afire.

Scattered Teaser Ads Get Excellent Results

When "Paying the Piper" played the Temple Theatre, Toledo, O., Leslie F. Whelan, exploitation representative for Paramount Pictures in the Detroit territory, who planned the advertising on the showing, experimented with a new method of newspaper advertising that brought results by its novelty.

Instead of concentrating on one large space, Whelan ran teaser ads throughout the paper. He had eight different advertisements in one issue of the Toledo Times that were unique for their wording.

"Paint the Town Red but PAY THE PIPER, Temple Theatre, Sunday" was the wording of one. Another read: "Murder If You Will But Pay the Piper, Temple Theatre." A third read: "When the Piper Gets the Dice He Rolls a Natural. So You'll PAY THE PIPER.

"You Can Lock Out the Landlord But You'll PAY THE PIPER" was the final word of warning on the last page.

While advertising of this nature may not always be successful, it is decidedly effective when tried at sufficiently rare intervals to be a novelty. In this instance it produced results for the Temple Theatre played "Paying the Piper" to far above normal box office receipts.

Los Angeles Theatre Stages Atmospheric Prologue

For the showing of "Hold Your Horses," the California theatre, Los Angeles, staged an "atmospheric prologue" which attracted much attention among motion picture-goers of that city.

Against a very realistic backdrop which showed a street scene with the front of a church with its tall steeple in the background, and brick and stone buildings in the foreground, were placed seven persons, the attention being centered on a man in the white suit of a street sweeper. Canavan, the character played by Mr. Moore, is a member of the street cleaning force in New York City in the first part of the photoplay. Standing on one side of the street-sweeper was a policeman; still further to the side, a street peddler with a pushcart. On the other side of the street-sweeper was a woman dressed in the height of fashion and two newsboys.

The man who impersonated Tom Moore as Canavan in the prologue was William H. O'Hara, a tenor with an excellent voice. He sang the Irish song, "A Little Bit of Heaven," just before the title, "Hold Your Horses," was thrown upon the screen.

Sneider Has Ideal Small Town Calendar

The best small town calendar idea that as as yet come to our attention is a week tear off" proposition originated by the rand theatre of Bessemer, Ala.

The Grand staples six neat heralds, ree by ten inches, printed on good qual- y paper and illustrated by a 13½ em. cene cut to a postal card stock, back on hich is the bill for the following week abbreviated form. The back also offers ree tickets to the person who will return our covers.

According to John B. Sneider, assistant anager of the theatre, it is this last idea hat is to be especially recommended, since he cover carries the full bill for a week head and the person collecting four cov- rs is bound to read what attraction is up ch night.

The cost of printing is only about $5.00 er thousand.

Changes Entire Theatre Front as Exploitation

Excluding the fact that Marion, O., is the home of President-elect Warren G. Harding, the Ohio community also claims distinction for other reasons. One of them is the enterprising, progressive policy of the Luna Lite, the leading motion picture theatre in Marion.

At the time the house was showing "The Right to Love," the manager staged an extensive exploitation campaign on the picture in co-operation with Oscar Kantner, exploitation representative for the Indianapolis territory for Paramount.

The entire theatre front was changed for the performance. The local landscape artist applied a new coat of paint and gave it a Paul Helleu setting of virginal white. The only paper used consisted in cut-outs of Mae Murray in the leading role. The two lobby display frames on both sides of the entrance were reconstructed into miniature stages and the cut of Mae Murray from the three sheet on the production was used. It was arranged to give the effect of overhanging red plush curtains, ready to drop at the stage manager's signal.

Hyman Gives Current Attraction Fine Presentation

What easily might have been described as a painting of the altar of the cathedral at Rheims was used as the scenic background for a prologue put on at the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre in connection with "The Inside of the Cup."

A great altar flanked on either side by clusters of tall candles that cast a mellow shadow created a majestic atmosphere. Behind the altar rose high arched stained glass windows, of the type one finds in famous cathedrals. At the altar rail the Brooklyn Mark Strand quartette in vestment sang Schubert's "Omnipotence."

The prologue effect was one of delicacy, having just enough of the artistic effect to transport one within the walls of a cathedral. Rich lights filtered through the windows and bathed the surpliced singers.

Atlanta's First Big Prologue

Howard Theatre Eclipses City's Previous Presentation Standards

ATLANTA theatres have, from time to time, offered so-called prologues that had nothing whatever to do with the picture—but the first prologue to be given that really ties up with the picture is the one being offered at the Howard theatre in conjunction with the picture, "Forbidden Fruit," arranged by Ralph De Bruler.

The theme of "Forbidden Fruit," as almost everyone knows, has a good bit to do with the old fairy-tale of "Cinderella." So the prologue was offered under the title of "A Dream of Cinderella."

The curtains parted over the stage-set showing an immense cobbled fire-place, that filled the entire back of the stage. Seated in the ashes of the fire-place, lighted only with the dull red glow of the fire-light, could be seen a dim feminine figure.

The music was Paderewski's "Minuet," and as it swelled to full strength, lights came on at either side of the fire-place and through the transparent wall could be seen two figures—Cinderella in white and silver, on the right, and Prince Charming in white, on the other side. The doors opened, the figures came forth, and danced the minuet, interpolating a bit in which the Prince gives Cinderella a big pink rose.

At the height of the music, when the lights were most brilliant, the faint notes of a clock, striking twelve, could be heard. Cinderella in consternation flees, the Prince pursues, but the wall of the fire-place holds her, the lights on that side are switched off, and Prince Charming beat against, apparently, the cobbled stones of the fire-place in his frantic search for his little sweetheart. Finally, discouraged, he returns to his own side of the fire-place, steps within the door, which closes behind him, and the lights there go out. Then the fire-light effect is once more centered on the feminine figure seated in the ashes of the fire-place, asleep.

The whole effect was one of charm, and put the audience in exactly the proper mood of fantasy and fact in which they would welcome the picture.

The Howards' advertising campaign for the picture was characterized by the unusual, rather than the flamboyant. "Streamers at the bottom of the editorial pages of the three local newspapers, for one week in advance, were used to herald the coming of the picture. The "streamers" were in "teaser style"—such as "Rarest and most alluring of all delights are those you find in 'Forbidden Fruit.' They're yours to feast on every day next week." "You can enjoy the rare delights of 'Forbidden Fruit' any day next week—sweet and tempting—but perilous," and "Alluring, irresistible—'Forbidden Fruit' will quicken your heart beat—all next week." These "streamers" culminated in a well-handled quarter-page ad. in the three local Sunday papers.

Small Towner Uses Aeroplane as Exploitation

New Ulm, Minn., is a town of but 5,60 population and the Grand Theatre ther has a seating capacity of but 400. Yet E Iwerks, proprietor and manager of th theatre, finds exploitation such a goo business getter that he exploits a featur picture more than a good many exhibitor in the large cities do.

When he booked "Going Some," Mr Iwerks set to work to figure out an ex ploitation stunt that would let every resi dent of the town know that the pictur was coming. He knew where there wa a small biplane and quickly made an ar rangement with the aviator who owned i to fly over New Ulm and drop from th sky hundreds of bills advertising th screen comedy.

On each side of the body of the airplan was painted the following: Special de livery—films—"GOING SOME"—for— Grand Theatre, New Ulm.

An airplane is still something of a nov elty in New Ulm and the residents flocke out to watch it. The local newspaper carried stories about the stunt. Mr Iwerks did the usual billing, advertising and lobby decorating.

Crandall's Exploitation of "Passion"

Metropolitan Theatre, Washington, Conducts Unusual Publicity Campaign

THE newspaper advertising campaign that put "Passion" over at Crandall's Metropolitan theatre in Washington, D. C., for a two weeks' engagement that broke all previous known attendance records in the national Capital, was one of the most carefully planned and most skillfully executed campaigns of its kind in the history of motion pictures in the East.

The first step was to begin the planting of "propaganda" in the Washington papers some two months in advance of the Washington playing dates of "Passion." These preliminary notices took the form of news items relating to the importance of the film, personal history of Pola Negri, the star, New York bookings of the picture, the record-breaking patronage at the Capitol, in New York, the extension of the engagement through a second week, etc., etc. Full ten days in advance of the date set for the opening of the run at Crandall's Metropolitan theatre, blind teaser ads were started in all of the Washington papers simply announcing that "Passion" was coming and that it should be watched for. On Sunday, a week in advance of the opening, a display ad 75 lines deep across two columns was run blind and said, "Coming, 'Passion,' the Picture That Will Amaze America."

On the Monday in advance of the Sunday opening a mysterious ad appeared in all of the Washington daily papers advising the public not to be misled, that "Passion" was owned by the "Cia. Cinematografica de Europa," with offices in Rome, Paris and New York, and would be presented in a theatre of the first class at prices ranging up to $2.50 per seat, as the magnitude and magnificence of the subject amply warranted.

The appearance of this admonitory ad created a great deal of popular discussion as to the real status of "Passion" and opened the way for the publication of a tremendous amount of publicity in the form of news stories defending Harry M. Crandall in his effort to present "Passion" for the first time in America at so low a price as 80c, including war tax—just double the usual top charged at the Metropolitan.

On the Tuesday preceding the Sunday opening, a display ad signed by Harry M. Crandall was published setting forth that First National positively owned "Passion," that he owned the First National franchise for Washington territory, and that "Passion" would absolutely be shown at his Metropolitan theatre beginning the next Sunday at the unheard of price of 80c.

Thereafter the advertising assumed the guise of dignified, direct exposition of the merits of the picture. This was conducted on a decreasing scale, instead of ascending, until the Sunday of opening when a three-quarters page ad was run in all the papers and completely dominated them.

"Passion," as a result of this newspaper campaign and extensive outdoor billing and window-carding supervised by Bert B. Perkins, Crandall exploitation man, opened Sunday, January 16th, to the greatest crowds ever seen in Washington. The engagement was continued through a second week to capacity patronage.

A great deal of the success of the engagement is attributed also to the fact that Harry M. Crandall entertained the Washington dramatic critics at lunch prior to the opening of the Metropolitan engagement and permitted them an unhurried private pre-view of "Passion."

Picture Steals Auto Show Thunde

Bamberger's Idea Gets Untold Publicity for Paramount Pictures and Stars

MINNEAPOLIS'S Auto Show called in the aid of the motion picture industry and more specifically and exclusive, Paramount pictures to make the show a success; but before the week was over conditions had been reversed and it was really a Paramount week in the northwest territory to which the automobile show contributed a generous share of entertainment.

The queer vagaries of fate which brought Paramount pictures so extensively into the limelight resulted when the public took up the stunt evolved by Leon Bamberger, newly appointed exploitation representative for Paramount pictures in Minneapolis, and turned it into a popular fad.

At first it might seem as if Bamberger had tried to hog the show and steal the automobile men's thunder; but that was far from being the case. As it actually happened, the officials of the Automobile Show thought it would be a good idea to have some pictures shown during the week as a side line of entertainment, so they called in Phil Reisman, manager of the local Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's exchange, and I. H. Ruben of Finkelstein and Ruben, who own a chain of forty theatres in the territory. As a result of the initial conference it was arranged to have a Paramount feature picture on the program every evening, the film entertainment to be given in the 300-seat capacity hall on the second floor of the building. Out of the consideration for exhibitors in the territory a program was arranged of pictures that had been released some time previously and that would not conflict with any showings in the territory nearby.

The program consisted of: Saturday, Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle in "The Life of the Party"; Monday, Dorothy Gish in "Mary Ellen Comes to Town"; Tuesday, Mae Murray in "On with the Dance"; Wednesday, William S. Hart in "John Petticoats"; Thursday, Dorothy Dalton in "Black Is White"; Friday, Gloria Swanson in "Male and Female," and Saturday, Ethel Clayton in "Crooked Streets."

Then the exploitation man conceived the idea of exploiting these stars and at the same time arousing additional interest in the pictures and the automobile show. A general invitation was addressed through the newspapers to patrons of the show to come dressed up as the star whose picture was being shown that evening. The newspapers took to the stunt like a drug addict to a shipment from Orient and played it up on the front pages.

Crowds thronged to the automobile show every night and of these crowds a lot of people took advantage of the invitation and the inducements to masquerade as film stars. The first evening the best imitator of Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle, whose picture was then shown, was judged to be W. N. Clifford, manager of the sporting goods department of the Warren Hardware Co., Minneapolis. A well known figure around the city because of his personality as well as his bulk, Mr. Clifford received a lot of publicity in the papers and it all helped the show, the star and the picture.

The second evening little Kathlyn Berry was adjudged the nearest double to Dorothy Gish. On the third evening, Phyllis Anderson, a sixteen-year-old high school girl, carried off honors as the closest imitator of Mae Murray. The week's entertainment, with promise of constant growing interest, was still in progress the time this article was written.

One of the exploitation man's individual stunts was to engage the services Mr. X. as one of the judges. Mr. X. was a mysterious personality who had been widely publicized by the Minneapolis Daily News as an ex-service man wounded abroad, who would perform any service for the News' readers that they desired It was claimed that he could do anything from deliver a lecture on foreign countries to minding a baby and repairing the furnace.

Mr. X.'s services were engaged by the News and any service he performed for the paper's readers were free of charge The only thing necessary to obtain his services from the News was to fill out the coupon appearing daily under Mr. X.'s photograph in the News, describing the name, address, nature of service to be performed and the approximate time it would require.

Accordingly Leon Bamberger sent Mr. X. the following telegram:

"Each night at the National Auto Show the best impersonators of Paramount Screen Stars will be honored by Finkelstein and Ruben. Please do me the honor in accepting an invitation to serve as one of the judges in deciding who shall be honored. Will require your services but short time each evening and I am sure that a gentleman of your standing, accomplishments and world-wide experience will add prestige to our part of the show and be pleasing to the audience. Tomorrow night we may expect Fatty Arbuckle to b

Lieber's "Kismet" Campaign

Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, Gives Skinner Feature Unusual Attention

THE energy which Ralph Lieber, managing director of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., put into his exploitation campaign for "Kismet" entitled him to the huge success which the picture made.

Mr. Lieber started two weeks ahead of his opening with a teaser campaign that set Indianapolis to discussing Mr. Skinner and "Kismet." This was followed up by a thousand letters sent to a selected mailing list chosen from the blue list, using copy that carried with it the distinction and dignity of the production.

Ten thousand heralds and programs were distributed by mail and by hand to different sections of the city and fifty twenty-four sheets in selected locations kept the name of the production before the eye of the people on the street.

Mr. Lieber also took advantage of the preliminary arrangements made by Robertson-Cole with the Emerson Phonograph Company for cooperative advertising with the record "Kismet," one of the themes of the musical setting. Twenty-five Emerson dealers in Indianapolis used banners across their windows calling attention to the stupendous motion picture production and the "Kismet" record. Two hundred other windows carried window cards.

One distinctive window attraction was a miniature stage, showing Hajj lured into the boudoir of the Queen of the Harem. In the set the opening to the picture in the rear was arranged in the same way as in the production. The diaphragm, operated by motor, opened and closed as the shutter of a camera. Hidden lights threw the poster cut-out figures in relief.

This window display occupied the window of one of the best music stores on the main street.

During the New York showing of "Kismet," two camels were used as a street ballyhoo. Mr. Lieber adapted this plan. He could not obtain camels, but he secured two donkeys, equally appropriate to the picture, and they were paraded around the principal streets carrying blankets reading "Kismet, Circle Theatre, All Week."

Having gotten the crowds in the theatre, Mr. Lieber treated them to not only a splendid film spectacle, but he presented the production with a realistic prologue with a cast of fifteen people. They portrayed the opening episode of the story and the prologue included an oriental dance number.

Fried Ties Up with Electric Company

On this page is shown a cut of a window display which John J. Fried, manager of the Royal theatre, Sioux City, Iowa, secured in cooperation with the Sioux City Gas and Electric Company.

The figure of Mabel Juliene Scott was made from a sheet cut out. At the feet of the squaw, an old-fashioned table lamp, ash shovel, scrubbing brush, hand wringer, etc., were placed. At the feet of the modern woman were electrical appliances which the company sells.

Exploitation Based on Title

Crandall's Publicity for "My Lady's Latchkey" Both Unique and Unusual

ONE of the most successful advertising coups in the history of picture presentation in Washington, D. C., has just been engineered by Harry M. Crandall through his publicity department, headed by Nelson B. Bell, with Bert B. Perkins as a valuable exploitation aid, in connection with the premiere presentation of "My Lady's Latchkey."

The title of the picture suggested to Mr. Bell the possibility of creating a situation that would enlist the interest of the Capital's news editors. The plan worked perfectly and resulted in unprecedented utilization of the news columns of the Washington papers.

On Tuesday night, preceding the Sunday opening of the picture at the Metropolitan, approximately 500 real latchkeys were strewn about the streets of the downtown section of the city. That same evening K. MacDonald, of Keesville, N. Y., registered at the Hotel Washington, one of the Capital's most fashionable hotels, and was assigned to room 132.

In all of the Wednesday papers appeared the following ad in the "Lost and Found" department: "Latchkey, yesterday P. M., between —th and Penn. Ave. and 15th and K Sts., N. W. Return at once to K. MacDonald, Room 132, Hotel Washington."

Beginning about 6:30 A. M. Wednesday Mr. MacDonald began to be annoyed by people endeavoring to restore his lost latchkey. By noon the avalanche of keys had become a veritable pest and the hotel authorities were appealed to for protection from further annoyance. The news reporters covering the hotels scented a semi-humorous freak story and fell for it at once, devouring hook, line and sinker in their amusement at the guy from Keesville being swamped with keys of which he knew nothing!

Mr. MacDonald checked out of the Washington on Friday morning, the same morning that a large display ad appeared in the Washington papers, solving the mystery of the lost latchkeys. The large display ad was composed almost entirely of the headlines of news stories printed the day before relative to Mr. MacDonald.

Fruitful Window Tie-up in Winnipeg

An attractive and fruitful window display tie-up marked the recent presentation of "Under Crimson Skies," in the Dominion theatre, Winnipeg, Canada.

"Under Crimson Skies" being a se picture, an arrangement was made with the Imperial Tobacco Company of Canad to dress up windows in their variou stories tying up the picture with a popula navy cut tobacco.

The result was four attractive window in the heart of Winnipeg, which include a colorful tropical beach scene, a full rigged out ship riding waves in the fore ground and other model sailing vessel and warships adding to the effect. On a big crimson sun, sinking in the back ground, was the caption—See "Under Crimson Skies." Other cards advertising the picture were used in the windows.

The displays occasioned much favorable comment in the Canadian city, and were characterized as the most artistic window displays ever presented there. The tobacco firm was highly elated over the tie-up and the theatre management asserted its belief in the efficacy of the display as a box-office aid.

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

FRITZI RIDGEWAY has graduated from two-reel subjects, which she has been making for the last year, and is about to enter the feature field in a series of five-reel pictures based on well known books, according to a statement issued from the Chicago headquarters of the Capital Film Company.

Miss Ridgeway is known to the trade as the girl "with a thousand personalities" and Capital intends to take advantage of her versatility to get away from the Western type in the features being planned at the Doubleday Studios, where the pictures will be produced. Announcement of the first five releases will be made at an early date.

Miss Ridgeway began her film career as an extra at the Essanay Studio, where she was known as a fearless little daredevil and anything that was especially risky and no one else wanted to attempt, was always wished on her.

Neal Hart Company on 500 Mile Trip

Webster Cullison, director for the Pinnacle Productions of which Neal Hart is the star, will take his company to San Francisco in a few days, five hundred miles from the studios, for important nautical scenes in Neal Hart's newest western thriller, "God's Gold."

In the newest Hart production the story calls for the burning of two immense ships and other important scenes that the director has found cannot be successfully obtained without going to San Francisco for them. Forty two persons comprise the party that will take the trip, it is said.

"God's Gold" is from the pen of Arthur Henry Gooden, author of many well known screen successes, and has been adapted to the screen by the author.

Garfield to Supervise "Parish Priest" Runs

In order to conclude arrangements for special runs of the film version of the Dan Sully stage success, "The Parish Priest," Herman J. Garfield left New York on February 22nd, to visit several of the key cities east of the Missisippi river. He will make short stops in Philadelphia and Washington although his main objectives are Cleveland and Chicago where negotiations are said to be well under way for opening "The Parish Priest" in a special manner for indefinite runs.

New Pete Morrison Series

Independent Film Ass'n. to Release Two Reel Western Specials

A NEW series of two-reel western specials starring Pete Morrison, former Universal star, will be placed on the state rights market shortly by the Independent Films Association, according to announcement made this week by Eddy Eckels, president and general manager of the organization, who has just closed negotiations with the Morrison forces whereby Independent Films will receive the exclusive distribution of the stories.

The Morrison specials, the first of which is titled "The Long Trail," and is now in its final stages of production at the Independence City studios, Hollywood, Cal., are said to introduce to the screen something entirely new and different in western pictures of this footage, and are stories based on true-to-life situations, having world-wide appeal. They will be released at the rate of one a month.

In contracting for the series Eckels declared he feels very fortunate in obtaining the exclusive release rights to the Morrison stories, since Morrison, exhibitors have found, is a star whose ability in western roles and magnetic personality is winning him speedy recognition as a favorite in the ranks of western players.

Morrison is thoroughly familiar with western life and the habits and customs of its people, having been born in Colorado and raised in the West, the son of a wealthy and prominent cattle owner. He presents on the screen a regular outdoor fellow, husky, expert gunman and a chap of human tolerance and clean habits of a type admired by every man, woman and child in the country.

The Morrison specials are being produced by the Tattenham Productions, Inc., of which Daniel F. Tattenham, former theatre owner and exchange manager, is president.

Goldstein Back from Trip

Canyon Pictures' Executive Finds State Righters Becoming Active

JOSEPH M. GOLDSTEIN, one of the heads of the Canyon Pictures Corporation, returned last week from a sales trip which brought him to most of the exchange centers east of and including Chicago.

According to Mr. Goldstein, the observation which he made while on tour has confirmed his opinion that the future of the industry lies in the hands of the independent producer, exchangeman and exhibitor. The Canyon Pictures Corporation was very successful in disposing of the rights of the Franklyn Farnum series of five-reel features as well as the serial "Vanishing Trails." The exchangemen who are handling these subjects told Mr. Goldstein that they are among the best sellers they have ever had. While the main purpose of Mr. Goldstein's trip was to get in touch with buyers, he met many exhibitors from whom he learned at first hand the needs and desires of the theatre managers of the country.

"I found," said Mr. Goldstein, "that the public are demanding clean cut pictures with good morals and plenty of logical action. This is a vindication of the production policy of the Canyon Pictures Corporation. We have always believed that the screen can be both clean and profitable at the same time. The Franklyn Farnum features are red-blooded American pictures and have been profitable to all who have either had territorial rights or exhibited them.

"While I found that many men in the industry were inclined to lay low until business picks up, there are many others who are getting off. I belong to the latter group, for on my trip I found many signs that affairs in the picture field are approaching the normal. In several places I found that theatre building activity was being resumed, while in other instances I discovered many theatres which had been limiting the price they paid for features were willing to pay the old-time rental fee for pictures that would command business.

"If my advice were solicited I would say to all engaged in the great picture industry, 'Get busy right away, forget about hard times, encourage the people to go to theatres by showing them the best pictures that can be rented.' This course will induce the public to patronize the movies with their old-time regularity, and at the same time encourage the independent producer to put his best foot forward and supply the market with real worthwhile pictures."

T. E. HANCOCK, one of the executive heads of Pacific Film Company, of Culver City, Cal., is in New York in the interests of their latest productions, the George Ovey comedies.

Mr Hancock announces the Ovey series are one reelers and will be released one a week. He reports a big demand for the series through independent channels.

The Pacific Film also announces now ready for release "Call of the Wild," in which Frankie Lee of "Miracle Man" fame plays an important part.

The "Fatal 30" is another of the Pacific Films Company's latest releases. A thrill a second is the slogan for the "Fatal 30." Mr. Hancock is making his New York headquarters with the Producers Security Corporation, 516 Fifth avenue, New York.

World Film Corp. Will Invade State Right Field

See Future in Independent Market and Acquires High Grade Pictures

MILTON C. WORK, president of World Film Corp., states that the report that his company would enter the State Rights field on an extensive scale is absolutely correct, although up to this time no official statement had been issued by the company concerning it. He said that from the time that the World Film Corporation had disposed of its distributing organization it had determined to specialize extensively along State Right lines and had formulated its plans to accomplish this purpose wtih great care. These plans have been carried out with the most studious consideration of every detail.

Before making any announcement, the World has acquired either the ownership or distribution rights of a large number of features representative of the various classes of pictures popular today.

The theory of the World is that there is a big State Right demand for pictures, provided the State Righter can obtain the type of picture that he wants upon a fair basis—a basis which will, of course, result in profit to the owner, but which will also give the State Righter an opportunity to make a quick and satisfactory turnover.

In order that the World would be able to offer at attractive prices just the pictures wanted—the real money winners—and be able to meet the needs of all classes of buyers, expert viewers during the past year have examined 500 pictures and from this number the World has made a most extensive and varied selection. A number of these pictures will be immediately offered to State Right buyers upon the right terms and every few weeks additional pictures will be added to the list of World State Right releases. Mr. Work also stated that he was prepared to sell the foreign territorial rights of these pictures, territory by territory, also upon the basis of giving the buyer the opportunity to make satisfactory profit.

When asked to specialize somewhat as to the pictures offered, Mr. Work stated that they would be representative of the various classes of money producing pictures from the most potential down to the picture which might be classed as "a little better than a program offering." They would represent an infinite variety of subjects, including society drama, detective drama, comedy drama, high class westerns, etc.

Mr. Work stated that he was glad to call special attention to two features on this list, both of which are now ready for exhibition, and neither of which have as yet been shown anywhere.

The pictures in question are "The Wakefield Case," starring Herbert Rawlinson, and "Whispering Shadows," starring Miss Lucy Cotton. "The Wakefield Case" is the latest production of Lawrence Weber, Inc. It is said to be the highest type of an American detective drama with a mystery which few, if any, will be able to solve until the last scene, and with thrills from beginning to end. The star is supported by Florence Billings and an all-star cast. The story of "The Wakefield Case" opens in London. The thrilling English scenes which start the picture are followed by equally soul-stirring episodes which occur during a voyage of an ocean liner to this country—the locus of the last two reels is in the very attractive suburbs of New York City. Only by seeing this picture can its attractions and money-getting qualities be appreciated.

"Whispering Shadows" was characterized by Mr. Work as a distinctly high class, big theatre production. It was made by the Mayflower, the director, Emile Chautard, being instructed to produce a wonderful picture regardless of cost. The care which was exercised in the production is shown by the fact that it took approximately six months from the time that the director first called "shoot" until the cameraman completed his work. It treats of one of the great topics of the present day, viz., the question of whether the dead have the power, by some invisible means of communication, to warn their loved ones in this world of some danger which may spell ruin for their lives.

The picture, however, leaves the problem of whether this can be done very much like the case of the Lady or the Tiger. At the conclusion of the picture there are bound to be vigorous arguments between the believers and scoffers. Those inoculated with spiritualistic doctrines are sure to contend that the picture proves that communication by the dead with the living is possible. On the other hand, the skeptics will be able to argue very satisfactorily, at least to their own minds, that every circumstance in the picture which apparently supports spiritualistic theories is really what might be called "a happen chance," and that even were the picture a portrayal of real, not imaginative, happenings it proves absolutely nothing supernatural.

The whole story is said to be told in a most entertaining way. Lucy Cotton is even more beautiful than she has ever been before, and she is supported by a brilliant cast, including that favorite of the older generation, Charles A. Stevenson.

One of the early scenes shows a spiritualistic seance. The part of the medium conducting this seance is played by Celestine Saunders, who is well known on both sides of the Atlantic as a most prominent medium and who is at present said to be studying with Thomas E. Edison and Sir Oliver Lodge concerning the very questions involved in this story. Her appearance as the medium adds great value to the picture and guarantees the faithful reproduction of the thrilling scenes in the seance.

Mr. Work further stated that, while his company was greatly interested in these super features, it believed that in order to interest all State Right buyers it should deal not only in this class of production, but should offer some cheaper and yet very attractive features. He referred to a large number of westerns with Edythe Sterling and other stars able to do real horseback and other stunts—westerns with punch and thrill. In this category he mentioned that the World had acquired four pictures in which Eileen Sedgwick and Joe Moore are co-starred. He predicted that these Moore-Sedgwick features would pack the house at every show and make the spectators run home to tell the rest of the family to "hurry round and not miss the best picture the theatre has had in a month."

He furthermore refers, in his statement, somewhat mysteriously to a number of other society stories and dramas, big pictures with potential stars nearly ready for State Right buyers. He mentioned specifically a $100,000 production of a wonderful society-mystery story with Molly King as the star, which he thought bound to be a big opportunity for State Righters.

For any who were interested, he stated that the World also had a large number of very attractive reissues. These reissues have been edited down to the minute. The titles have been rewritten and illustrated from the 400 negatives in the possession of the company only those subjects have been reissued of which there are perfect negatives, which have attractive modern stories and potential stars of today. Mr. Work referred especially to "The Moonstone," co-starring Eugene O'Brien and Elaine Hammerstein as a picture equal to the very best shown today in first-run houses,—to such subjects as Clara Kimball Young in "Hearts in Exile" and "The Yellow Passport; to Ethel Clayton in "Souls Adrift" and to Alice Brady in a number of popular money-getting features.

Mr. Work is of the opinion that every picture, no matter how skilful the director, is susceptible of big improvement if placed in the hands of skilled editors. He said that the starting of the World State Right plan had been held back until every subject had received the most intensified attention of the World Editorial Corporation, headed by Harry Chandlee and Wm. B. Laub and that the buyer might therefore feel assured that in World pictures every title hits the bull's eye, that breaks are conspicuous by their absence and that practically 100 per cent perfection in arrangement is assured.

For all these features, both old and new, photos, paper and press books have been prepared regardless of expense and of a character to more than please the most exacting.

Howells Prepares Paper for New Serial

The Butts Lithograph Company has received the order for the elaborate paper which the Howells Sales Company are getting out on their first release, a fifteen episode entitled, "The Hope Diamond Mystery."

The orders have been placed for all of the paper and it is now on the press so that it will be finished and ready for shipment the minute the picture is released.

One of the highest priced artists in New York City has been engaged to make the drawings for this paper and a product of unusual merit is assured. From the early drawings that have been made it can be confidently asserted that the paper for "The Hope Diamond Mystery" serial will be the best that has ever been offered to exhibitors on a serial picture.

Convention Delegates at Independence City

Independence City, the huge properties formerly used by Griffith and the Triangle Film Corporation and recently acquired by the Independent Films Association, was to be the Mecca of a pilgrimage of members of the Federated Exchanges of America holding convention in San Francisco the week of February 8.

The members were to visit Independent City in a body. Eddy Eckels, president of the Independent Films Association, had made elaborate plans for their welcome and entertainment.

THE new Urban natural color process of motion picture photography was demonstrated in public for the first time recently at a dinner of the Canadian Camp at the Hotel Astor, New York.

The Canadian Camp is an association of wealthy men and women who have at some time or other camped in Canada. Dr. G. Lenox Curtis, of New York, is its president, and it was he who made the request of Mr. Urban that the natural color process, or Kinekrom, its technical name, be shown.

There were about 4,000 feet of color subjects shown. At the end the applause was tremendous.

Preceding the showing there had been an address on natural color by Roy F. Soule, general sales manager of the Urban Motion Picture Industries, Inc.

"The Shadow" Finished, States Goosman

In a statement issued by President Max F. C. Goosmann of the Salient Films, Inc., announcement is made that work on "The Shadow," the first feature starring Miss Muriel Ostriche to be produced by Salient, has been completed under the direction of J. Charles Davis, 2nd. The exteriors were finished on Wednesday of last week, and the work of cutting and assembling the picture is rapidly progressing in the hands of Mr. Davis and Paul H. Allen, the head cameraman.

It is further announced that active work on the preparation of the second production is well under way, being handled by Jack W. Brown, Assistant Director. The second feature is also from an original story, written especially for Miss Ostriche, and it is expected that work will be started on it on Monday, February 28th.

"The Shadow" will be ready for screening the early part of this week, when a showing will be given for the trade press. Announcement as to the distribution of this series of pictures will be made within the next few days, as arrangements have been practically completed.

Equity Star's Big Reception

Miss Young Receives Tremendous Ovation in Texas

COMING to Houston, Texas, Tuesday, February 15, in response to requests for personal appearances at Texas theatres,, Clara Kimball Young literally swept the city at her feet. A greeting such as Texas has seldom seen awaited the Equity star, thanks to thanks to the efforts of Milton Crandall, Equity's exploitation director. A virtual holiday was declared in Houston from the moment Miss Young alighted from the train to the very last minute of her departure two days later for Dallas.

As all those present admitted, if President Harding would have come to Houston, his reception would hardly have been more enthusiastic. The newspapers of Houston were filled with photographs and accounts of the Equity star from front page to back.

Every prominent official of Houston hastened to meet the star of "Midchannel," and speeches of welcome, luncheons, receptions, decorations and civic honors were showered upon her. Hundreds lined the streets for a glance at the screen star, and her hotel was stormed by her admirers.

To Milton Crandall is due the glory of this welcome. The Equity exploitation director arrived in Houston four days before Miss Young, and set to work with lightning speed. By the time the Equity star arrived every hour of her time was staged in advance for the three cities she visited—Houston, Dallas and San Antonio.

Crandall, on arriving in Houston, announced that Miss Young was heartily in favor of the "Ship-Channel" project now engaging the attention of the city. This plan consists of connecting the two ends of the city by a waterway. The endorsement of Miss Young was immediately welcomed by the press, merchants' associations, civic bodies and public officials from the Mayor down. This paved the way for a civic reception of the Equity star. Miss Young arrived at 7 A. M. in Houston, where the Mayor and leading citizens, number four hundred, greeted her. The party then repaired to the Turning Basin, the scene of the contemplated "Ship-Channel" project. A Rev. Jacobs acted as master of ceremonies and presented Miss Young, who delivered an impressive address—prompted in advance by Crandall of the need of a "Ship-Channel." Mayor Holcombe followed and presented Miss Young with a miniature gold ship.

The feature of the reception took place at 12 noon, when Miss Young, from the balcony of her suite in the Rice Hotel, was presented with the keys to the city by the Mayor, while the throngs below applauded vigorously.

Immediately these ceremonies were over, the Advertising Association of Houston gave a luncheon in honor of Miss Young. At this reception, she was presented with a bronze plaque of her likeness by the noted sculptor, Enrico Cerrachio.

The evening marked the climax of Miss Young's first day in town. The Queen theatre was the scene of her next welcome. Here she made a personal appearance in connection with the showing of "For the Soul of Rafael." Scheduled to appear four times daily, Miss Young was victimized by the crowding of thousands of curious gazers that jammed the theatre and blocked the door. The streets adjacent to the Queen theatre, were black with mobs. Traffic was held up for one hour.

Her engagement at the Queen terminated Wednesday evening, whence Miss Young left for San Antonio. The San Antonio press heralded her coming from front pages. Her reception here was but a repetition of that accorded her in Houston. She was welcomed at the station by the Mayor and leading citizens. A 54-piece band greeted her, while a parade followed, with flags reading, "Welcome, Clara Kimball Young." Again the balcony of her hotel suite was made the scene of an official welcome by the Chamber of Commerce. She was presented with the keys to the city.

Leaving San Antonio in a riot of admiration, Miss Young left for Dallas on the last lap of her Texas visit. Her arrival had been hailed with delight in the press. Reporters awaited her at the station, and her opinions on local affairs were eagerly received. Two bands greeted her at the City Hall of Dallas and Mayor Wozencraft presented her with the keys of the city.

First Kineto Review Release

National Exchanges to Distribute "Thrills" Early in March

THE first Kineto Review to be released to theatres all over the United States will be "Thrills," which has just played two weeks at the Strand theatre in New York on the same program with Charles Chaplin in "The Kid."

The release will be on March 7th through the exchanges associated with the National Exchanges, Inc., in thirty cities in the United States.

Following "Thrills" will came these Kineto Reviews, released in the following order:

"The Emerald Isle," "Panama," "The Holy City," "Down in Dixie," "Liquid Gold of Texas," "Babyhood," "Trip of the U. S. S. Idaho," "Vegetarians," "Hunting the Sea Wolf," "Boy Scouts," "Water Babies," "Beauty Spots in the United States and Canada."

The order of the Kineto Reviews which will follow these first thirteen subjects has not been determined.

Glancing over this list of the first thirteen subjects, the exhibitor will recognize their wide sweep and variety. All of the Kineto Reviews are edited personally by Charles Urban.

Each Kineto Review is in one reel and each is complete within itself. Every release is devoted to a treatment of a single subject as the titles denote.

The sweep of the Kineto Review is all-inclusive. There is the light and the serious; the world of play and of work; of travel, of science, of beauty, of industry, of religion, of war, of children, of their elders—there is, in short, everything that can be photographed.

Published by the Kineto Company of America, Inc., it has a background of the world's greatest film library and of an immeasurable amount of constant new material.

It is a classic feature in one reel. For quite some time past, two of the finest theatres in the country have been using it regularly; the Capitol theatre in New York under the direction of S. L. Rothafel and the Mark Strand of Brooklyn under the direction of Edward L. Hyman. They have determined its high value and popularity with audiences and now it is going out for general release.

Mr. Urban of the Kineto Company of America, Inc., and the National Exchanges, Inc., who will distribute the Kineto Review both expect it to prove to be the most popular and most successful single reel release available to exhibitors.

Florence Reed in "The Black Panther's Cub" Shown to N. Y. Trade

A TRADE showing of "The Black Panther's Cub," the new feature starring Florence Reed, produced by W. K. Ziegfeld, was held on Tuesday, February 15th, at the Times Square Theatre. A number of critics and others interested in the production attended the showing.

"The Black Panther's Cub" was directed by Emil Chautard, and the supporting cast includes Norman Trevor, Henry Stephenson, Earle Foxe, Tyrone Power, Mlle. Dazie and others. Mr. Ziegfeld, president of the Ziegfeld Cinema Corporation, is to be congratulated for bringing into the industry a new angle, for he has produced a motion picture with a cast recruited solely from the speaking stage.

"The Black Panther's Cub" was written by Ethel Donoher, and Philip Bartholomae wrote the scenario. It is some time since Florence Reed appeared on the screen, but her return is said to be an auspicious one, and her acting an artistic delight from start to finish. Part of the story is laid in Paris and Director Chautard is said to have obtained some realistic scenes without tending to exaggeration.

New Tarzan Serial Coming

Numa to Make Burroughs' "Adventures of Tarzan" in 15 Episodes

A NEW Tarzan serial, adapted from Edgar Rice Burroughs' book, "The Return of Tarzan," is to be placed in production immediately, according to an announcement made by the Weiss Brothers' Numa Pictures Corporation.

It will be a fifteen-episode feature and will be of the super animal-jungle-thriller type. At the suggestion of Edgar Rice Burroughs, it will be entitled "The Adventures of Tarzan."

Numa Pictures Corporation recently produced "The Revenge of Tarzan," a six-reel feature adapted from one of Burroughs' famous stories. Backed by a very novel exploitation campaign this feature attained world-wide publicity even before its release.

At the offices of the Numa Pictures Corporation it was stated that plans for the making of "The Adventures of Tarzan" have been under way for five months. It is planned to make it more elaborate than any of the Tarzan films heretofore produced.

The continuity is being prepared by a corps of novelists who have all made names for themselves in both the serial and feature fields. They are in constant touch with the animal trainers who will be called in to assist in the making of the picture, with a view to getting all that is possible out of the big animal and jungle scenes which will predominate the background of the production.

According to the Weiss Brothers, the continuity for the first six episodes is already completed. Elaborate sets are now in course of construction and large shipments of animals are reaching the studios daily.

"Business Was Too Good"

Sam Zierler, of Commonwealth, Sees Revival of Showmanship

"BUSINESS is exactly what one makes it," believes Sam Zierler, president of the Commonwealth Film Corp. of New York. "It's very bad business for anybody in the motion picture business to mope. The thing to do is to work."

"We all have to work a little harder, but that is the healthiest thing that could happen to any of us. For a while business was what we might call almost too good. Exhibitors were forgetting to be good showmen, because they did not have to be. Their houses were filled anyway. Exchangemen were forgetting how to sell film in the best way. That attitude filtered all through the industry.

"I think it is a mighty good thing that a sort of reaction has come. It will make us all work harder and think harder. You know, when you come right down to facts the best film salesman is the man who can show the exhibitor how the exhibitor is going to make money out of the pictures being sold. If business is too easy, as it was during the year after the war, we get lazy and forget to do that. Our business, just the same as any other business, is largely a matter of reciprocity. To make money, we must help the man we do business with to make money. It is safe to say that if the exhibitor does not make money with my pictures, I will not sell many pictures. So I am making it my business to see that he does make money with them.

"The first consideration is the product. When I buy a picture for release I have to be convinced that its results will show in box-office receipts. Hence my slogan, 'Handling Only Assured Successes.' After that comes the advertising aids, the printed matter, the posters, the photographs, etc. And after that comes the ideas. Here the salesman can help the exhibitor emphatically. He can do this because he makes so many contacts; he meets so many exhibitors: he is a sort of clearing house for their ideas.

"It is true, we are all working harder to maintain the big selling record of the past year, but the point I want to make is we are maintaining it. The exhibitor is working harder too, and like us he is also a salesman, only he sells his wares to the public while we sell ours to him."

Hirsh Starts on Trip

Melvin Hirsh, manager of the New York Exchange of Aywon, has left on a trip which will take him to the important cities of the Middle West.

Mr. Hirsh will visit the prominent State Rights men and confer with them relative to the pictures already released by Aywon and several which are scheduled for release in the near future.

I've started something—

Somebody once told me that nobody reads trade paper ads. That person is mistaken for the page ad I published in last week's Moving Picture World started something. I don't know whether what I've started is going to cause trouble or not but if it does I will be glad, for the only trouble that can come will eventually result in a heap of good for all exhibitors, Independent exchanges and State Right Buyers. If you read my ad you know that I aimed a broadside at monopolistic film concerns who are still employing the old method of using good pictures as a club to force Exhibitors to take bad ones.

Two years ago I decided that no concern could use my productions as a club to force the booking of inferior pictures. The Trade knows how I began making independent productions and distributing them on the basis of merit. Some rather strange remarks were heard, telling me how foolish I was to start something I couldn't finish. I went right ahead and today I am told that my pictures are among the biggest box office attractions. I am glad and I promise exhibitors that I shall continue to make that character of high class productions that will meet all and surpass most of the monopolistic concern's biggest releases.

Equity Pictures Corporation are now distributing my current picture "Hush." Most Exhibitors know what it has done and what it is doing in box office receipts. If you don't know, ask John Kunsky of Detroit, Tom Moore of Washington and many others whom lack of space forbids me mentioning here. My coming production, "STRAIGHT-FROM-PARIS," surpasses "Hush." It is a beautiful picture and will get big money for exhibitors everywhere. If you are with me in my independent stand, show it by booking "Hush" and following it with "STRAIGHT-FROM-PARIS." Your box office receipts will tell you whether or not you are on the right track, and after all that's the acid test. Get in touch with your nearest Equity Franchise Holder or with Equity Pictures Corporation, Aeolian Hall, New York, and watch for my adv. next week.

Lightning Photoplay of N. E., Expanding

Lightning Photoplay Service, of Boston, a state right exchange only one year old, announces that because of its remarkable growth it has been necessary to form the Lightning Photoplay Corporation, which will afford increased facilities and accommodations to carry on the energetic policy of Lightning Service.

Interesting information regarding this expansion, and the new pictures which the company will release, will be announced to New England exhibitors at an early date.

First J. W. Film Release

New Special, Starring Grace Darmond, is Ready for Distribution

Film Corporation has definitely decided to enter the independent field making a specialty of dignified, high-class dramas that will appeal especially to the patrons of the best theatres.

Notice of the organization of J. W. Film Corporation, with E. S. Manheimer as its active head, appeared recently, and the announcement of the completion of its first production for the state rights market promises to awaken unusual interest among independent exchangemen, because of the high quality of the picture and the fact that others of equal worth are promised at short intervals.

The Burton King production, "Every Man's Price," which will introduce the J. W. Film Corporation to the independent market, is a society drama starring Grace Darling and said to be a subject of unusual strength w,hich gives the beautiful young emotional actress the best opportunity for powerful acting of any of her more recent vehicles.

The picture is introduced as a real special, staged especially for the state right field with elaborate interiors and exteriors that include some remarkably pretty shots of one of the magnificent country estates belonging to the Gould family.

Big "Gasoline Alley" Drive

Many Newspapers Co-Operating in Exploiting King's Cartoon

A HIGHLY successful publicity and exploitation campaign is being put over on Frank King's "Gasoline Alley," the newest animated cartoon creation, which is being released by Russell-Griever-Russell.

A number of newspapers throughout the country syndicating this cartoon have signified their willingness to get together with the producer of the animated cartoons for their mutual benefit and in three key cities, at the present time, one sheets produced by Russell-Griever-Russell on "Gasoline Alley" are being given widespread prominence by the newspapers.

In Buffalo four hundred one sheets and four hundred cutouts have been placed on display by the Buffalo Evening News. The Louisville Courier-Journal has signified their intention of doing likewise, and the Chicago Tribune has secured for distribution a quantity of window cards and posters.

Another angle of the publicity campaign is the poster campaign being put over in Chicago by Russell-Griever-Russell. Five hundred one sheets advertising "Gasoline Alley" were sent to a like number of garages and a check up shows that ninety-eight per cent of the garages have posted the one sheets.

Russell-Griever-Russell intends to repeat this publicity in the territory where "Gasoline Alley" is closed and it is believed the garage publicity will focus the attention of the public on "Gasoline Alley."

The first release of the series will be completed this week and its title is "Leave It to Walt."

New Canyon Picture Ready

Next Franklyn Farnum Feature to Be Released is "Last Chance"

THE next feature with Franklyn Farnum as the star which is to be released by the Canyon Pictures Corporation will be "The Last Chance." It was produced by Colonel Wm. N. Selig in Los Angeles, was written by Wm. E. Wing, and directed by Webster Cullison.

It is considered by both Colonel Selig and the Canyon headquarters staff as the most ambitious picture in which Franklyn Farnum has ever appeared. As is usual in the Farnum pictures the action is rapid and exciting, while in this particular production great stress was paid to scenic backgrounds and real human interest.

The picture may be classed as a semi-Western, for half of the action takes place in the Eastern part of the country and ends in the foothills of the Rockies.

Special attention is being given to the exploitation plans on "The Last Chance." A large assortment of lithographic paper is being prepared, while an elaborate press book is now on the press. "The Last Chance," owing to the many large settings used in producing the picture far exceeded the appropriation originally set aside to make it, but it is the intention of the Canyon heads to sell it at the same price as the other features of the series.

"The Last Chance," which is the fifth of a series of six features, will be offered to the public with full confidence of receiving a profitable reception, for its forerunners of the same series have all been winners, and have blazed the way of future Farnum productions.

Two Westart Features Screened for Buyers

That five-reel Westerns, embracing all the old-time melodramatic thrills, with an added touch of modernity, but minus the illogical situations and improbable stories of bygone days, are in great demand, is shown by the many screenings reported by Roger S. Mitchell, sales manager of Westart Pictures, Inc., of "The Cowboy Ace" and the first release of a series of seven five-reel Westerns featuring Al Hart.

"I am arranging screenings of this picture," said Mr. Mitchell, "for from two to five times a day, six days in the week. The state right buyers want good Westerns—Westerns that will meet every requirement of the most exacting exhibitor, yet ones that can be bought at a price that will enable all concerned to make money and send the exhibitor who runs them back for more of the same kind. That is the basis on which we are operating and believe me, the state rights buyers are showing a genuine interest in our releases."

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

"Big Four" to Operate Exchanges Abroad

PLANS for the European distribution of all product of United Artists Corporation have been perfected and the foreign exchange system of the "Big Four" will be in full operation within a very few weeks, declares a statement from the United Artists headquarters.

The announcement, made by Hiram Abrams, president of the company, indicates that a great deal of preparatory ground has already been covered, and it is expected that by the middle of May some of the European offices of the company will be in operation.

Mr. Abrams' announcement states definitely that the "Big Four" will own and operate their own exchanges. The exchanges are to be established immediately in Great Britain, in London, Birmingham, Leeds, Glasgow and Cardiff, and an exchange for France will be opened in Paris. Other exchanges in other countries will follow shortly. The first "Big Four" production for Europe will be released some time between May 1 and May 15, and it is hoped for a while at least to release other productions at intervals of about three weeks.

Hugo Ballin Is Seeking New Story Material

Following the completion of "East Lynne," which is shortly to be released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, Hugo Ballin is spending most of his time in searching the fields of literature for a book suitable for picturization for his third production. Several big novels are under consideration at the moment, and it is expected that an announcement will be forthcoming shortly as to which one has been chosen.

Pioneer Film Acquires "Out of the Dust"

The Pioneer Film Corporation announces that it has closed a contract for "Out of the Dust," a feature production made by John P. McCarthy. Russell Simpson and Robert McKim have the most important roles. Little Pat Moore is also seen in one of the principal parts.

This picture was taken at the Strand theatre, Louisville, Ky., while George Beban was speaking to an audience in connection with the showing of his latest Robertson-Cole picture, "One Man in a Million"

Lasky Signs Betty Compson

Star Signs Five-Year Contract to Appear in Paramount Productions

JESSE L. LASKY, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has announced that Betty Compson, whose remarkable performance in George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man" stamped her as one of the foremost artists of the screen, has signed a contract for five years as a star in Paramount Pictures.

Miss Compson, who arrived in New York Sunday with her mother for the express purpose of affixing her signature to the Lasky contract, will leave Wednesday for Hollywood. She will begin work April 1 on her first Paramount starring picture, and Mr. Lasky has arranged that she will be given the services of one of the most famous of the Paramount group of directors to make her first picture.

"We are greatly pleased with the acquisition of Miss Compson to our list of artists," said Mr. Lasky in announcing the signing of the new star. "I consider her one of the really great actresses of the screen. In the portrayal of big, vital dramatic roles she has won the greatest praise from the most discriminating of critics. Not only was this true in 'The Miracle Man,' but in 'Ladies Must Live,' which George Loane Tucker has recently completed, and which we shall release as a Paramount Picture in the near future, her personality as well as her rare ability, mark her as one of the big drawing cards of pictures. The popularity which she established by her work in 'The Miracle Man' is shown to have been justified by her remarkable performance in 'Ladies Must Live,' which I forecast will be one of the film sensations of the year.

"From the group of famous authors who are now writing original stories for Paramount Pictures I expect to get a story for Miss Compson which will give her ample opportunity to interpret a big role such as she had in 'The Miracle Man,' and we are making arrangements to give her the biggest productions possible."

Metro Cast Finds Too Much Realism

Snowbound for eight hours, suffering from exposure and fatigue, members of the Metro Company who were at Flagstaff, Ariz., to picture Arctic scenes for "Uncharted Seas," found far more realism than desirable.

The company, headed by Alice Lake, who is starring in the production, reached Flagstaff eight hours behind schedule in the midst of a heavy snowstorm. Director Wesley Ruggles and Rudolph Valentino, who is playing the leading male role in the story, immediately started for the camp, a few miles away, which was to serve as headquarters for the expedition.

Midway between the station and their destination, the sledges were caught in drifts and forced to turn back. Several hours later, other temporary quarters were found and the seekers after snow became prisoners.

New Universal Comics in Production

Four new comedies now are in production at Universal City, word comes from the Coast. Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran have started a two-reeler which will be a riotous burlesque on old Rome, at the height of her glory. The scenario was written by Scott Darling.

A travesty on fake dramatic schools will be the next screen theme of Ward Hayes, who has been engaged to produce one-reel Universal comedies, in which Billy Fletcher is starred. The short laughograph will be called "His Acting Wife."

Dotty Wolbert's forthcoming production will be "A Bughouse Blunder," a story in which the romantic locale of Greenwich Village will be used with good effect. William Beaudine will direct, while Eddie Barry, Helen Darling and other comedy favorites will play in the star's support.

Joe Martin, Universal's educated orangoutang, has begun work on another animal comedy, said to be even better than "The Monkey Fireman," just completed as the first of a new series of animal comedies being made under the direction of Harry Burns.

Censor Board Praises "The First Born"

Exceptional Photoplays, the official organ of the National Board of Review, gave "The First Born," the Robertson-Cole release, an enthusiastic review.

In part, this publication said: "No photoplay dealing exclusively with Chinese life and characters has been more effective than this one produced around an essentially tragic tale. While it deals with another people and another way of thinking than our own, it leads us at the same time to identify their thoughts with ours and that people with ourselves by successful presenting a dream of instincts common to all mankind—the instinct to love and cherish, to hate and avenge."

Versatility Shown 'in "The Reckless Sex'

Al Christie is said to have given strong proof of his versality in comedy creation in "The Reckless Sex," a two-reeler which is soon to be released by Educational Exchanges. Christie personally directed this picture in which Dorothy Devore, Earl Rodney, Molly McGowan and Ward Caulfield appear.

A new photo of Dorothy Dalton, whose next Paramount picture will be "The Idol of the North"

Dorothy Dalton Will Head DeMille Cast

CECIL B. DeMILLE, director-general of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and producer of specials for Paramount, announced in Los Angeles this week that he had selected Dorothy Dalton to play the leading feminine role in his next all-star production. Further details concerning the cast, which, it is understood, will be quite as imposing as that of "The Affairs of Anatol," Mr. DeMille declined to give out at this time, nor would he divulge anything about the nature of the story. Preparations for the production, however, have been going on for some time, although the camera work will not be started until April.

This will be the first time that Miss Dalton has appeared in a Cecil B. DeMille production, and her selection for the leading part is a fitting recognition not only of her pronounced ability as an actress but of her beauty as well.

"The Great Moment" a Romantic Story

A story of real romantic quality, with the Continental and court flavor which has been imparted to the majority of her stories by the talented author, Elinor Glyn, is declared by Paramount to be included in "The Great Moment," in which Gloria Swanson will make her debut as a Paramount star. The direction is to be by Sam Wood.

Monte M. Katterjohn, working side by side with the author, prepared the screen version of the story which opens at an orgy in St. Petersburg when a British aristocrat is captivated by and marries a woman from the plains of Tartary—a Gypsy. The latter leaves him a daughter, Nadine, and in this role Miss Swanson will have one of the greatest opportunities of her career, it is said.

"First Born" Wins Again

Repeats Its Initial Success at the Brooklyn and Newark Strands

"THE FIRST BORN," Robertson-Cole super-special starring Sessue Hayakawa, which opened at the Strand theatre, New York City, January 30th, and which is declared by Robertson-Cole to have achieved an unusual measure of success at that theatre, continued successfully in the following week at the Strand theatre, Brooklyn, and at the Strand theatre, Newark, N. J.

This production, which is the first in which Hayakawa has been seen on Broadway in many months, is based upon the play by Francis Powers, and was directed by Colin Campbell.

The Brooklyn papers generally commended the acting of Mr. Hayakawa and the supporting cast, as well as the general artistic and dramatic effect accomplished by the picture as a whole. The Brooklyn "Standard Union" of Tuesday, February 8th, said: "Fantastic lovemaking, unusual smile material, plenty of wonderful scenery, and a continuation of thrills, are elements prominent in the Chinese photo-production gracing the screen of the Brooklyn Mark Strand this week. This unique headliner is Sessue Hayakawa in 'The First Born.'

"Not only does the great Oriental star fashion a colorful character in the part he plays, but he wields a story red-hot with instense compelling interest. Sessue Hayakawa has a co-star in 'The First Born,' little 'Sonny Boy' Warde, a child player, who adds realistic notes to the story theme."

The Brooklyn Daily Times of February 7th commented: "Dull minutes were not made for 'The First Born,' which has for its underlying principle the age-old policy of father love."

At both the Brooklyn house and the Newark theatre, unusual prologues were introduced to aid in putting over the picture. The Brooklyn theatre built a setting representing a street in Chinatown, before which a number of Chinamen, including a Chinese orchestra, appeared. At the Newark house, a Chinese opium den, minus the objectionable features, was reproduced on the stage.

Realism for Realart Film

Grand Jury Scene in "Out of the Chrous" Accurate in All Details

THAT motion picture directors and producers will go to almost any lengths to get the realistic results demanded by the public is said to be again proven in Realart's "Out of the Chorus," featuring Alice Brady.

In this picture it was necessary to provide sets representing the chambers of a district attorney and also the rooms of a grand jury. To obtain the first Realart's research department secured photographs of the chambers of District Attorney Swann, of New York, from which an exact duplicate was built.

To get photographs of a grand jury room was another matter. A photograph has never been made of the grand jury room of the New York Criminal Court Building and the authorities refused to break a precedent in this case. However, sketches showing the general nature of the room were gathered and carefully followed in the erection of the scene in the studio.

Another matter requiring special attention was a full chorus for the stage scenes in which Miss Brady appears as Flo Maddis, a Broadway chorus girl. The chorus was finally selected by Herbert Blache, who directed the picture.

New Associate Editor at Goldwyn Studio

JULIAN JOSEPHSON, one of the best known scenario writers in the motion picture colony, has been appointed associate editor at the Goldwyn studios, according to an announcement issued by Abraham Lehr, Goldwyn vice-president, in charge of production. He will work with J. G. Hawks, managing editor, under whom he obtained his early training. Mr. Josephson joined the Goldwyn staff about a month ago.

The new associate editor is the author of many original stories and adaptations. He wrote many of Charles Ray's greatest successes, among them being "The Hired Man," "Paris Green," "String Beans," "Greased Lightning," "Crooked Straight," "The Egg Crate Wallop" and many others.

Walsh Has Virile Role in "Dynamite Allen"

Fox officials are entertaining high expectations for "Dynamite Allen," starring George Walsh and directed by Dell Henderson. The star is said to have been given a typical virile Walsh role.

The narrative of "Dynamite Allen" concerns itself chiefly with the efforts of "Dynamite," played by Walsh, to solve the mystery of a murder for which his innocent father is serving a life term in prison. This he accomplished eventually, but not until several pugnacious coal miners are brought to a more reasonable frame of mind through Dynamite's "blowing-up."

Good Cast for Dwan's "Johnny Cucabod"

In the cast selected by Allan Dwan for his third Associated Producers' release, tentatively titled "Johnny Cucabod," are Mary Thurman and Monte Blue, in the leading roles, little Mary Jane Irving, Lizette Thorne, Les Bates, Arthur Millette and Martha Mattox.

Something Different

SPORT stuff. "Cy" Williams producing. Bob Bradbury directing. Pathe release. Bob's boys in cast. Bill and Bob. Twins. One reelers. Shows the boys trapping wild animals. Great stuff. Ideal for youngsters. Great material. With which to bring Pop and Mom into your house. Bringing the youngsters along. Fine for family entertainment. Will do more to offset censorship than one thousand speeches by Bill Brady. And 63 lectures by Sydney Cohen. Kind of stuff much needed. Clean. Unusual. Interesting. Let's have more. Lots more.

Type of production ..... 2 reel western

This is one of the best short Western features seen in some time. As a production, it is above the average picture of this type, in elaborateness of setting, story material, and direction. It starts right off with a jump, and the action never slacks as nor does the interest lag. No ends are left hanging as is frequent in such offerings and it possesses a finished and clean cut appearance. The photography is unusually good all the way through with some excellent shots of western country. Tom Santschi is the featured player and the picture is the first of a series of these two reelers which he is to make. He portrays the blacksmith of a Western town whose younger brother is a "bad egg." The younger man is their mother's favorite and when he falls into bad company and finally kills a man, Santschi, for his mother's sake, takes the blame and flies. Years later, still a fugitive, Santschi is crossing the desert and rescues an Indian dying of thirst. With the grateful savage beside him, he comes suddenly to a settler's cabin where he finds a beautiful girl, alone with a baby. Discovering that the child's father is his brother, Santschi leaves to search for him in the town where last he was seen. Santschi discovers his erring brother in the gaudy dance hall, and when he attempts to force him to return to the girl, the villainous youth draws his gun. The faithful Indian shoots through the window and kills him. Later Santschi returns and finds happiness with the little mother in the desert. Whether or not you have used such pictures previously this one is worthy of consideration by reason of its being a deal above the ordinary production.

Points Out Appropriate Tie-Up with Feature

In line with its policy of advising exhibitors of unusually suitable one and two-reel pictures to be played with specific important features, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., has called attention to its various offices to pictures which are desirable for use with "Mr. Wu," the Stoll feature. Three of the recent Chester Outings were taken in China, where the scenes of the feature are laid, and they carry out its spirit perfectly. These are "Dreams Come True," "Old Buddha's Maze" and "Paths of Glory."

When "Mr. Wu" was given its premier showing in this country at the Plaza theatre, Waterloo, Iowa, "Old Buddha's Maze" was used at the prologue to the feature. In fact, Educational supplied the entire remainder of the film program with kinograms and "Mind Your Business," a single-reel Vanity comedy.

Educational points out that these scenics are suitable for use with the Sessue Hayakawa picture such as "The First Born."

Rothacker Forces Have Finger Prints Taken

According to a statement from the headquarters of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, everybody in the Rothacker plant has had his finger prints registered under the Bertillon system of identification. A standing rule of the institution requires all who handle film to wear gloves. The purpose of the innovation is to identify the source of any finger print smears that might be found on the film prints. The statement adds that it was the expressed wish of the workers themselves to adopt a scheme insuring religious adherence to the rule that was responsible for the establishment of the system.

"From Serious to Gay" in Pathe News

Numbers 13 and 14 of the Pathe News are enlivened by human activities and events which range "from serious to gay, from lively to severe." The initial scenes are pictorial descriptions of New York City's timely fight against the spread of the dread disease, typhus. Meanwhile the streets of New Orleans are shown filled with the gay and abandoned pageantry of the annual Mardi Gras Carnival. Not even a downpour of rain can dampen the spirits of the merry revellers. The scene changes to Southern France, and "The Battle of Flowers" at Nice, this being the season of that famous annual carnival.

Study of Chimpanzee in Pictograph

The Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph No. 7078 has for its subject a young chimpanzee, who under the tutelage of Dr. W. H. Furness of Philadelphia, has learned to do a variety of interesting tricks. This anthropological study is released under the title of "One of Our Ancestors," and is said to present "several humorous incidents" along with its more serious "shots."

Geo. Beban Scores in Mid-West

"ONE MAN IN A MILLION," the special production starring George Beban which is being distributed by Robertson-Cole, won the same success in Cleveland that it has enjoyed in the other cities during its sweep through the South and into the Middle West, according to word which has been received from the distributing corporation.

The Metropolitan and Strand theatres of Cleveland wired Robertson-Cole: "In face of big opposition opening with personal appearance of stars, people of Cleveland jammed the Metropolitan and Strand theatres Sunday to see George Beban and witness his picture "One Man in a Million." Patrons unanimous in praise of picture and Beban's work. Every indication we will have a record week's business."

Mr. Beban is now heading westward from Cleveland and will have engagements in Detroit and Milwaukee before he reaches Chicago for a run of three weeks, after which he will go in the direction of the far West.

Meanwhile in New York, Robertson-Cole has been mapping out initial bookings which already run to a big total, it is declared. In the New York territory for instance, the picture has been booked over the Fox Greater New York Circuit. The following theatres will show "One Man in a Million"; Ridgewood, Bedford, Folly, Comedy, Jap Garden, Jamaica, Audubon, Crotona, Star, Academy, Nemo, Standard and the 103rd St. theatre.

In Indianapolis when Mr. Beban appeared at the Circle theatre, which seats just a little over 3,000 people, the management was forced to fill every aisle in the theatre, so great was the popular demand for entrance, declares a Robertson-Cole statement. Ralph W. Lieber, manager of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, wrote Robertson-Cole regarding Mr. Beban's appearance in Indianapolis as follows:

"Mr. Beban opened at the Circle theatre on Sunday, and due to an all-day rain and a cold wave at night we opened to only average business. But such a tremendous hit did his picture and his appearances make that beginning Wednesday night we did capacity business. The last three days of the week we were compelled to let people down the side aisles during Mr. Beban's appearances: People simply stormed the box office, and the momentum was growing with such force, aided by ads and stories in the newspapers, and several talks I had arranged for Mr. Beban, that Saturday at 1:30 we had a line a block long, and at 3 o'clock we simply had to refuse to sell any more tickets for over an hour. At night practically the same condition prevailed, and we were taxed to capacity. People simply went "wild" over Mr. Beban, and the whole city was talking about him.

"On Monday noon the committee of seventy met Mr. Beban at his hotel and escorted him in automobiles to the City Hall, where the Mayor received him and presented him with a floral key to the city.

"On Monday night the Mayor introduced Mr. Beban from the stage. The following day the Governor of the State introduced Mr. Beban to the members of the Rotary Club at one of their luncheons. On Wednesday he was the guest of honor at the Kiwanis Club luncheon, where he was introduced by one of the prominent citizens. Thursday afternoon he spoke to the Women's Department Club.

Universal Film Scores Hit

Allen Theatre, Akron, Plays "Outside the Law" to Record Business

THE first showing in the State of Ohio of "Outside the Law," the big Priscilla Dean film, broke all records last week in the Allen theatre, Akron, O., according to a statement just received from Universal headquarters. On the opening Sunday, police protection was necessary in the block upon which the theatre stands, to regulate the crowd, it is stated. The succeeding days of the week's run are said to have held up with little diminution.

The remarkable success of the Universal-Jewel production in Akron is said to be due largely to the elaborate advertising and exploitation campaign put over by A. T. Simmons, proprietor and manager of the Allen, assisted by Joseph H. Mayer, of the Universal Exploitation Department. Newspapermen in that city say the picture has received more publicity than any film ever shown in Akron. It is admitted that no advertising campaign on a picture ever reached the proportions of that put behind "Outside the Law" by Mr. Simmons.

As a result of the popularity of Miss Dean's latest picture in Akron, Universal reports that bookings are pouring in from all parts of Ohio. In most of the large cities the picture is being booked for a week's run. The Allen theatre has extended its run to two weeks. Early reports of the current week indicate that the picture is holding up to a remarkable degree, despite the fact that Akron is not recognized as a two-week run city.

The publicity campaign included the use of teasers of many kinds, mystery posters, and tie-ups with several Akron newspapers. During the week preceding the initial showing "Outside the Law" received several two and three-column heads on the front page of the Akron papers. In all more than twelve columns of publicity were printed concerning the picture before its showing.

Strong Cast for Allison

Announcement of Supporting Cast Reveals Names of Popular Players

BAYARD VEILLER, Metro chief of productions, has selected a strong supporting cast for "Dated," May Allison's newest Metro starring picture, upon which production is scheduled to start in the near future at the Metro studios in Hollywood.

Al Roscoe, film as well as stage star, will play opposite the blonde star in this production, which is from The Saturday Evening Post story by Maxwell Smith. Mr. Roscoe will enact the part of the husband of the heroine. He has recently completed playing a lead with Shirley Mason. Among some of the recent pictures in which he has had an important part are: "The City of Comrades," "Her Purchase Price," "Evangeline," and numerous others.

Frank Elliott, who had the villainous role in "The Marriage of William Ashe," Miss Allison's next Metro release, has been selected for the "bad man" part in "Dated." Mr. Elliott has appeared in more than one hundred and fifty successful screen productions. Previous to his work in the silent drama, he was on the English speaking stage.

Stanley Goethals, the little boy whose work in "Outside the Law" caused such favorable comment, will have the part of the little son of Elsie Kirkwood, the part enacted by Miss Allison. The child player in "Dated" has a very important part, and young Goethals was selected only after Mr. Veiller had considered all available child actors.

Current Paramount Issues

"The Passionate Pilgrim" and "The Kentuckians" Released February 20

THE Paramount features released on February 20 are the Cosmopolitan production, "The Passionate Pilgrim," and the Charles Maigne production, "The Kentuckians," with Monte Blue. Both are picturizations of popular novels by well-known authors.

Samuel Merwin, who recently signed a contract to write stories for Paramount pictures exclusively, is the author of "The Passionate Pilgrim," which was personally directed by Robert G. Vignola. Al. Liguori was the cameraman.

The title-role is played by Matt Moore. Opposite him is Rubye De Remer. Frankie Mann and Claire Whitney are also prominently cast, while other players are Julia Swayne Gordon, Mary Newcomb, Tom Guise, Van Dyke Brook, Charles Gerrard, Sam J. Ryan, Arthur Donaldson, Albert Roccardi, Bernard A. Reinold, Charles Brook and Helen Lindroth.

The other release, "The Kentuckians," was adapted from the famous novel of that name by John Fox, Jr. Frank Wright Tuttle wrote the scenario. Mr. Maigne took his company to Kentucky and there in the Blue Grass country and in the mountains to the east, and also in the capital city of Frankfort the principal scenes were filmed.

Playing opposite Monte Blue is Diana Allen, who recently created such a favorable impression by her work in "Heliotrope." Wilfred Lytell, who also played in "Heliotrope," has the role of Randolph Marshall, while others prominent in the cast are Frank Joyner, J. H. Gilmour, John Milturn, Grace Reals, John Carr, Russell Parker, Albert Hewitt, Eugenia Woodward and Wesley Jenkins. The photography is by Andre Barlatier.

Book "Kismet" for Opening

Will Be Used as Feature Attraction at Capitol, Baltimore, Md.

"KISMET," the Robertson-Cole super-special starring Otis Skinner, has been chosen as the opening attraction for another theatre, the new Capitol of Baltimore, Md. This is the second new theatre which this picture opened, the first having been the Winter Garden at Seattle. The Capitol of Baltimore, a handsome new house on a leading street, recently used very extensive newspaper advertisements to herald its opening with "Kismet," and a remarkably large attendance was evident throughout the engagement.

In the West "Kismet" continues to go as strongly as elsewhere in the country. From San Francisco comes word that at the Tivoli theatre all house records were broken. A letter written Robertson-Cole by W. A. Mead, branch manager at San Francisco, says:

"Regarding the showing of 'Kismet,' would say that the Turner and Dahnken people broke all house records yesterday, Monday. The manager informs us that the telephone is constantly ringing to inquire as to the location of the Tivoli theatre. This in itself proves the worth of the attraction, and also means added business for the Tivoli during ensuing months."

At the close of the week I. E. Phelps, manager of the Tivoli theatre, wrote Mr. Mead as follows: "'Kismet' smashed all week-day records. It took a special officer to manage the crowds. Beyond all expectations."

Ollie Sellers

A STATEMENT from the Pathe headquarters in New York, announces that its religious release, "Behold the Man," now being prepared for release in its revised form, is winning the commendation of leaders of virtually every sect and of prominent citizens. The picture has played to capacity audiences on four successive Sundays at the Apollo Theatre, New York City, according to the statement.

"Behold the Man" is the only picture of feature length ever issued in the United States, that was hand colored in its entirety. The picture lives over again the life of Christ from his birth to the crucifixion. It is reverently done, and lacks nothing in detail.

"TRAPPING the Bobcat," the first of the series of "Adventures of Bill and Bob," has been scheduled for release by Pathe for the week of March 6th. The offering, while containing amusing and entertaining moments, has also no small number of real thrills, and the eleven-year-old actors show themselves to be not only engaging screen personalities, but also fearless young individuals who are able to battle their tenacious prey with all the skill of veteran trappers.

"Trapping the Bobcat" has all the flavor of the woods and also contains a delightful human element. The boys are seen camping out in the wilds with only their dog, "Rags," as a protector. An amusing adventure is first shown with a skunk, which makes one of the young men not only unpopular with his brother, but with "Rags" as well. Next morning the boys start out with their rifles and traps, and one trap is "set" for the wily bobcat in one of his favorite haunts.

Speeding Up Kipling's Picture

Pathe Promises "Without Benefit of Clergy" Soon

AS promptly as is consistent with first-class production requirements, Rudyard Kipling's first motion picture, "Without Benefit of Clergy," will be submitted to the picture-loving public. In this most practical way, Pathe acts upon the recently, and widely, published statement of Paul Brunet that nothing but lack of confidence is the matter with finance and industry in this country, and that the effect of overproduction in the motion picture field having been entirely overcome there is no occasion for longer lack of activity in the studios. Roosevelt's famous axiom about "Words backed by deeds" thus receives timely and distinguished application.

The announcement, already made, that James Young has proceeded to the Pacific Coast under engagement to direct "Without Benefit of Clergy" is followed by other interesting details. When the Kipling script—a complete continuity—arrived from England it so fully came up to the anticipations of Paul Brunet and the Pathe Production Department that it was immediately forwarded to the Brunton Studios, Los Angeles, for a preliminary reading by Robert Brunton, an ardent Kiplingite, and Pathe's natural choice for production supervision. Mr. Brunton's response was characteristic. It speedily reached the Pathe New York offices in the person of M. C. Levee, vice-president of the Brunton Studios Corporation.

Mr. Brunton was eager to begin the production of "Without Benefit of Clergy." Who should be chosen to direct it? That problem was soon solved. Who had directed "The Devil" with such triumphant success? Who among the capable American directors had traveled in the Orient, and produced motion pictures in the India of Rudyard Kipling? So, to agree on James Young was a natral consequence. Mr. Young proved so entirely agreeable to the suggestion that he was ready in a few days to go West, whither Mr. Levee and Randolph Lewis—the Pathe representative who has worked with Kipling on the script as a technical expert—had preceded him.

On his arrival at the Brunton Studios Director James Young will find there not only a complete Kipling continuity, but many sketches of scenes and costumes—some in colors—besides most minute directions regarding characteristics of native Indian interiors, with peculiarities of character, customs, etc. In short, Mr. Lewis brought back with him from England everything movable calculated to make the production of 'Without Benefit of Clergy" live up to its celebrated author's ideal.

Probably never before have the preliminaries of an important production whose scenes are exotic been so fully attended to.

The statement is made that no effort nor expense will be spared in the effort to produce a distinctively Kipling picture. "In ordinary times and conditions," states Pathe, "such a resolution would be worthy of comment; now when so many leaders in the picture industry are talking 'confidence' but doing nothing, the combined and confident activities of Pathe and Brunton in producing masterly literature for literature's sake, appears in the light of a timely and most promising object lesson."

Cabinet Session Shown in Kinograms

Kinograms, for release through Educational Exchanges on February 20th, contains views of the assembling of the members of the Wilson Cabinet for one of their last meetings that is likely to be historic. The various members posed for the camera.

First pictures of the new Mexican army, which has been literally reborn under the administration of President Obregon are also shown. There are other flavors of the military in the visit of Gen. Crowder to Havana and the tribute paid in New York to the memory of the "Maine" hero.

Postpone Harold Lloyd Release

Change Release Date of "Now or Never" to March 27

PATHE announces that the release date of "Now or Never," Harold Lloyd's first three-reel comedy for Associated Exhibitors, Inc., has been changed from March 13, as announced previously, to March 27. The distributors explain that this first Lloyd comedy made under the contract with Associated Exhibitors "so far exceeds in every way all anticipations, high as they were, that the making of the large number of prints to meet exhibitors' demands requires more than the amount of time usually allotted to that detail." The enlargement of the Lloyd comedy from two to three reels, moreover, is declared to have resulted in much happy invention of novel effects, which are said to be not only full of inspiration to laughter but in some instances impressive and demanding the best resources of the laboratory in the perfection of prints. Pathe officials declare that in "Now or Never" Harold Lloyd has easily distanced all possible competitors, both in originality of creation and in the apparently spontaneous effects of the ludicrously comic action. The statement issued by Pathe in connection with the release of "Now or Never" follows:

"There is a three-reel situation provided before beginning the work of production, calling for an abundance of appropriate comic incidents growing legitimately out of the story. It goes without saying that, in addition, the famous Lloydian 'gag' creeps in unobtrusively and at every opportunity, but never is of a character out of keeping with either the scene or the story.

"The Moliere quality of entirely familiar and human scenes and incidents never is deviated from. Accordingly no reflection on the part of any audience, no 'chart,' is needed to indicate where the laugh comes in. For example, much of the action occurs aboard a Pullman sleeping car. The funny things that happen to the indiscriminate mixture of all sorts of travelers in a Pullman, which everybody is familiar with and which are the basis of a thousand comic stories, are developed with so much dramatic art, and with such expert judgment in the choice of characters and incidents employed, that their laughter-making qualities are many times magnified.

"That overcrowded wash room in the early morning gains new possibilities of rich humor through the comic idiosyncracies of characters already fully established. Shaving cream mistaken for tooth paste—an irascible gentleman's shirt mistaken by himself for a towel, the same having already been used for that purpose by the hero—the tube of shaving cream falling on the floor to be stepped on and the resulting snaky flow from its nozzle causing instant acute delirium tremens in the mild passenger with a 'hangover"—the hero's painful efforts to get the clothes on a baby girl who has been thrust into his care—all this means continuous laughter. The natural concatenation of events finds Lloyd riding on the brake-beams with a tramp, and when he loses his grip so that his hip pocket region touches the 'third rail' the resulting stream of sparks is both reasonable and inspiring. That Lloyd should seize an early opportunity to sit on a cake of ice, and that the ice should promptly melt away while you watch, is quite as laughable as it is to be expected, considering that this is a Harold Lloyd comedy."

Educational Books Big Circuit

Now Said to be Tied Up with Every Big Chain in Nation

WITH the signature of a contract with the Southern Amusement Company, controlling the Hulsey-Lynch theatres in Texas and Arkansas, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., announces that it has completed the task of booking practically every circuit of importance in this country and Canada.

Dallas was one of the last of the Educational Exchanges to open, and changes in management delayed the completion of contracts in that territory, but according to the New York office that section will now show the same over the top business as the rest of the country. Provision for these first runs will also make the pictures available for the remainder of the territory.

Included in the theatres which will show the entire Educational product are the Queen in Houston, Victory in Waco, Queen in Galveston, Royal in Little Rock, Ark., Olympic in Wichita Falls, the Queen, Old Mill and Hippodrome in Dallas, and all the houses in San Antonio. Assurances have been given, it is stated by Educational, that this product will be played in the $800,000 Palace theatre now being completed in Dallas, and which will open about July 4. The arrangements made also include adding a number of other theatres to the list just as soon as they have exhausted the short subject bookings that they now have under contract.

In calling attention to the vast number of big chains that have booked its product, Educational points to such as: the Rialto-Rivoli-Criterion, the Mark Strand Circuit and the Marcus Loew theatres in New York; Balaban and Katz and Jones, Linick and Schaeffer in Chicago; the A. S. Black and Gordon groups and every circuit of importance in all of New England; the Stanley group of houses in Philadelphia; the Rowland and Clark chain in Pittsburgh and its section; the Tom Moore and the Loew houses in Washington; the Jake Wells theatres through Virginia; the Lynch houses in Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee; the Levy theatres in Kentucky; the Linson houses in Cincinnati; the Loew chain in Cleveland; the Leiber houses in Indianapolis; the Saenger circuit in Louisiana, Mississippi and Florida; the Skouras house in St. Louis; the Kunsky circuit in Detroit; Ruben and Kinklestein in Minneapolis; the Butterfield circuit through Michigan; the A. K. Blank chain in Iowa and Nebraska; the Frank Newman theatres in Kansas City; the entire group of Denver theatres; the Swanson and Nolan houses in Utah; Turner and Dahnkerr in California; Gramain's theatres and the Gore Brothers-Lesser houses in Los Angeles, and the Jensen and von Herberg circuit through the Northwest. In addition to the entire Educational product is shown in all of the sixty Allen theatres through Canada.

"We believe," says statement from Educational, "that we have established a new record in the film world. We know that we have today more first runs in leading theatres of the country than any short subjects have ever enjoyed before. When one reflects that the first of our exchanges was not opened until June 20 last year and that other offices were gradually established and the entire system not completed until late in October, we believe that the achievement will be acknowledged all the more notable."

MORRIS KOHN, president of Realart, left New York last week on a business trip that will include stops in most of the key cities of the United States.

He will visit Realart's exchanges throughout the country and in addition will spend some time in Los Angeles, where he will inspect the production and other departments of Realart's new West Coast studios, where Mary Miles Minter, Wanda Hawley and Bebe Daniels are working.

Mr. Kohn said he intended to devote particular attention while away to the business outlook in motion pictures. In order to gain the most complete information he will talk with representative exhibitors in all of the key cities he touches.

Among the cities Mr. Kohn will visit are Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, St. Paul, Omaha, Detroit and Cleveland. He will be away about five weeks.

"Welcome Children" is Ready for Market

The work of cutting and titling "Welcome Children," the first five-reel feature to be made by Drascena Productions, of Los Angeles has been completed. The release date for the picture will be announced shortly by National Exchanges, Inc., which holds a contract with Drascena Productions, Co., Inc. for the exclusive distribution of that organization's pictures in the United States and Canada.

"Welcome Children" was written and directed by H. C. Matthews. The cast, which is an excellent one, includes Elsie Albert, Sidney Franklin, Orpha Alba, George Sherwood, Katherine Griffith, John W. Early, Pearl M. Laight and several others, including eight of the cleverest child actors seen on the screen in many a day.

National Exchanges, Inc. has arranged for its second release to be made one month following the release of "Welcome Children." It is the intention of the new distributing organization to adhere closely to its announced schedule of only one release a month, or twelve annually, so far as feature pictures are concerned.

Urban Science Subject at Capitol Theatre

One of the Kineto Reviews, "Nature's Handiwork," is at the Capitol theatre, New York, this week, and comes in for a good deal of praise at the hands of the press.

"Nature's Handiwork" is one of the science subjects treated in the Kineto Review, dealing with the phases of life and transformation of caterpillars, moths and butterflies.

Famous Players' Houses Book Pathe Serial

Frank Harris, Pathe Exchange branch manager, with headquarters in St. Louis, rounded up last week's routine by reporting the booking of a first run of an entire week for "The Avenging Arrow," at Phelps' Grand Opera House—and this three weeks before its release date, March 13th. And this was merely the prelude of the report. The really significant part related to contracts with the Famous Players' Missouri Corporation booking the new serial at ten of its St. Louis houses.

This list of Famous Players' theatres which will show "The Avenging Arrow" in a single city have seating capacity averaging 1,500. They are: The Gravois, Arco, Novelty, Maffitt, Lowell, Lyndell, Lafayette, Grand Florissant, Shenandoah No. 1 and Juniata.

Stanley Goethals, Age Four, a Metroite

"Smiling," Stanley Goethals four-year-old film player, is cheerily facing unusual responsibilities these days. For his childish shoulders are bearing the burden of one of the most important roles in "Dated," a special Metro production in which May Allison is starring.

When Maxwell Smith's story was selected by Bayard Veiller, chief of production at Metro's West Coast studios, as the subject for a special production, it was agreed that the most difficulty would be faced in finding a child player who could enact the important part given him. After many other children of the required age had been considered Stanley was selected because of his almost uncanny ability to show just the feeling required for any action.

International Cast for Wanda Hawley Film

"Funmakers from nearly every nation—from Britain to Africa." This is the description Realart applies to the supporting cast seen with Wanda Hamley in her latest Realart picture, "The Outside Woman." Playing opposite Miss Hawley is Clyde Fillmore, whose selection as leading man makes the two leading roles 100 per cent American. Sidney Bracey, who takes the part of an artist, is a Briton. The role of the artist's jealous wife is interpreted by Rosita Marstini, a French noblewoman. Japan is represented by Misao Seki who is seen as a valet. Thena Jasper, who comes from Africa, via Pennsylvania, is the colored maid. The policeman in the cast hails from Cork, while another minor role is carried by a young Italian.

Permanent Title Given Dorothy Dalton Film

Paramount states that "The Idol of the North" has been decided upon as the title of the Dorothy Dalton picture, which was filmed under the working title, "The Teaser," and which recently was completed at the Long Island studio.

Not Road-Showing 'East Lynne'

Mabel Ballin playing the leading role in "East Lynn," the Hugo Ballin production to be released by W. W. Hodkinson

THE Hodkinson headquarters in New York has issued a statement denying that the Hugo Ballin production, "East Lynne," which is to be released by the Hodkinson organization, will be withheld from its general release program. The statement also refutes stories which are alleged to have been circulated to the effect that this picture will be played only on a percentage basis or sent out as a road show. The statement from the Hodkinson home office follows:

"While Mr. Hodkinson feels convinced that "East Lynne" is fully worthy of any distinction which can possibly be shown to it by some special method of distribution, it is certainly contrary to the recognized policy that has built up the Hodkinson clientele to one of the strongest in the industry to keep any particular super production from his regular associates.

"The keystone of the Hodkinson policy to establish the most cordial relations of mutual profit between our organization, as the distributor, and the exhibitors who book our pictures. To our steadfast maintenance of this policy do we credit our growth and the increasing number of the exhibitors who are affiliated with us and who retain that affiliation year after year. Consequently, the advent of any extraordinary production such as Hugo Ballin's modernization of 'East Lynne' is really a test of our sincerity in the policy of complete co-operation which we have always avowed. The fact that fifty million people know the story from the novel by Mrs. Henry Wood or the various dramatizations that have been played all over the world, the fact that Hugo Ballin has turned out a finished picture that will rank with the greatest screen classics, the fact that we are surrounding this epic photodrama."

Among the important exploitation tie-ups arranged in connection with the Hodkinson release of Hugo Ballin's modernized version of "East Lynne" will be the reissuing of the famous novel by Mrs. Henry Wood. This will be in the form of a special photoplay edition illustrated from stills of the picture which will be published by Grosset and Dunlap.

In addition, both Hodkinson and Grosset and Dunlap will issue special window cards and other advertising material—the publishers' advertising will be displayed in bookstore windows and will call attention to the theatre; the theatres' lobby display will be partly devoted to placards and reproductions of the front cover of the photoplay edition of "East Lynne" calling attention to its sale at the local bookstores.

This book tie-up is declared to be the first step in a thorough exploitation campaign on "East Lynne" which the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation believes will set new records in the motion picture industry for its intensity and many-sidedness.

Beneficial Reaction of Slump

Bayard Veiller Sees Better Productions as Result

BAYARD VEILLER, chief of productions at Metro's West Coast studios, is convinced that the slump in picture making already has been decidedly beneficial to the producer, and even more so to the theatre-going public.

"The slump as a 'slump' is about over," said Mr. Veiller. "But the making of pictures in the numbers they were turned out last year and the preceding year has not yet been resumed, and I hope never will be. The economic conditions that hampered all industries for a period naturally curtailed the making of pictures.

"But the important result of this curtailment is that it increased the quality of the pictures made. More time has been taken with each production, greater care has been exercised in the selection of stories, casts have been organized with far greater care—partly because there was a larger number of players to select from—and the finished picture has shown the result of this care.

"With an open market ready to accept anything in the way of pictures that may be produced, there is a natural tendency to decrease the quality of the production. But with a keener competition comes a demand for better pictures. The slogan, 'fewer and better pictures,' finally has been put into practice, with the result that we are about to have an era of finer productions than ever before were thought possible.

"Meanwhile, the film industry is profiting by the coming of the better class of writers and theatrical producers to lend their talent to the screen. Authors, who but a few months ago wrote directly for the printed page, and permitted use of their plots on the screen merely as a by-product, now are writing directly for the screen. The close study of camera requirements thus resulting has proved of the greatest value to picture production of "Camille" probably will be more and more so as the producers come to realize the absolute necessity of story value in the making of films."

The "fewer and better" slogan had borne fruits at Metro studios even before the pinch of economic conditions made such a change necessary. The filming of Ibanez's "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," which consumed more than six months' time and cost slightly more than a million dollars, was planned a year and a half ago. Nazimova's special production of "Camille," probably will be almost as costly, while nearly as much time will be given to it. Other productions even more ambitious are scheduled for the coming year—although the number of films will be kept down to a minimum.

Four big special productions now are under way at Metro's West Coast studios. "Barber John's Boy" is about to be produced with Gareth Hughes, Metro's youthful featured player, in the leading role; Alice Lake is starring in a big production of John Fleming Wilson's story, "Uncharted Seas," now being filmed in the snow country; "Dated" is the title of May Allison's new starring picture, and "Coming Home" is the appropriate title of Viola Dana's next production, to be starred immediately after her return from a three weeks' shopping tour in New York.

Two scenes from Alice Calhoun's latest starring vehicle for Vitagraph, "The Charming Deceiver"

To Release African Pictures

ANNOUNCEMENT comes from the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation that it will release eight reels of the Paramount-Vandenbergh African Pictures, obtained by Dr. Leonard J. Vandenbergh during his year of exploration of British East Africa and Uganda, in April. They will be available to exhibitors in series of four pictures, each two reels in length.

The decision of Paramount to release these pictures, which show for the first time in film many of the least known African tribes, is declared to be the result of the favorable reception they were accorded when they were shown recently at the Rivoli and Rialto theatres in New York.

The subject of the first episode in the scenes is "Wild Men of Africa," which is introduced with pictures portraying the strange life of the Wanyika, a tribe of villagers which was one of the first visited by the Vandenbergh party. The barbarous funeral customs are vividly shown; also the tribe's primitive dentistry and the art of body scarification which they practice. There is an interesting so-called witch dance, in which the natives, Dr. Vandenbergh says, "dance very much like some of our own people who frequent cabarets, dance halls and even private dances."

The second episode is titled "The Lion Killers," at the end of which the Masai are seen putting the finishing spears into an ugly beast who has been committing depredations about the native village. Native marriage customs are also shown in this episode, along with a highly-interesting series of scenes showing native hut builders at work.

"Slaying the Hippopotamus," the third episode, shows this enormous beast in his native haunts and the way in which the savages set about to conquer him, the finishing incident being a barbecue, in which the black men find evident relish in what to Americans would probably seen rather tough fare. These pictures were taken in the land of the real African sleeping sickness, and Dr. Vandenbergh got a number of good photographs of some of the victims of this dread malady.

The fourth episode is titled "The Land of the Pygmies," and beside being a subject which is certain to arouse great popular interest, it is of the greatest scientific value. For Dr. Vandenbergh and the photographer of the party, Dr. Shattuck, are among the few civilized human beings who have ever seen these strange and timid little people of the African forest, and these are the first photographs ever taken of them. The Mambuti, they are called, and in this wonderful film these tiny natives whose existence heretofore has been generally regarded as purely mythical are seen in their villages which are little more than bowers of leaves. This race, Dr. Vandenbergh says, is fast vanishing, so that these pictures will probably remain for all time the only authentic pictorial record of their existence.

Since returning from this expedition, which was financed by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Dr. Vandenbergh has been in great demand as a speaker before scientific organization in November last he spoke in Washington at the invitation of the National Geographic Society, an honor which is accorded only those who have accomplished unusual things for natural science.

Vignola to Do Star Picture

Is About to Start Production in Which Marion Davies Will Be Star

ROBERT G. VIGNOLA, who for the past year has been making special productions for Cosmopolitan-Paramount, will undertake his first star picture under his present affiliations when he will begin work within a week on a production starring Marion Davies. The vehicle is a light comedy adapted by Luther Reed from Frank R. Adams's story, "Manhandling Ethel," which apneared recently in Cosmopolitan Magazine.

This is the first of a series of four, or perhaps five, productions which Mr. Vignola will make for Cosmopolitan-Paramount during 1921. Tentative plans have already been laid for the entire year, including the choosing of the stories which have been written by a different well-known writer. As in the past year Mr. Vignola will observe strictly his policy of making each production unlike the others in theme so that exhibitors who play the entire Vignola series will have a variety of treatments, it is declared. This policy proved successful during the past year when he produced "The World and His Wife," "The Passionate Pilgrim," "Straight Is the Way," and "Redemption Cove," which is yet to be released.

"I am looking forward with a great deal of pleasure and anticipation to directing Miss Marion Davies," said Mr. Vignola. "I have never had the opportunity of working with her although I have known her personally for a long time. While we have long cherished the idea that some day we would do a picture together we did not want to start until we had found a certain type of story. I am glad to say that 'Manhandling Ethel' is that story. It is a light comedy with a role that seems to have been especially designed for Miss Davies' unusual personality. Its opportunities for the display of her rare talents are tremendous and I am confident that with it she will set a new vogue in screen attractions."

Stoll Sets "The Tidal Wave" for Feb 27

Among the members of the cast are Poppy Wyndham, Judd Green, Sydney Seaward, Annie Esmond and Pardoe Woodman. Sinclair Hill adapted, directed and produced "The Tidal Wave."

May Yohe Will Make Personal Appearance

Arrangements have been made to have May Yohe, formerly Lady Francis Hope, make personal appearance at the theatres where "The Hope Diamond Mystery," the new fifteen episode serial to be released by the Howells Sales Company Inc., is being shown.

It is probable that May Yohe has more sensational publicity than any actress in the history of the theatre in America, states Howells. Starting out as the daughter of a poor dressmaker in Philadelphia she rose to fame almost ever night as the star of a musical comedy.

From that time her rise was meteoric until she became the acknowledged favorite of two continents. Then she met and married Lord Francis Hope and became the possessor of the famous Hope diamond.

"The Hope Diamond Mystery" is largely a history of this sinister stone. It starts in the castle of Lord Hale in England and shows the clandestine love affair between Lady Hale and her American lover. It then jumps to India and shows the early history of the diamond and the manner in which it was stolen from the Goddess Rama Sita by a Frenchman named Tavernier, all for love of a dancing girl. The high priests of the temple then invoke the curse which has followed the stone down through the ages.

In her personal appearance at the theatres May Yohe will not only tell the sinister effect of the stone on her own life but will tell of the history of the stone which she has compiled from researches she made in the British Museum when she was Lady Hope.

To Aid Smaller Exhibitors

Universal Readjusts Exploitation Campaign on "Devil's Pass Key"

DUE to a growing demand on the part of medium size houses for "The Devil's Pass Key," Erich von Stroheim's feature picture of Parisian intrigue, Universal now is readjusting its exploitation campaign on that Universal-Jewel production, the Universal sales department announces.

The exploitation campaign originally placed behind "The Devil's Pass Key" was planned to help the big house exhibitors, for whom the picture was primarily designed. Although many big houses still are booking the Stroheim film, so many smaller houses now are putting it on their advance schedules, Universal faces the task of extending exploitation methods on this picture so as to benefit the small town and community theatres.

The biggest asset which Universal hopes to offer to small town exhibitors of "The Devil's Pass Key," is an elaborate and complete resume and compilation of what the picture has done in other places and how it has been put over. Facts and figures concerning the successes of the picture in theatres of all sizes will be available to the exhibitor. On top of this he will receive new and additional exploitation ideas particularly suitable to his house and its patronage.

Experts of the Universal Exploitation Department now are compiling all exploitation stunts and fruitful ideas used by various exhibitors throughout the country to put over "The Devil's Pass Key." These will be explained in clear and concise language, illustrated by pictures and grouped according to the size and patronage of theatres using them.

Jose Film Set for Feb. 27

Anna Nilsson, Allan Forrest, Earl Majeroni and Jane Jennings Seen

BELIEVING the new Edward Jose production, "What Women Will Do," to be a notable addition to the formidable list of photoplays which Associated Exhibitors, Inc., have launched under their banner, including such decidedly successful offerings as "The Riddle: Woman," starring Geraldine Farrar, and "The Devil," with George Arliss, this new special feature has been selected to headline the Pathe schedule for the week of February 27th.

"What Women Will Do" is frankly melodrama, presenting the thrills and romance found in the underworld and cultured society. The gayety of the cabaret and the frenzied excitement of the race track also forms the background against which Charles A. Logue, the well-known screen author, has written this story of a woman's regeneration that is sensationally and humanly told, declares a statement from the Pathe headquarters.

The cast is headed by Anna Q. Nilsson. Miss Nilsson will be remembered for her work in support of H. B. Warner in the Pathe feature, "One Hour Before Dawn." Allan Forrest plays the heroic male lead, and Earl Metcalfe plays the underworld lead who endeavors to reform. George Majeroni is the leader of the underworld gang and Riley Hatch gives one of his inimitable detective characterizations. Jane Jennings completes the cast in a splendid mother role.

"What Women Will Do" has been pronounced a spectacular work from the standpoint of direction. Edward Jose further demonstrates his skill in manipulating the characters in the production. With the true eye of an artist, he has carefully chosen his wide variety of scenes and locations, declares the Pathe statement, his underworld settings giving an atmosphere of inscrutable mystery and his society settings breathing refinement and taste.

Dana Returns From Trip

Arrow Sales Manager Finds Exchanges Now More Optimistic

AFTER a two weeks' trip through the South, P. B. "Ted" Dana, sales manager of the Arrow Film Corporation, has returned with a number of big contracts for Arrow productions. Mr. Dana found the independent exchange men most optimistic as to the future. However, they are all inclined to be somewhat conservative as to their buy. Good pictures at reasonable prices can always be disposed of, but for the most part these independent men are not loading themselves up with expensive productions that require all of their time to exploit, and, while they might make a little money out of them, they do so at the expense of their other product. Mr. Dana had this to say regarding this situation:

"There seems to be a tendency at the present time to lay off of expensive productions. During the past six or eight months the independent man has been splurging with some very costly pictures and their experiences have been somewhat sad. It is true that most independent exchange men are looking for a big picture to exploit, but the trouble has been that they have been fooled into believing that because a high price was asked for a production it was a big picture."

RAYMOND E. GALLAGHER, well and popularly known to the motion picture industry upon both coasts, has been added to the staff of Motion Picture News. Ibanez Special Opens March 6

"The Four Horsemen" to Be Presented at the Lyric

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION announces that "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" will be given its first public showing at the Lyric theatre, New York City, on March 6th. A premiere "unprecedented in the annals of motion-pictures" is promised by Metro in a statement just issued from the headquarters of that organization. This "colossal photodrama" made by Rex Ingram from June Mathis's adaptation of Vicente Blasco Ibanez's famous novel of the same title as that under which the screen version is to be released, will be presented under the personal supervision of Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rivoli, Rialto and Criterion theatres in New York. Metro announces that a "brilliant and distinguished audience" will witness the initial showing of the production at the Lyric on Sunday evening, March 6th. The Metro statement announcing the New York premiere follows in part:

"Because of the extraordinary success of the Spanish author's novel on both sides of the Atlantic, the appearance of 'The Four Horsemen' as a motion picture has been awaited with intense interest in literary and artistic circles as well as in filmdom and theatredom. Plans are being made for the reception at the premiere of Don Juan Riano and Dr. Tomas Le Breton, the Spanish and Argentina Ambassadors from Washington; the official consular representatives in New York of Spanish speaking countries; Archer M. Huntington and other officials of the Hispanic Society of America, together with prominent authors, newspaper and magazine editors, college professors, artists, sculptors, as well as notable figures in the film and theatre world.

"With its colorful, picturesque episodes in the Argentine, its throbbing romance against the gay background of Paris and its stirring, epic sweep of drama in the big Marne scenes, the screen version of 'The Four Horsemen' offers unusual scope for musical interpretation. An elaborate music setting, to be rendered by a symphony orchestra, is being specially arranged by Dr. Riesenfeld, together with other strongly appealing interpretative features, and it is predicted that this record-breaking photodrama's metropolitan debut will set a new mark in the annals of filmdom.

"Arrival of 'The Four Horsemen' on the screen has been eagerly anticipated by thousands upon thousands of readers and admirers of Blasco Ibanez' novel, not only in New York but throughout the United States and for weeks Metro offices in various cities of the country have been deluged with inquiries as to the date of the picture's release.

"Likewise, the translation of 'The Four Horsemen' into a photodrama has broken all motion picture production records. Just a few of the statistics of the picture's production, which was made at Metro's west coast studios in Los Angeles, California, reveal the unprecedented magnitude of the undertaking. It cost more than $1,000,000 and was six months in the making. More than 12,000 persons were utilized. Fourteen camera men and twelve assistant directors were required in handling and recording the big ensemble scenes."

Fox Names March Releases

Pearl White in "Know Your Men"; Wm. Russell in "Bare Knuckles"

SINCE Pearl White achieved success in the Fox presentation of Henri Bernstein's "The Thief," there has been a constant demand that the popular star be seen in more such roles. This has resulted in William Fox selecting as her next vehicle, to be released in March, a photodrama called "Know Your Men," in which Miss White will have the role of a pampered daughter of wealth; in the earlier incidents, Paul H. Sloane wrote the scenario for "Know Your Men," and Charles Giblyn directed the picture.

William Russell will have a March presentation in "Bare Knuckles" which is described as a powerful story of powerful men. A. Channing Edington wrote the story and James Patrick Hogan directed it. The locale of the picture, which is laid in the wildest part of the Sierras, offers striking landscape backgrounds and the camera has caught some of the most impressive snow scenes, it is declared, that have been registered on the screen.

Buck Jones will figure in a March release, which up to the present time carries the working title of "The Ranger." The story was written by Jack Strumwasser, William K. Howard wrote the scenario, and Bernard Durning did the directing. The lead, "Tom Merrill," is a typical Buck Jones part.

One of the most prententious offerings of the March schedule is the introduction of Harold Goodwin as an added member of the Fox group of stars. Goodwin will be seen for the first time as a star in "Oliver Twist, Jr," which is an Americanized and modernized version of Charles Dickens' well-known story, "Oliver Twist." The film version, in its main incidents follows closely the Dickens story.

Two new Sunshine Comedies will appear in March, as will four Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons, four weekly releases of the Fox serial "Fantomas" and the semi-weekly issue of Fox News.

JACK EATON has been engaged by Goldwyn to take charge of its short subjects department, including the Goldwyn-Bray Pictographs and the Booth Tarkington two-reel comedies of boy life, released under the general title of "The Adventures and Emotions of Edgar Pomeroy." He has already assumed his new duties with Goldwyn and has his headquarters on the floor that houses the other Goldwyn executives at 469 Fifth avenue.

Pathe Moves in New Home

Six Upper Floors of Huge Pathe Building House New York Office

View of Pathe's new building now nearing completion, located at 35 W. 45th St., New York

ALL of the departments of Pathe Exchange, Inc., are comfortably settled in their new home occupying the six upper floors of the completed Pathe Building, at 35, 37, 39 West Forty-fifth Street, New York City. A moving feat out of the ordinary, conducted by a small army of experts, transferred the vast quantity of furniture, fittings, books and records from the old quarters in less than forty-eight hours without any interference with the business routine, and without any confusion of department material.

The new Pathe Building is in every way a model, up-to-date office structure, finished and equipped in a manner to serve the needs of the very active organization for which President Brunet designed it when, two years ago, the rapid growth of the concern had already caused the quarters then occupied to be inadequate. It enables the offices of the various departments to be conveniently linked on their respective floors. The eleventh floor contains the principal executive offices, including that of President Brunet and the meeting room of the Board of Directors. The office manager, the comptroller, the mailing department, branch auditing and statistical departments, etc., occupy the eighth floor, while the ninth houses the advertising, publicity, purchasing and production departments.

Director of Exchanges Elmer R. Pearson presides over the tenth floor, where also the various sales managers are located. On the twelfth are Pathe News, Pathe Review and the film-editing department, with projection rooms, while the art department is housed by the thirteenth.

1st Nat'l Signs Hope Hampton

Hope Hampton

A NUMBER of important announcements have been issued from the New York offices of the Hope Hampton Productions, Inc. Miss Hampton has signed a contract to appear in a production for First National release. Her initial production will be based on "Stardust," written by Fannie Hurst. This story ran serially in the Cosmopolitan Magazine for ten months and is the first full-length novel from the pen of Miss Hurst. Hobart Henley will direct the picture. In addition to the contract just announced, it is also stated that plans are being made for the presentation of a number of "super-productions adapted from the stories of well-known authors." The statement from the Hope Hampton office follows:

"Every detail of production and distribution has been worked out with a view toward asembling not only a thoroughly competent, but notable list of executives to surround Miss Hampton and thereby assuring as near perfection in the finished product as can possibly be obtained.

"Miss Hampton's career on the screen has been one of remarkable accomplishment covering a period of a little more than twelve months and during which time she has not only proved her right to stardom, but has endeared herself to thousands of film fans in this country and abroad. Among her more popular pictures are 'A Modern Salome,' a Leonce Perret-Metro release, and 'The Bait,' a Maurice Tourneur special production distributed by Paramount. Following these successes she made one picture under the direction of Jack Gilbert, a former assistant to Maurice Tourneur. This was brought on from the National Exhibitors Exchanges and will shortly be released under the title of 'Love's Penalty.'

"Hobart Henley is one of the best known directors of this present day and age and has a number of screen successes to his credit, chief among them being the 'Gay Old Dog' (Fathe) and the William Faversham productions for Selznick. His early days were spent under the rigid discipline of the Universal lot both as actor and director, later enlisting under the Goldwyn banner. 'Experience' and 'artist' can be applied to him will full meaning.

"Anthony Paul Kelly's name is a by-word for adaptation, continuity and dramatic construction and his work in that connection would make an endless list. The novelized version of 'Stardust' has been given to him and he has set himself to the task of creating what he believes will prove not only a screen triumph but a real sensation built along the lines that the public are today demanding in their motion picture entertainment.

"The camera work and photography will be in the hands of Alfred Ortlieb, who has impressed his art into giving the screen some of its most magnificent effects. He was universally noted for his work on "The White Circle" and his latest production is 'The Black Panther's Cub,' a Chautard directed picture starring Florence Reed.

"Henry Menessier will take charge of the technical direction assisted by his own staff of technicians and artisans. Fifteen years have lapsed since Menessier was making sets for the old Pathe company in Paris and there is perhaps no other man in the industry who has taken as active a part in productions or who has given more to the artistic development and general composition of sets in keeping with the atmosphere of the story than he.

"John B. Hylan, who for a long period has been associated with the directorial staff of the Selnick organization will be assistant director and his varied experience as actor and writer prior to his directorial work should prove of invaluable aid to Mr. Henley.

"Fannie Hurst, in speaking of the elaborate preparations being made for her brain-child's transference to the screen said in part, that 'Miss Hampton not only fits the role admirably, but has all the necessary qualifications to place her in the foremost rank of current day screen artistes.' Actual shooting of the scenes will commence shortly at the Paragon Studio in Fort Lee. Further details of release and distribution will be announced in the near future by the Associated First National Exhibitors Circuit."

Units Busy at Universal City

THE arrival at Universal City of Carl Laemmle, president, and R. H. Cochrane, vice-president, already has borne fruit in the way of increased production, declares a statement from Universal's home office. Twenty-four producing units are now reported to be making features at Universal, and the scenario department has just given out elaborate plans for the immediate future.

Shortly after Priscilla Dean completes her current Jewel Production, "False Colors," she will begin work on her next feature, "The Conflict," probably under her present director, Stuart Paton. "The Conflict" is at present running serially in the Red Book, and is the work of Clarence Buddington Kelland. The screen adaptation is being made by George C. Hull.

Rollin Sturgeon is now preparing to produce "Human Hearts," the famous drama by Hal Reid, with an all-star cast. This will be a Jewel feature, and Mark Robbins has been engaged to prepare the scenario.

Harry Carey, who now is at work on "The Homeward Trail," already has been provided with his next production. It is called "Christmas Eve at Pilot Butte," and originally appeared in the Red Book from the pen of Courtney Ryley Cooper. C. J. Clawson is at work on the scenario, and Jack Ford will in all probability direct the production.

When Edith Roberts finishes "The Opened Shutters," on which she is now at work under the direction of William Worthington, she will begin on another production written and directed by Norman Dawn. The story is called "The Evil Half," and its scenes are laid in the far North.

Gladys Walton, who is approaching the final scenes of "Li'l Miss Merridew," the F. Hopkinson Smith story directed by Harry B. Harris, will next be seen in "The Man-Tamer," a story by John Barton Oxford, which recently appeared in a popular magazine. This is a circus story in which the Universal star will appear as a lion tamer who demonstrates that her power to control is not confined to the beasts of the jungle. A. P. Younger is now at work on the screen adaptation of the story.

Eva Novak's next feature will be "The Black Cop," a story by Wadsworth Camp, which recently received much favorable comment when it appeared in Collier's Weekly. Harvey Gates is adapting this popular story for the screen.

John Colton and Doris Schroeder are collaborating on an original story for Carmel Myers in which she will appear as soon as she has finished her current feature, "The Dangerous Moment." The story is called "The Heart of a Jewess," and it is predicted will prove the most powerful vehicle yet provided for this popular young star.

Frank Mayo's feature to follow "The Magnificent Brute" is "The Truant," an original story by Mann Page and Izola Forrester.

"Black Beauty" Makes Hit

Variety of Exploitation Stunts Marks Showings of Vita Special

"BLACK BEAUTY," Vitagraph's special production, based on the story by Anna Sewell, with the human story added by Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester, is declared to be stirring things up in other parts of the country as well as at the Strand theatre, New York, where it has been winning favor. Last week the photoplay was shown at the Brandford theatre, Newark, and this week it is the leading attraction at the Palace theatre, New Haven, one of the largest motion picture and vaudeville theatres in New England. The attendance at the Palace was equal to that of the new and elaborate Capitol theatre in Hartford, which presented "Black Beauty" three weeks earlier and broke the house record. Next week "Black Beauty" will be the featured attraction at the Strand theatre, Brooklyn.

The management of the Capitol theatre, at Hartford, the first to show the play in any theatre, laid particular stress on reaching school teachers and through them, the children. This was done through hundreds of personal letters and the newspapers. Little was done in the way of ballyhoo or street "stunts." The lobby display was simple and dignified.

In New Haven, Manager Edwards has gone in for the spectacular. The display in the spacious lobby was unusual, even a live "Black Beauty" being used, and every inch of space utilized. The front of the theatre presented the name of the famous horse in a blaze of electric lights. A black horse was led through the streets and announced as "Black Beauty," while a pack of fifteen fox hounds, led on leashes, attracted considerable attention.

The management of the Branford theatre, Newark, mailed more than 10,000 postal cards to regular patrons of the theatre, it is declared. Every teacher in the city received a personal letter. James M. Beldon, superintendent of the New Jersey Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, wrote his approval and appreciation of the picture. This was used extensively in newspaper advertising.

Fox's Melodrama Still Being Booked Heavy

According to accounts from the William Fox headquarters, "While New York Sleeps," the melodramatic production released by Fox early last fall, still persists in remaining on the list "of heavily contracted latest releases." Following its release, the picture was given a successful run on Broadway with engagements at two of the principal theatres on the Big Street.

The Results of Organization

Success of Keaton Comedies Due Largely to Experienced Workers

BUSTER KEATON, who is making a series of two-reel comedies for Joseph M. Schenck, which are released through Metro, has had his efforts crowned with instantaneous success, claims that company. Today, a little over four months after he took the step into stardom, he stands pre-eminent as the leading funmaker in the land of slapstick.

His first comedy, "One Week," has received the praise of the critic and fan alike. The reviews of this picture are unanimous in the opinion that this sad-faced youth, the former foil for Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle, has arrived with a bang. "Convict 13," "The Scarecrow" and "Neighbors," subsequent releases, are the equal, if not superior, to "One Week," according to the critics.

And the one reason for this unprecedented success is organization, states Merto. Lou Anger, production manager of the Comique Film Company, producers of the Buster Keaton Comedies, has surrounded the star with a group of men whose names have been linked with motion pictures since the inaugural "shot" was taken at the Lubin studios in Philadelphia more than a decade ago.

Leading in the organization is Lou Anger, production manager. He filled a similar position with the Arbuckle comedies. Anger is known to vaudevillians throughout the country. Following come Eddie Cline, the director, who for a time was considered the premier megaphone handler of the Mack Sennett Comedies. Then comes Jean C. Havez and Joe Mitchell, scenarioists. Both have written numerous stage and screen successes. Elgin Lessley, Arbuckle's veteran cameraman, is handling the Bell Howell. The remainder of the organization is intact, just as Arbuckle left it. Joseph M. Schenck, who guided Norma and Constance Talmadge and Roscoe Arbuckle to stardom, is the sponsor for the comedies and has placed unlimited capital at the disposal of the organization.

Reports from the Metro distributing centers are gratifying and there already is a tremendous demand for the Keaton Comedies.

May Produce in Mexico

Robert Fairbanks and Ted Reed in Mexico Investigating Conditions

ROBERT FAIRBANKS, brother of Douglas Fairbanks, and Ted Reed, who directed the famous star in his last vehicle, "The Nut," are in Mexico City, where they will remain a fortnight making a preliminary survey of the motion picture industry in the southern Republic.

The purpose of this survey is to investigate the practicability of members of the United Artists producing pictures south of the border. If conditions are found to be favorable, it is stated, there is a possibility that at least three of the United Artists may make one production each in Mexico. The information obtained by Robert Fairbanks and Reed will be available not only to Douglas Fairbanks, but to Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin and D. W. Griffith, the other members of the "Big Four."

For a considerable time Douglas Fairbanks has had under consideration a plan for making pictures in foreign countries. It was his intention, originally, to make "The Three Musketeers" in France. This idea was abandoned, however.

THE LAW

recognizes the absolute ownership of original literary and musical works, by the creator—the author and composer—thereof; it evidences this recognition by Copyright and prohibiting infringements thereupon. From this recognition the originator derives his revenue—his livelihood.

THE EXHIBITOR

who furnishes music as a part of the program or entertainment provided by this theatre, does so for purposes of profit—for the same reason as he presents the photoplay. He has no more right to demand the use of music free, than he has to demand his picture service free. Relatively there is the same effort that goes into the making of both music and picture—the author's story—the composer's music; the producer's expense of production—the publisher's expense of publication and exploitaton. Both must return a fair profit to those supplying the finished product to the theatre and its audiences.

THE CONTENTION

that by playing the music in his theatre the exhibitor "makes it" is untenable; music was made and sold before photoplays were dreamed of; and will be after they are forgotten. It is true that individuals hearing music played in a theatre or elsewhere, may purchase copies of that music and often do. It is equally true that because one exhibitor uses a certain projecting apparatus another may buy it; but does that ever mean that the first one gets his machine gratis, thus depriving the patentee of that part of his income?

THE TAX

is fair and reasonable; it must be paid by the theatres playing, for purposes of profit, the musical works controlled by this Society; if none of such works are played, no tax need be paid. We simply ask that you stay "within the law"—then we will not be obliged to invoke the law to protect our rights.

Two scenes from "Mr. Barnes of New York," a new Tom Moore picture for Goldwyn release

Culver City Reports Progress

GOOD progress is being made at the Goldwyn studios at Culver City on the new productions which recently got under way, according to word received at the Goldwyn home-office from the Coast. Will Rogers, Director Clarence G. Badger and the members of the company acting in Elmer L. Rice's original scenario, "A Bashful Romeo," left last week for Jackson, Calif., to take the exteriors. Sylvia Breamer has been cast for the leading feminine role, that of Juliet. Sydney Ainsworth will play an important part in this photoplay the action of which takes place partly in Oklahoma and partly in the Venice of Shakespeare's play of "Romeo and Juliet."

The great ball room scene in Leroy Scott's first original scenario, "The Night Rose," is being photographed this week under the direction of Wallace Worsley. The scene is said to set a new standard of gorgeousness, 300 couples appearing in it. Special dances will be introduced by the Marion Morgan dancers. All of the gowns for the ball room scene were made by the costume department of the Goldwyn studios. The settings are by Cedric Gibbons, Goldwyn art director, and are attracting much attention.

Director Victor Schertzinger is supervising the cutting of Tom Moore's new starring vehicle, "Made in Heaven," from William J. Hurlbut's comedy, Mr. Moore and his bride, Rene Adoree, left San Francisco last Wednesday for Honolulu to spend their honeymoon. Moore had a very narrow escape from serious injury on the eve of his wedding in a burning set. He plays the role of a fireman in "Made in Heaven" and in the big fire scene the star got his eyebrows and his uniform badly scorched while fighting the flames, it is declared.

Director Frank Lloyd will finish in a few days the photography on Charles Kenyon's original scenario, "The Invisible Power," originally called "The Alibi."

The homes of several Santa Barbara millionaires will be seen in the film version of Thompson Buchanan's play, "The Bridal Path." Director E. Mason Hopper and the company appearing in that photoplay returned to the studio last week and have begun work on the interiors.

Director Reginald Barker is making favorable progress on the next Reginald Barker production, a screen adaptation of Rupert Hughes' novel, "The Old Nest," the continuity for which was prepared by the author. The story is one of mother love and is a new type for Director Barker and in the belief of the studio is destined to prove that his versatility equals his sense of the dramatic.

Rita Weiman and Katherine Newlin Burt have completed original scenarios for Goldwyn and expect to return East within a few days, as will Anzia Yezierska who has spent a month here in developing a screen story from her volume of short stories published under the title of "Hungry Hearts." Julian Josephson, who has just been appointed associate editor under J. G. Hawks, has written the story thread from several of the tales in the book. It is likely that the picture will be photographed in New York in order to preserve the East Side atmosphere that runs through all of the stories in the volume.

Hodkinson Calls for Action

THE following statement on the present agitation for censorship has been issued by Mr. W. W. Hodkinson:

"A glance at the news columns of the trade press shows that censorship measures have been introduced in almost every state where the legislature is now in session. We are facing an extraordinary situation. Never before has there been such a widespread agitation for censorship of motion pictures, born no doubt of the anti-picture propaganda which has been planted cleverly and systematically by the enemies of the industry. In a recent letter to the "New York Times" I have indicated some of the sources of this anti-picture propaganda and as far as this propaganda can be traced to the jealousy of theatrical interests or the seekers after notoriety, there is no special occasion for alarm. There is, however, a new element in this agitation which cannot be dismissed lightly. I am referring to great groups of sincere men and women who have heretofore been friendly and well disposed toward the motion pictures but whom the greed and recklessness of certain producers are about to drive into the ranks of advocates of censorship.

"The industry as a whole has been remiss in performing its full duty to the public. When a demand for censorship or other drastic regulation is voiced by men and women who have no selfish motives it is the plain duty of the leaders of this industry to pay attention. I have foreseen this rising wave of hostile legislation many months ago. With others I have noticed the rapid growth of anti-picture warnings both in the daily press and in the trade journals and I would have been glad to co-operate in any intelligent effort to combat this propaganda. No such effort has been made.

"Having foreseen what has now happened and thoroughly persuaded as I am that in the absence of intelligent effort on our part the industry will suffer irreparable damage not only from hostile legislation, but also from public disapproval, I want to suggest once more the necessity of immediate action. Unless the heads of the industry get together every individual and every element must work out its own salvation independent of the other or suffer for the sins of omission and commission that are still being committed by so many producers.

"Not only must our effort come without delay, but it must be in-

REALART'S West Coast studios, devoted to Mary Miles Minter, Wanda Hawley and Bebe Daniels productions, has increased its staff of scenarists to five writers. The latest addition is Percy Heath, ex-dramatic critic, American author of "Sari," and former publicity agent for David Belasco, Henry W. Savage, Charles Dillingham and others.

Mr. Heath, it is announced by Elmer Harris, supervising director of the studios, will specialize on comedy-drama adaptations for Bebe Daniels and Wanda Hawley.

With the addition of Mr. Heath, Realart's western scenario staff numbers five—Elmer Harris, supervising director; Alice Eyton, Edith Kennedy, and Douglas Doty, former editor of Century Magazine.

Many Stunts Arranged for R-C Release

Exhibitors who are booking "Seven Years' Bad Luck," the Robertson-Cole special with Max Linder, are making preparations for most comprehensive exploitation campaigns, declares Robertson-Cole, for the picture is one which is built upon the human inclination toward superstition amplified to its utmost.

Plans are being made to make full use of broken mirrors, black cats, old shoes, the numerals "13" and "7," as well as umbrellas, salt shakers, horse shoes, hair pins, brooms and witches, and the many other properties which are associated with superstition, declares the R.-C. statement.

Poet Praises Artistry of Metro's "Big Game"

John Steven McGroarty, author of the "California Mission Play," and poet laureate of California, expressed himself as amazed at the tremendous scenic effects that have been worked out, both on remote locations and in covered stages, for Metro's special feature production of "Big Game."

May Allison is starring in the screen version of "Big Game," which is from the legitimate stage play of the same title, by Willard Robertson and Kilbourn Gordon.

spired by sincerity. An immediate start can be made by every producer in eliminating those features in motion pictures which have provoked and merited public censure such as needless displays of nudity; the detailed portrayal of crime for the sake of being realistic and not merely for carrying forward the action of the play; scenes unduly emphasizing life in dance halls and cabarets; themes which deal with the question of sex in a morbid and licentious manner. The removal of such scenes will be the first step in an intelligent campaign against censorship."

Realart Explains Meaning of Franchise

"Many exhibitors misunderstood the word 'franchise' in the Realart campaign on their recent 'Realart franchise' campaign," states J. S. Woody, general manager of that company.

"How about this 'franchise' thing," wrote exhibitors. "Does that mean that you dictate to us what pictures we shall buy and what price we shall pay for them? Does it mean that we turn over the control and operation of our business to you in order to get your pictures?"

Mr. Woody explains that "the word franchise as applied to Realart means but one thing; a regular old-fashioned honest-to-goodness contract to exhibit thirty-six of the finest pictures ever recorded on celluloid.

"Just that—and only that.

"Realart doesn't own a single theatre, doesn't want to own a single theatre. We are producers and distributors and we intend to stick to our knitting.

"Our Franchise is just what it purports to be; a contract for our full year's output of pictures priced right. I can't say any more than that."

Grotesque Settings in Paramount Picture

"The Mill of the Half-gods" is the fantastic name of what Paramount declares is one of the most unique settings ever seen in a motion picture studio—a Parisian café which serves as the setting for one of the episodes of the Paramount picture, "White and Unmarried," starring Thomas Meighan, which is now being filmed at the Lasky studio under the direction of Tom Forman.

The setting is described to be quite grotesque and fanciful in construction and investiture, and is said to be a faithful reproduction of one of the notorious dance hall cafés in "the other half" of Paris. Just back of the space for dancing is a huge cauldron with colored flame effects lapping around its sides. In this cauldron sit the members of the orchestra, costumed as devils. The ceiling is low and there are many arches, giving the impression of a grotto.

Universal Film Plans Changes

Special Exploitation for Westerns and Short Subjects

IMPORTANT production changes are being projected in the Universal organization as the result of a recent investigation of the moving picture field by agents of Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, it is announced from the Universal headquarters in New York. Mr. H. M. Berman, general sales manager, who is in charge of the investigation, outlined several new Universal projects when seen upon his recent return from a gathering in Kansas City of Universal's Middle West managers.

Mr. Berman described one new departure in Universal production and sales methods. Hereafter, "Westerners" and short stuff made at Universal City will receive extra and special exploitation, some of it approximating the exploitation received by feature productions, it is declared.

"We feel in Universal that we stand at the forefront of Western and Short Stuff producers," said the sales manager. "It has been decided that Universal shall go to greater lengths to produce more and better one and two-reels. Already extra comedy and 'Western' units have been added at our West Coast studios.

"We now are going to supply exhibitors with more than one 'Western' every week—a choice of several good 'Westerns' every week. We also are going to help them sell these 'Westerns' to the public—by supplying more exploitation aids in the way of paper, press material and display lines, as well as by popularizing our 'Western' stars with the public directly.

"There is no company in the field today which can present a galaxy of 'Western' stars equal to those making one and two-reelers at Universal City. Our various units include one headed by Hoot Gibson, one by Art Acord, one by Jack Perrin and one by Leonard Clapman. Eileen Sedgwick also heads a 'Western' producing company. Other popular women leads are Louise Lorraine, Dorothy Woods, Gertrude Olmstead, Marcella Pershing and Dixie Lamont. Our 'Western' directors include Jacques Jaccard, Edward Kull, Al Russell, Edward Laemmle, William Craft and several others. William Lord Wright, an expert scenarist, is supervising our short reel productions.

"An exploitation drive of the same magnitude as that to open on 'Westerns,' will be conducted for our short comedies. Recent Universal-Century Comedies are as good as any short comedies now produced. This is not my opinion alone, but the opinion of countless exhibitors. The new two-reel Lyons and Moran Comedies promise equally as much, reports from Universal City indicate.

"Universal Star Comedies and the new series of animal comedies will complete our enlarged short stuff program. Will Beaudine, our new comedy director-in-chief, has produced several Dorothy Wolbert comedies, soon to be released, that Universal regards so highly, an unusual amount of attention will be devoted to their exploitation. Ward Hayes, also added as a comedy director, has created another new comedy unit at Universal City, with Billy Fletcher as the featured player. The new animal comedies will star Joe Martin, Universal's intelligent orang-outang. Harry Burns, assisted by A. G. Stecker, trainer, is in charge."

Mr. Berman added that the newly announced policy did not mean that there would be any let-up in the output of five-reel photoplays.

Goldwyn Books Big Chains

Closes Contracts with Loew, Black, Ascher, Stanley and Poli Circuits

GOLDWYN announces that it has just closed contracts with three more important chains of theatres for the showing of Goldwyn's recent productions, in addition to the contract recently entered into with the Poli Circuit calling for three and four day showings of six new Goldwyn's productions in theatres in New England and Pennsylvania. The three most recently concluded bookings are for the following eleven productions:

"Godless Men," Betty Compson in "Prisoners of Love," "A Voice in the Dark," Mabel Normand in "What Happened to Rosa," Madge Kennedy in "The Highest Bidder," Will Rogers in "Guile of Women," Gertrude Atherton's first original screen story, "Don't Neglect Your Wife," "The Concert," Will Rogers in "Boys Will Be Boys," "The Great Lover" and Jack Pickford in George Ade's "Just Out of College."

These pictures have all been booked in the Loew theatres for showings totaling several hundreds of days; in the Stanley Circuit embracing nearly all of the motion picture theatres of Philadelphia and the neighboring territory; and in twenty theatres of the Black Circuit covering the New England territory. Dates are now being arranged for all of these bookings— and also for the Poli Circuit bookings the contract for which was closed a short time ago.

The same group of Goldwyn pictures are booked solid on the Ascher circuit of theatres in Chicago and other Illinois towns and in contiguous territory in other states. They are also booked to play the Capitol theatre, New York; the California theatre, Los Angeles; and the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee.

"Double Adventure" Episode Due March 6

The Pathe serial, "Double Adventure," which is giving Charles Hutchison, the celebrated "stunt" man, the greatest opportunity of his career for registering daring feats, reaches one of its highest points of tensity in episode seven, "War in the Oil Fields," which is to be released March 6th. Towering oil wells were built for the scenes which is the setting for the fierce battle fought between the revolutionists and federals.

Strong Cast for Frederick

Experienced Supporting Cast Seen in "The Mistress of Shenstone"

A scene from "The Mistress of Shenstone," a Robertson-Cole special, in which Pauline Frederick is starred PAULINE FREDERICK, star of "The Mistress of Shenstone," Robertson-Cole super-special shortly to be released, in this picture is surrounded by a carefully selected cast. English types were needed to portray the characters of this attraction which is based on the novel of the same name written by Florence L. Barclay, noted English authoress.

Miss Frederick's leading man in "The Mistress of Shenstone" is Roy Stewart. In 1913 he broke into the motion picture game in a Western picture called "Trail of the Lonesome Star." Since that time he has appeared steadily in the pictures and has risen to the point where he plays nothing but male leads. Emmet King who has a considerable role in "Kismet," the famous Robertson-Cole super-special starring Otis Skinner, is another member of "The Mistress of Shenstone" cast.

Helen Wright who plays the part of Mrs. O'Mara in "The Mistress of Shenstone" has long been associated with leading players. Lydia Yeamans Titus is another member of the cast. Miss Titus has been an actress for forty years. She first won fame for her rendition of old English ballets and is known throughout England as the original "Sally" in "Sally In Our Alley." John Willink in "The Mistress of Shenstone" plays the role of a young English gentleman of leisure in the picture, and is seen chiefly in the togs of a tennis player. As a matter of fact Mr. Willink had been in America but four months at the time he was engaged to appear with Miss Frederick in "The Mistress of Shenstone."

Prospects for "Metro Week"

Drive for Feb. 27-March 5 Brings Rush of Bookings to Exchanges

WITH only a fortnight between now and Metro week, set for the period from February 27 to March 5, a rush of bookings for pictures of the big producing company to show during that time is reported from every one of the many Metro exchanges throughout the country.

The thousands of exhibitors scattered over the land have besieged the exchange managers for all available offerings, and many have requested that they be granted the privilege of showing two or three features during the period when the Metro pictures will be the sole offering of the houses.

The demand has exceeded even the generous expectations of the Metro officials, it is said, and it is estimated that so widespread is the interest and so great the enthusiasm manifested by the showmen that in every locality where there are motion pictures shown there will be houses observing Metro week.

In many of the theatres the exhibitors in order to give their patrans the benefit of the Metro pictures have booked several features which they plan to run immediately following those to be shown during the Metro week. Rather than curtail the time they wish to devote to the big features they have decided to exhibit the picture selected for the Metro week and then take the others in turn.

To aid the exhibitors in acquainting the public with the unusual opportunity offered during this national exhibition week, an extensive advertising campaign, which has been carefully arranged to reach every community in the United States and Canada, has been planned and will be sent broadcast previous to the beginning of the Metro week.

The many exchanges have been amply provided with extra supplies to aid the exhibitors in their advertising.

Pathe Review Inaugurates New Series

In Pathe Review No. 93, released March 6, an opportunity is afforded the lover of American beauty to view one of the chosen spots in America which inaugurates a new series in the screen magazine. Bushkill Falls in Monroe County, Pennsylvania, and the quiet beauties of the surrounding country, is readily accessible to the motor tourists, and no part of Pennsylvania can present a more exquisite picture than that seen along Bushkill Creek. The Falls are located on the "Lit-Bushkill," and the largest of the falls presents a picture of majestic grandeur.

Wanda Hawley as she appears in her latest Realart feature, "The Outside Woman"

"Lorna Doone" Tourneur's

Will Take All-American Cast to Film Scenes in English Locales

MAURICE TOURNEUR announces that he will start in the immediate future filming R. D. Blackmore's story, "Lorna Doone," and that he intends to take his entire company to Devonshire county in England to film the many thrilling scenes that are laid in that rugged valley which is still known as "The Death Valley of the Doones."

"The successful picture of the coming year," said Mr. Tourneur, "will undoubtedly be the intimate, human interest stories and the big spectacular productions. In 'Lorna Doone' I have found a happy combination of the two. It is a story that is ideally for the screen, and, although it will require a tremendous outlay, I am convinced that the results will more than warrant the expenditure and the effort that its production will require. The public are clamoring for bigger pictures than ever before. Mr. Griffith's 'Way Down East' and the foreign made production of 'Passion' are examples of what we must compete with.

"The Queen's Carnival of Roses, the rescue scenes during the great snowstorm and the great raid and fire scenes of this story lend themselves to the most spectacular form of presentation, while the delightful love story of Lorna and John can be compared with the great love stories of the world."

The designs for the costumes to be used in the production are already completed and a wardrobe department will soon be established for making the hundreds of costumes that will be required.

Mr. Tourneur has not definitely decided on his cast as yet, but they will all be American players, as many of the scenes will be made in this country before and after the trip to England.

New Willat Feature Ready

"Partners of the Tide" Will Be His Second Release via Hodkinson

MA. WILLAT, president of the Willat Productions, has arrived in the East with a print of his latest picture entitled "Partners of the Tide." This will be Irvin V. Willat's second independent production for release by the W. W. Hodkinson organization.

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation purpose to give "Partners of the Tide" are intensive nation-wide advertising and exploitation campaign, it is stated.

The next picture to be made by Willat Productions, Inc., will be "The Face of the World," by Johan Bojer.

Concerning the new Irvin Willat feature and the releasing arrangements made with the Hodkinson organization, C. A. Willat spoke as follows:

"In 'Partners of the Tide' we have given them a production which must undoubtedly prove one of the greatest box office attractions of the year. Irvin V. Willat's reputation was made over a long period of years but the greatest success with which his name has been associated in the past was 'Behind the Door,' a splendid story of the sea and its folk. He seems to be particularly at home when dealing with this type of production and it is safe to assert that never before has he achieved quite such splendid results as he has in 'Partners of the Tide.' 'Behind the Door' was a great picture; so, too, was 'Below the Surface,' another sea story which he directed, but 'Partners of the Tide' combines all of the splendidly appealing qualities of these two productions and goes far beyond them."

ABOUT DIRECTORS

JOHN S. ROBERTSON, whose special production of "Sentimental Tommy" will be released shortly, has completed work on his new picture, starring Constance Binney in "The Magic Cup." Mr. Robertson is now in the midst of cutting this picture, even while mentally mapping out plans for his next production, starring Elsie Ferguson in "Footlights," an adaptation by Josephine Lovett of Rita Weiman's Saturday Evening Post story.

You can have anything in the world sent to you by the big Chicago mail-order houses—except moving pictures of the plant.

Tod Browning desires atmospheric interior shots of the Sears, Montgomery, Roebuck, Ward plant (to play no favorite) for his forthcoming production of Edna Ferber's "Fanny Herself."

So he got a big mail-order catalog and looked for the headings "cinema," "film," "kinematograph," "movie," "pictures," or "screen"—but in vain. Tod Browning had to resort to personal courier. He handed Billy Fildew, his cinematographer a round-trip ticket to Windytown and packed him, his Bellanhowell and sixteen cans of raw film on board the limited. Fildew will also film outdoor stuff in the ice skating country of Wisconsin and Minnesota, and may even cross over to Canada for a drink of water. Who can tell?

Edward Jose, famed director whose memorable productions of "La Tosca," "Resurrection" and many commendable features, is to direct Alice Joyce in a Vitagraph production for which the cast is practically assembled, but the working title not yet announced.

Chet Withey and his company have returned from Palm Beach, Florida, where a number of gorgeous garden scenes were filmed for Salisbury Field's "Wedding Bells," the next Chet Withey production for Constance Talmadge. While at the Royal Poinciana, it was rumored that he would take pictures in the hotel. Many guests immediately volunteered their services, which brought a number of persons prominent in society and the arts into making their initial appearances on the screen. Mr. Withey wagers that a few of these celebrities, whose cooperation will always be remembered, will be recognized by audiences witnessing "Wedding Bells," soon to be ready for release.

Charles Maigne, Famous Players director, has completed work on his new Alice Brady picture, entitled "The Tower," which he wrote in collaboration with Samuel Merwin. The role portrayed by Miss Brady is one peculiarly suited to her personality, being that of a wealthy society girl with all the comforts of the world at hand, but who, for a' that, is the center of a dramatic storm. Mr. Maigne has selected a cast of well tried ability to support Miss Brady: Lawrence Wheat, Harry Benham, and George Fawcett.

Jewel Claire, to appear in the first two reel subject of a series, adapted from Life Magazine, under the direction of Ashley Miller.

"The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," internationally famous novel of Vincente Blasco Ibanez, the screen version of which was directed by Rex Ingram for Metro Pictures Corporation, according to June Mathis, who adapted the story for the screen, had a new effect upon the big cast which took part in staging the colossal production.

Immediately upon completion of the picturization, the director and the scenarist brought the first print to New York for presentation to Metro officials. Refusing to accept a well earned vacation, Miss Mathis scorned the enticements of Broadway and went resolutely to work in her former office of the Metro eastern studios, as the head of the scenario department, where, in connection with Director Maxwell Karger, she is preparing scripts for forthcoming pictures for Bert Lytell.

"In the many productions I have prepared for the screen," said Miss Mathis "never in my experience have I seen such an influence exerted upon those taking part as in the wonderful story of "the Four Horsemen." During the months the big cast was together working upon the numerous scenes they developed a spirit of camaraderie and helpfulness that was simply marvelous. It really appeared to be almost a hypnotic influence for helpfulness that the atmosphere of the story created."

For the third time William D. Taylor was elected director of the Motion Picture Directors' Association when the Los Angeles lodge elected officers February 10th for its sixth year of existence.

The other officers for 1921 are: Henry King, assistant director; Wallace Worsley, technical director; Roy Clements, scenarist, and Norval MacGregor, treasurer.

Ground will be broken for the $200,000 clubhouse before March, the building committee reported in conjunction with the receipt of a charter for the Motion Picture Directors' Building Corporation, of which Ben Wilson, Joseph De Grasse, Frank Lloyd, Roy Clements, Reginald Barker and Wallace Worsley comprise the board of directors. The latter two fill vacancies left by retirement of William Duncan and Thomas Rickets.

Recognizing the need of immediate and united action on the part of the motion picture industry to fight menaces of censorship and blue laws, the Motion Picture Directors Association through its new director has taken the first steps toward forming a central committee of film organizations.

Seventeen organizations representing different phases of producing, distributing and exhibiting motion pictures, have been invited to send one representative each, to a meeting to be held in Los Angeles at the Athletic Club on February 28, to affiliate for the purpose of "protecting ourselves from all enemies, and of furthering our common interests."

"It is regrettable to note that some factions are quarreling with each other at a time of peril when paid reformers with millions of dollars behind them are preparing to come over the top from the opposite trenches" comments Mr. Taylor in his letter which was sent Association, New York lodge, Moto the following organizations:

The Motion Picture Directors tion Picture Producers Association, Motion Picture Art Directors Association, Assistant Directors Association, the American Society of Cinematographers, the Society of Illuminating Engineers, The Screen Writer's Guild, the Western Motion Picture Advertisers, the Photoplayers' Equity Association, the Actor's Equity Association, the Actor's Association of Los Angeles, the Los Angeles Film Exchange, the Theatre Owners' Association, the Los Angeles Theatre Association, the Motion Picture Operators' Union, the Ethical Motion Picture Society of America and the Girls' Studio Club.

Bobby Agnew, to be seen in "The Passion Flower", and who will be seen in the masculine role of "The Sign on the Door", both starring Norma Talmadge.

J. P. McGowan, commander of Universal Expeditionary Forces has returned from his latest overseas jaunt with the makings of another snappy serial. The well known director went to Cuba to make the principal episodes for "The Seal of Satan," a serial in which Eddie Polo is starring.

The concluding sequences are being filmed now at Universal City.

A year ago McGowan took Eddie Polo and a Universal company to Europe where he put on a big international serial.

ABOUT PLAYERS

CHARLES LANE, who indicated his versatility in the widely different roles played in "Wanted, a Husband," "Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde," and "The Restless Sex," is said to prove, satisfactorily, that as a leading man he scores, the illustration being his splendid performance in 'Without Limit," the George D. Baker production, made under the working title of "Temple Dusk."

Virginia Valli, opposite Bert Lytell in his forthcoming Metro production, "The Man Who," plays the part of an art student and it is of interest to note that in the film she is a student at the same art school where she actually studied during her early days on the screen. When she first came to New York, Miss Valli had sufficient time to devote some of it to the art work which she had been keeping up of her own accord because of her personal interest in illustrating. In "The Man Who," Miss Valli plays the part of a wealthy girl studying art and attending class at the Art Students League at 57th Street where she was herself a student some time ago. In the plot of the photoplay Lucy Cotton plays the role of the girl who throws over Bert Lytell because he has not done anything of consequence; Virginia Valli soothes his bruised spirits and it is she with whom Lytell shares the final fade-out.

One of the interesting incidents in the story is supposed to show Virginia Valli walking barefoot up Fifth Avenue—with the present wintry weather it has been decided to bring the company down South where these scenes will be taken in one of the Florida cities.

"The Man Who" has been adapted from a story which recently ran in the Saturday Evening Post; the scenario is prepared by June Mathis.

The public schools of New York City are enlarging their showing of motion pictures to include film stories as well as strictly educational films. In this connection Rowland Rogers, chairman of the curriculum committee which selects the films for use in the public schools takes Charles Ray as an example of a screen actor who combines character development and entertainment in his picture-plays. Mr. Rowland says:

"I believe that Ray's greatest charm lies in the fact that in watching him on the screen most people can imagine that they see a reflection of themselves. He does the natural things that everybody does or has done, and in such a natural way that it is difficult to realize that he is doing them for exhibition purposes. This is the secret of a consummate art in acting."

It will be an ultra-modern Camille who will be seen in Nazimova's forthcoming special Metro production of Alexander Dumas' immortal love story.

All of the picturesque settings for the action of the production reveal the very last word in present day luxury. The gowns worn by Nazimova and members of her supporting company all are the product of the combined ingenuity of star and artist.

One of the bizarre settings that will be seen in this production is an almost circular boudoir quite different from anything seen in the Paris of Dumas' day. The bed, a unique object in the room, also is circular. An overhanging circular canopy drops down over the bed, giving a basket-like effect.

Another original idea was carried out in the designing of the fireplace, which resembles a huge bowl. A long curved piece of glass extends from the mantel upwards, enabling a person standing by the fire to watch the flames and smoke ascend.

Many of the hangings and draperies were imported from Paris by Nazimova herself—some have adorned her own home. All the furnishing of the boudoir and adjacent alcoves are being especially constructed for the famous actress for use in the production.

The cast for "Camille" includes, besides Nazimova, Rudolph Valentino, who will enact the part of Armand, the romantic lover; Rex Cherryman, Arthur Hoyt, Zeffie Tilbury, Ruth Miller and Consuelo Flowerton. Ray Smallwood, who directed Nazimova's three most recent productions for Metro, also will direct "Camille."

Following the completion of "Penny of Tophill Trail," Bessie Love is commencing the assembling of a cast for her fourth Andrew J. Callaghan production. The star has been reading manuscripts for several weeks and has finally selected a charming story with a leading part especially suited to her whimsical style. An interesting feature of Miss Love's production plans for the future include a picturization of "The Old Curiosity Shop" to be made in London. The star has long looked forward to doing this story and will play the part of Little Nell.

Catharine Calvert, whose work in the pre-released 'The Heart of Maryland," a Tom Terriss production, excels her performance in "Dead Men Tell No Tales," is spending her time absent from the Vitagraph studio to advantage and replenishing her personal wardrobe as well as making preparations to select the needed feminine apparel for "The Great Divide," in which she will play a leading role.

Mayme Krasne, whom fifty thousand votes denominated the most popular young business woman in Omaha, Nebraska, will be the guest of Violet Dana in Hollywood in the near future, according to the rule and reward of a contest recently held in that city under the auspices of the Omaha Daily News, the Sun theatre and the Metro exchange there.

This voting contest, begun two weeks ago and continuing through the week's showing of the recent Viola Dana special production, "Blackmail," at the Sun, polled a total of 166,000 votes. This sum is interesting in that only a few days ago it was noted that the city of Omaha had passed the 200,000 mark in popularity. According to these figures, four out of every five persons in two engaged in electing the fortunate business woman who is to be Miss Dana's guest.

The young lady whose cheery personality won her such a large gathering of friends, is employed in the Central Market of that western city and is known to a large percentage of Omaha's population. During the contest over 166,000 votes were cast.

In accordance with the rules of the contest Miss Krasne will be given a free trip to Hollywood.

Mary Alden, of the Goldwyn players, is noted for being a raconteuse. Her latest story is about a Swede who went into the post-office of a village in the Canadian wilds and said he wanted a letter from Minnesota and that his name was Ole Oleson. When the postmistress said there were ten letters for Ole Oleson in her possession but that there were already several men by that name in the village and that the newcomer would have to be identified, he shuffled out of the office, saying in disgust, 'A' tank a batter change my name—to Yonny Yohnson, mebbe."

Completely exhausted as a result of two weeks of strenuous work spent in filming snow scenes for "Uncharted Seas" in and about Flagstaff, Arizona, Alice Lake and her company have returned to the Metro studios in Hollywood, where the final episode of this production will be filmed just as soon as they recuperate from the trip.

Miss Lake is suffering with a cold and a badly sprained ankle. Director Wesley Ruggles, who has a cracked rib which resulted from a fall on the ice, is under the care of a physician. Many other members of the company are nursing bruises and sprains.

Gloria Hope, heretofore seen as a leading woman for Charles Ray, Jack Pickford and other screen favorites, plays opposite Mayo in Colorado.

Among the important firr which are represented by Lei Lewis is the George Clark Produ tions, starring Ivy Duke and G Newall, and which are distribut in this country through Stoll.

Landy and Turnbull's represe tation of the George Clark Pr ductions in the United States mar the first contract made by any fo eign producers for consistent pu licity in this country, and sho an admirable desire on the part this organization to boost t "hands across the sea" spirit. addition to representing Geor Clark Productions, Landy a Turnbull have also contracted establish an international publici service with Leila Lewis in En land, and will soon announce t third link in their chain of intern tional representation which will located in Paris.

The Author's Mission

"It seems inevitable to me th the entry of the eminent author in motion pictures will effect a fu damental change in them. I s will, but I might say has, becau already the influence of the writ is apparent in the majority of t year's most successful productior states Govnerneur Morris.

"And I might, speaking from entirely impartial point of vie for though Mr. Goldwyn led t movement for bigger authors, oth producers have followed hi closely, run through a list of then 'Humoresque,' 'Earthboun 'Scratch My Back'—I might go indefinitely. There is one big for backing them all. They all have thought behind them, solve a pro lem of pressing interest to the d or portray some deep, underlyi motif of humanity.

"I believe that it is only by ge ting down to fundamentals th we will ever actually reach t mass of the people because th are fundamental, and I believe th it is given only to a few to stri the right notes, and that those fe are the big authors that wou never have been big otherwise.

"The elimination then of t superficial picture, the establis ment of the picture with a thoug element that will reach the masse the subsequent education of t masses—that, I believe, is the mi sion of the author in the phot play world."

Hart's Latest Picture Sets New Record

PARAMOUNT, in a statement issued from the home office, states that William S. Hart in "O'Malley of the Mounted" at the New York Rivoli last week exceeded the receipts of "The Testing Block," the previous Hart record holder at that theatre, by $5,037. Starting with "The Toll Gate," Mr. Hart's first independent production for Paramount, each Hart picture shown at the Rivoli has exceeded the record of its predecessor by a comfortable margin, but the excess of receipts from "O'Malley of the Mounted" over those from "The Testing Block" represents the biggest gain of all, it is stated.

Ella Shields Offered Movie Contract

Miss Ella Shields who is headlining the Keith's theatres in New York City at the present time has been approached by the Robert Russell Productions, Inc., with a proposition to appear in motion pictures featuring her in the male characters made famous by her both in this country and abroad. If satisfactory arrangements regarding her contracts on the other side which have until 1925 to run can be brought about Miss Shields will consider the proposition, it is stated.

Sol Lesser says that he will not be satisfied until 80 per cent of the population of Los Angeles sees "The Kid," which causes the question of what censorship report Sol is going to take, for there is a difference of 100,000 between the Federal report and our Chamber of Commerce's report.

We recommend this prescrip tion for all directors to try on their "emotographs" or what ever you call them.

F. Dick Jones took a troupe of Sennett bathing girls to Truckee and the train failed to stop and pick them up at a snow location six miles away, so they walked a mile, and then another engineer saw them and stopped his old train and in a gentlemanly and courteous manner asked the ladies to ride. Incidentally, it may be added, the scenes made were for "Heartbaum," Sennett's first romantic comedy.

Charlie Murray, to quote the eminent tragedian of Sennett gloom-killers, who has been bruised daily for lo these many years, is to forsook the flickering tintype and tread the boards of vaudeville for a time. We predict that Charlie will come back to us for we need him.

NEW ORLEANS

A bunch of wealthy and influential men who live on what they consider "exclusive" St. Charles Avenue in New Orleans are sitting up nights now and have been for a week trying to figure out a way to keep George Kaufman, a drug store proprietor, from putting up a motion picture theatre next door to his drug establishment, and which would front on the avenue.

Several months ago an undertaking firm tried to establish a place of business and this same group of men succeeded in thwarting the plans. This time it looks like Mr. Kaufman will either have to give up his idea of having a picture show fronting on the avenue or have no front to it. Saturday an assistant city attorney managed to find an ordinance covering the situation and which he says forbids motion picture theatres from operating in a district specified by the ordinance.

The group of men, in a petition to the city commissioners, brand the proposed picture show a nuisance and say it would commercialize the beautiful residence section.

Coincident with an announcement by the Family theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, that admission prices for the house would be reduced to pre-war level starting with the week of February 14, came the declaration that the attraction during the first half of the same week would be the British feature, "A Dead Certainty," which is released in Canada by the Anglo-Canadian Picture Plays, Limited, through the Horsfall Productions, Limited, Toronto, Montreal and St. John. Conover of the Imperial theatre, one of the finest of the downtown houses in Montreal, was "Her Son," in which Violet Hopson and Stewart Rome are featured. He was later identified with other theatrical ventures in that city.

For many years he controlled the bill posting concessions in that city and vicinity. For more than 35 years he was manager of the Loomer Opera House in that city, scene of motion picture and similar productions, one of the best known playhouses in eastern Connecticut. It is an attractive and modern playhouse, built by the late Arthur P. Dorman. Mr. Pouzzner plans to continue the Empire theatre at New London, notwithstanding the fact that the theatre building was recently sold by Moran Brothers to H. Schwartz. It is reported that an unsuccessful effort has been made to have Mr. Pouzzner vacate the Empire by the new owners but he has a lease that does not expire until October, 1922, and he claims that he has an option to renew the lease or an option to buy the property, entered into prior to the sale by Moran Brothers. John R. Pickett will be retained as manager of the Gem.

The Lyric theatre building at Westerly, R. I., was damaged by fire on Monday afternoon. A panic among the 300 people which comprised the audience was averted by the presence of mind of Frank Blosser, the operator, who after discovering the location of the fire over the metal ceiling of the theatre addressed the audience and asked them to file out quietly not revealing to them the reason for his request. The exodus of the audience was accomplished in an orderly manner, it is stated. The damage, most of which was done by water, is estimated at $20,000.

The picture was kept over for an indefinite run at the West End Lyric. The Strand theatre in the business district will take the production on for another indefinite run following the Lyric's release of the picture.

Rumors which have been persistent about this city to the effect that the S. A. Lynch interests of the south were negotiating for the taking over of the local holdings of the Missouri Corporation of the Famous Players were denied emphatically by John C. Flynn, who has been sent from executive offices in New York for a brief stay with the St. Louis headquarters. Music-Tax Statement by Officer of Publishers' Association

Seeks to Explain Reason for Fee Charged for Playing of Taxed Music

WITH a view to explaining just what is behind the present advertising campaign of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, in connection with the tax charged exhibitors for performing rights in copyrighted music, the following statement has been issued by E. C. Mills, chairman of the executive board of the Music Publishers' Protective Association, a majority of the members of which are also declared to be members of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers:

"The campaign now running in the trade press by the society," states Mr. Mills, "has for its principal object informing the exhibitor not only as to the rights of the society, but his own as well.

"In the past the society has been accused of haling the exhibitor into court for a violation of copyright law, without first giving him a chance to 'know what it's all about,' and while this is not a fact, in every case the exhibitor individually has had every opportunity to inform himself before being served, through individual notices served upon him, we are going to explain tell him the whole story.

"It should be understood that the tax or license fee charged for the public performance, for profit, of copyrighted music, is an entirely different charge; that it is based upon one of the oldest and best settled principles of law written into the statutes. It is so fair and right that in no other field of endeavor is it disputed.

"For instance——when a phonograph manufacturer makes a record reproducing copyrighted music he pays a royalty of two cents upon every reproduction thereof he makes, to the owner of the copyright. He uses the copyrighted music for purposes of profit; the originator of the material is entitled to share in that profit.

"The manufacturer of a player piano roll likewise pays a royalty, ranging from two cents to twelve cents per roll, for each and every reproduction of a copyrighted composition, and there is no debate as to the justice and propriety of paying the royalty.

"The exhibitor pays royalties on practically every photoplay he presents, not directly, it is true, but the charges are included by the producer in the rental charge of the film, for the producer has to pay them to the author of the story.

"The principle of the right of the creator of original material, literary or musical, to share in all the profits thereof, is established beyond debate, and any thought or hope that the law establishing this right may be repealed is outside the bounds of probability.

"I have heard but one argument advanced as justifying the exhibitor in combating the payment of this tax, and that is that through playing the music in his theatre it becomes popular, and thus a sale for the published copies is created. It is true that playing the music in a theatre helps popularize it—there is no question of that; so also does playing it on phonograph records, player rolls, in homes, singing by vaudeville artists, etc., etc., but we do not concede that royalties should be waived in the latter instances; why should we in the case of motion pictures theatres especially?

"Producers of musical comedies, one of the most potent forms of popularizing music, pay enormous royalties to composers and authors for the performing rights to these shows; why should the exhibitor not pay royalties for the public performance of music—almost as potent a factor in his entertainment as the film itself?

"Some exhibitors have held the publishers responsible for the collection of this license fee, and sought to punish him commercially by instructing orchestras not to play any music of publishers belonging to the Society.

"It might interest these exhibitors to know that the publisher has actually no option in the matter; if he does not collect the performing rights license fees, his writers simply reserve, when placing for publication, performing rights, and will collect them themselves. The composers and authors do not propose to be deprived of this portion of their just revenue simply because of the timidity of a publisher, or the unwillingness of an exhibitor to recognize their rights.

"Illustrating this, it should be pointed out that until recently several of the more important publishers did not belong to the Society and the authors and composers, in protest against the publisher thus forfeiting part of the income due the author and composer, formed the Composers and Lyric Writers' Protective League, proposed affiliation with the American Federation of Labor, and would most certainly have collected their own performing right fees had the Society not brought into its ranks the important publishers who were not members.

"Through the Society, it is possible for the exhibitor, by the payment of a reasonable license fee, to have available for his patrons, all published music. Contrast this with the condition that would exist if there were no Society, and the exhibitor were forced to secure individual licenses from individual concerns, authors, composers and publishers. The confusion would be endless and very costly.

"Some mistaken exhibitors' organization men have held out the hope that the law of copyright might be revoked. There is no more chance of this than there is of the Patent Law, based upon the same principle, being revoked. Copyright is a property right, just the same as patent right, and the owner of property has a right to charge for its use, and in the case of the composers and authors, this right will not be waived.

"Now let's tell the exhibitor just what his rights are—we have thus far talked only of our own. We are just as interested in his. The exhibitor may avoid the payment of license fees entirely by having his orchestra play exclusively music which is not copyrighted by members of the Society, or which is not copyrighted at all, or upon which the copyright has expired. In the first case we refer to music of course published by non-members of the Society, of which there are still a few. No one can tell, however, how long this music may be played free of tax, for the non-members may become members at any time; or their writers may cease submitting material to them, and instead place it with members, so as to participate in the revenue from this source.

"In the second case, non-copyright music is that which has either never been copyrighted in the United States, or upon which copyright rights are specifically waived by notice to that effect printed upon the music; and in the third case we refer to music originally copyrighted, but upon which the copyright has expired; the old, old airs.

"The exhibitor willing to confine his musical program to this sort of music, need pay no tax nor license fees. He should, however, be careful that his orchestra strictly confine itself to the non-taxable music, as playing the taxable music a single time lays him open to a penalty greater than ten years of license fees for the largest theatre in the world would amount to.

"The license fee is ten cents per seat per year, at present, and licenses are available now, for long periods, at that rate, insuring the exhibitor against any increase, if he contracts now for his license. It amounts to $100 per year for a thousand seat house; it may be paid in quarterly installments if the exhibitor prefers. For this fee, there is made available for his use all music that is published.

"He may save this paltry fee and deny his patrons the "hits," the ruling popular music of the day; or he may pay the fee and make of music the feature that is made of it in the leading photoplay houses of America, all of which hold licenses. In fact there are thousands of theatres now licensed, and this is but one of the reasons why it is unfair not to insist that all that play copyrighted music, controlled by the Society, should be licensed. It is obviously unfair to charge one and not another.

"In conclusion, we would urge the exhibitor to consult his own attorney, his own interests first, and we wish frankly to warn him, in the most friendliest spirit, that our inspectors now in the field will check up non-licensed theatres, and in every case where copyrights are infringed will institute actions in the Federal courts. The law, which has been upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States, provides a minimum penalty of $250 and a maximum of $5,000, and considers each and every public performance of a copyright composition, a separate offense.

"All we require is that the exhibitor stay within the law; we shall protect our rights, and we hope that he will be careful to protect his."

Johnny Hines Back at Work in Studio

As the result of the personal appearance of Johnny Hines, star in the Torchy Comedies, made from the stories by Sewell Ford, in Cleveland, Cincinnati and Pittsburgh districts, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., has received many requests from exhibitors in various sections asking that the star be sent to their territories. This request could not be granted at this time, since Hines was compelled to return to New York to complete work on the tenth and last comedy under the present contract, and to start work immediately afterward on the first under the new contract which calls for the delivery of one picture each month.

"Torchy's Night Hood" is the current release, and this will be followed by "Torchy's Big Lead." The title for the tenth picture has not been selected.

Hudson Bay Travelogue Rouses Interest

Some of the most striking newspaper notices ever accorded a single-reel picture are being given the first of the Hudson's Bay Travel Series of four, "A Tale of the Fur North." Pre-release showings of this were held at the Kinema in Los Angeles and the Washington in Detroit. In both cities the dailies called attention to the unusual character of the pictures and the vast trouble and expense that they must have involved.

May Allison to Appear in "Dated" Next

"Dated," a story from the pen of Maxwell Smith, which aroused wide interest when published in the Saturday Evening Post, will be produced by Metro with May Allison in the principal role.

Filming of the picture will be started at once by Bayard Veiller, chief of productions at the company West Coast studios, with a strong supporting company.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the last sixteen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to November 6, 1920.

e principal entrance is situated on ford Place at the end nearest Broad t, where one enters under a beauti- arquise, a large open loggia, built of ely modeled cream terra cotta, and namental ribbed and groined ceiling, ng three large lunette panels, which lled with beautiful mural paintings eatrical subjects, done in wonderful color on canvas by one of the greatest mural painters in the country.

The floor is of natural tone, hand made antique herringbone tile with faience border. The ticket booths located here will be constructed of marble, bronze and leaded glass.

From this open loggia the entrance is through bronze doors into a large commodious lobby 125 feet long by 16 feet wide, having a beautiful panelled floor of faience and campagna mosaic tile, marble base wainscot and pilasters, with richly decorated plaster panels, and an elaborately beamed ceiling treated in gold leaf.

This great lobby is designed as a lounge for patrons and from it one enters through bronze doors to the main foyer of the theatre. A magnificent staircase leads to the mezzanine promenade and lounging room and thence through wide vomitories to the loggia boxes and lower level gallery seats.

The Nutria Street entrance faces Market Street at the angle of Nutria Street. It consists of an open loggia treated in rare marbles, mural decorations, campagna mosaic tile floor and coffered ceiling in gold effects. Another ticket booth is located in this loggia, designed to harmonize with the surrounding decorations.

From the loggia one enters a large lobby with campagna mosaic floor, marble wainscot, richly panelled and elaborately decorated ceiling. A portion of this lobby is to be assigned to candy, cigars, and other concessions for the convenience of patrons. From this lobby one enters the main theatre foyer.

The foyer is elaborately decorated with marble standing rail, pilasters and panel work, interspaced with plate glass mirrors, two beautiful faience drinking fountains mounted on marble panels, and a marble niche in which will stand a wonderful piece of Carrara marble statuary.

From this foyer near the Nutria Street entrance a broad marble stairway leads to the mezzanine and loggia boxes.

Independent exits are provided both to Branford Place and Nutria Street to alleviate congestion, and are so arranged that patrons leaving the theatre will not crowd those entering.

A check room and house manager's office open from the main foyer.

The mezzanine promenade, approached by two grand stairways, measures 100 feet in length by 25 feet in width and is elaborately decorated with an elliptical domed ceiling, and panelled and pilastered sidewalls in plaster.

A large well protected by a marble balustered railing gives a glimpse of the main foyer below. From this promenade opens the men's smoking room, done, floor and side walls, in campagna mosaic tile with faience panels, and through which the men's toilet is reached, all in white tile; the ladies' room, 25 feet square, is exquisitely decorated with marble wainscot and plaster relief, treated in delicate shades becoming the most esthetic taste. From this room opens the ladies' toilet, all done in beautiful white tile.

Faience drinking fountains are provided in both the men's smoking and ladies' rooms, as well as two in the main foyer. All are supplied with a constant flow of pure filtered ice water.

The manager's suite of offices, check rooms, and an emergency hospital room, fully equipped, where a trained nurse is always in attendance, opens from this promenade.

On the second mezzanine the employees' locker rooms and toilets, as well as a large storage room, are located. Stairways at both sides of theatre lead from the promenade to this level and from them the upper half of the gallery is reached through commodious vomitories.

The auditorium is fan shaped, narrowing as it nears the stage proscenium. It is 165 feet long by 105 feet wide and 60 feet in height and seats 2,000. It is elaborately decorated with ornamental plaster. The ceiling is elliptical in shape, with one large central and four smaller dish domes.

The gallery is of the flat type with three rows of loggia boxes at the front and two crossovers, with a seating capacity of about 1,200. The floor pitches of the auditorium, the gallery pitch, and the seat radii have been all carefully studied so that every patron, no matter in what part of the house, naturally focuses his sight on the center of the screen. Seats are very wide and rows spaced further apart than is usual. The seat and back of each chair is beautifully upholstered in Spanish leather, and every provision has been made for the luxurious comfort of patrons.

The stage has a proscenium arch 45 feet wide, 42 feet high, and is especially designed for motion pictures, with a small secondary stage for singing or other novelties. It has a semi-permanent set with a large orchestra platform raised slightly above the auditorium floor level and enclosed by a balustered railing. The permanent set has a colonnade effect, elliptical in shape, both in plain and coffered ceiling, with a large central screen opening, and two smaller openings at each side, in which magnificent silk plush curtains are hung. Back of these curtains, changeable sets are arranged so that the proper atmosphere may be given to harmonize with the tone or feeling of each individual picture.

The Construction of the building is absolutely fireproof in every detail. Built with steel frame, brick enclosure walls, hollow tile partitions, reinforced concrete floor, all metal doors, sash and trim, metal furring and lathing; in fact not a piece of wood is used anywhere in the building.

The elliptical mezzanine foyer at the Branford

The exterior walls are double with air space between, protecting the interior fully from climatic changes. The gallery is of the cantilever type supported on an immense steel lattice girder spanning the entire width of the building, 110 feet. There are no obstructing columns in any part of the auditorium.

The exterior is built of cream glazed terra cotta and soft yellowish gray rough texture face brick, panelled in fancy bonds; which with the delicately modeled terra cotta, all designed in the Francis 1st style, gives it a quiet and dignified charm.

The open loggia is designed to harmonize in the same style. The great lobby is simple, rich, and dignified in design, forming a transition to the elaborate Adam style carried throughout the entire interior of the structure.

The decorations are all done in old ivory and golden tones. The five ceiling dishes are treated with lacquered aluminum leaf; the relief work is brought out with old blue and orange backgrounds, while the main cornice frieze and proscenium arch are of old ivory relief on a gold leaf background.

The main auditorium sidewall panels are of gold leaf, on which are painted black figured silhouette in theatrical designs; mural panels in strong conventional colors are distributed throughout the lobbies and mezzanine, lending a charm to the whole scheme. It is, undoubtedly, the most beautifully decorated theatre in the city, and gives one the impression of dignity and refined tastet seldom attained in theatre decoration.

An intercommunicating telephone system connects all departments of the theatre, and public telephones are provided in the foyer and promenade for the co ience of patrons.

A vasuum cleaning system has bee stalled reaching all parts of the bui Care has been used in the selection o terials, so that perfect sanitary cond may be maintained at all times.

Great care has been given to the de ing of the heating and ventilating sy providing an adequate and constant ply of clean, fresh air to all parts o providing an adequate and constant building at all times, properly heat winter and cooled in summer. The tem is of the indirect type. Four boilers are located in the basement the Nutria Street entrance. The fresh air is sucked in from the roof and conducted by the use immense "Buffalo Forge" fan th the radiators, which heat it to the p temperature. Selecting a Site for Motion Pictur Theatre

An Architect Tells You Clearly the Various Points to Consider

A lot with only one street frontage is not advisable, except for very small houses. The very stringent building laws requiring courts or passages on both sides so condense the site, that, unless it is very wide, but little space is left for seating capacity. As for example, if a lot 50 feet wide was available, with but one front on a street, a theatre to accommodate 1,400 people would have to have courts at least eight feet in width (according to the Dallas Code) on each side; thus reducing the street front to 34 feet. Assuming 900 people on the orchestra floor and 500 in a single balcony, and allowing 25 feet in depth into the auditorium for lobby and auditorium approximately 175 feet long; resulting in a telescopic appearance, to say nothing of projection length and sight lines.

THE success or failure of a theatre is dependent to a great extent on its location. In the article on this page a well-known architect explains why this is so.

Of importance in site selection, is the natural grades or slopes of the site.

Excavation is exceedingly expensive work, involving as it does possibly blasting in rock, waterproofing, retaining walls, shoring and other engineering problems. The auditorium floor must, of necessity, slope towards the orchestra pit and screen, and in a theatre with an auditorium 80 feet long, this slope should show a m imum of six feet and six inches, betw the low level at the front row and the l at the last row of seats, increasing r rapidly in height with the greater de of the auditorium, depending on s lines. Since steps are not allowed theatre entrances, and but a small sl or pitch is permitted from the last row seats at the back of the auditorium to entrance doors, it must be apparent at o that any site having natural grade pitch from the entrance up towards the scr end, would be very undesirable, while reverse, pitching from the entrance do towards the screen end would be exce ingly advantageous. Basements trenches for heating and ventilating du constitute the largest portion of excav ing work, and are generally placed at stage end of the building. An argumen favor of the arcade system of enterin theatre, which occurs on a fairly le site, (level sites being the rule rather t the exception), is that the deeper the cade, the greater possibility for a sl from the auditorium to the street, sc what after the method of a ramp used in railroad stations to take people from one level to another. This brings the rear portion of the auditorium well above grade level and reduces to a minimum the amount of excavating necessary. Plates No. 2, 3 and 4.

How to Select Theatre Site

In order to overcome particularly bad grade conditions, theatres have been designed to bring the public in on a mezzanine floor, and then down stairways to the auditorium. This condition could only occur in a very hilly city, and the selection of such a site would depend on the owner's opinion of his patronages' willingness to enter and leave the building by the use of stairways. It is not a site to be recommended.

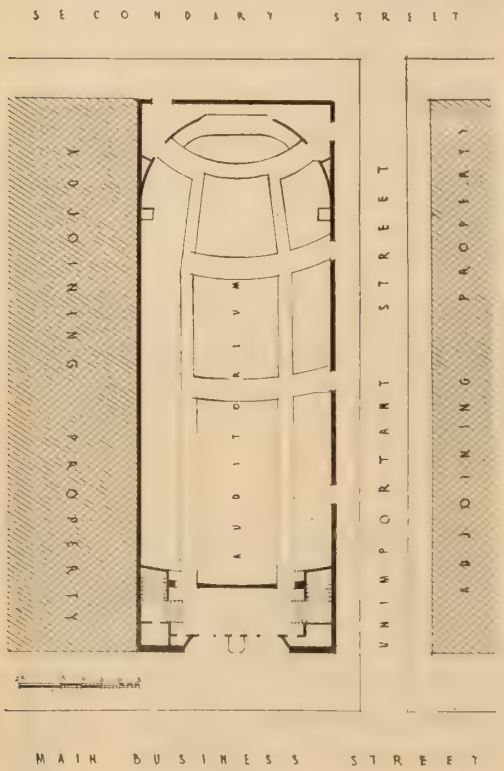

PLATE NO. 5

"Results in an unsightly side facade on a busy street."

From the standpoint of economical construction, excellent sight lines and general practicability, a site for a Motion Picture Theatre, without stores or arcade, to accommodate 1,200 to 2,000 people, would be a lot 65 feet to 75 feet wide, and 110 feet to 140 feet deep. If it is intended to supplement the pictures with vaudeville or voice soloists, the auditorium should not exceed 85 feet in depth between the first and last rows of seats, securing additional seating capacity in width. The limitations of the carrying capacities of the human voice, are responsible for the 85 feet.

No hard and fast rules for sizes of sites can govern, as some excellent theatres have been developed from unusual shapes. This phase is technical and unusual shaped lots should never be considered until a thoroughly trained Architect, familiar with all the problems of a Motion Picture Theatre, has been consulted, and his opinion obtained as to the site's possibilities for development.

The importance of consulting an Architect, cannot be too strongly impressed. If it is an Owner's first venture into the moving picture field, go slowly. Investigate the Architects in your city, and find out who has specialized on this type of building. If the city hasn't a Specialist, go somewhere else where you can procure one. Civic pride and willingness to patronize local ability is splendid, but it won't pay your loss if your theatre is badly located, planned and designed. Suppose you were offered an opportunity to buy a diamond from a stranger on the street. You wanted that diamond as an investment. If you did not know diamond values you would take it to a reputable jeweler for appraisal, pay for that service, and if he told you not to purchase the jewel, you would consider the appraisal charge well spent. Consider the Architect in the same light. He will charge you for his services, the same as the expert appraiser would, but if through his technical and practical knowledge he shows you that your contemplated site cannot be made to pay, due to the building laws or construction difficulties, you have saved many times the Architectural fee.

The successful Architect today keeps touch with realty values and gladly gi a client the benefit of that knowledge. is in constant touch with tendencies shift the business center due to cong tion. That is important to know. might know of a contemplated 2,500 s theatre just adjoining yours, in which y planned to seat 600. You are under obligations to the Architect to proce with your building, any more than y would be to a surgeon to whom you h gone for a consultation. The surge might tell you you were not in need that operation you thought necessary, a later would send you a bill, not for co sultation and operation, but for consul tion only; so with the Architect.

In conclusion, some final comments pictures as they relate to site selectio Some producing companies exhibit th pictures in their own theatres, thereby a suring themselves first runs for exclusi showings. Other producing and distribu ing companies rent their products franchise plans and usually this franchi is owned by some exhibitor already sho ing them and with a long time contract reserve. The prospective theatre own new to the field of exhibiting, should fi out what pictures he can secure. The e change men will gladly consult with y and the trade papers will give you a go idea of how theatres in other cities a receiving and patronizing any produci company's releases.

ing system which is complete in every detail; a combination of direct and indirect lighting. The indirect lighting is distributed back of the main cornice of the auditorium; around the large central dish dome in the ceiling; around the proscenium arch; above the main cornice of the stationary set at the stage; and back of the main cornice in the loggia. Two banks of footlights are provided at each of the two stage levels. The balance of the lighting is accomplished by the use of beautiful massive chandeliers and a large number of sidewall fixtures.

A quadruple system of wiring has been installed, making it possible to use lamps in four colors. This whole system is connected to an immense switchboard, mounted on a platform at the right and back of the picture screen. On this switchboard are mounted over seventy dimmers, individually controlled, or collectively by one master dimmer. By this arrangement an innumerable number of charming light effects may be obtained.

To avoid the use of oil or gas exit and emergency lights, a large storage battery set has been installed, providing an independent source of current supply in case of trouble with the general lighting.

The sign lighting is controlled from an independent switchboard and several other switchboards have been located at different points in the building, intercommunicating with the main switchboard, making the entire system most flexible in every detail. Step lights are provided for all gallery aisles.

The projection booth is most complete in every detail—divided into three rooms; the projection room, a rewinding room, and a generator room; all high ceilinged and thoroughly ventilated. Shower bath and toilet arrangements are provided for the operators.

The equipment consists of three Powers 6 B projection machines, a stereopticon, and a spot light. There are two complete motor generators, each large enough to opeerate the whole equipment. One is held in reserve in case of breakdown. The projection system is connected to delicate instruments in the manager's office and at the musicians' stand, so the speed of the picture may be controlled at all times.

A great $40,000 Wurlitzer electric control organ has been installed. The organ chambers are located to the right and left of the proscenium arch, and the speak is directly into the main auditorium through beautifully designed grilles. The console is placed to the right of the musicians' stage. The organ has all the elements and qualities of the finest church type; is equipped with a full orchestral complement of stops, and the console is also connected with a grand piano. It is without question the finest instrument in the city of Newark.

The building has been erected from design, plans and specification prepared by and under the personal supervision of Architect Fred Wesley Wentworth, A. I. A., Citizens Trust Building, Paterson, N. J.

Karzin to Build Another in St. Louis

The most important business venture, which will result in exceedingly great benefit to all business interests in the vicinity of the Union Station, that has been proposed or undertaken for some years is the immediate erection of a beautiful high class, fireproof motion picture theatre, to be built on the south side of Market street, between Sixteenth and Seventeenth streets, at a cost of two hundred and twenty-five thousand ($225,000) dollars.

The owners are John Karzin, operator of four other moving picture enterprises in this city; Jacob Weiss and Adolph Diamant, two retired capitalists, who were formerly in the wholesale liquor business. The owners will spare no expense to make this theatre second to none in the city of St. Louis.

An accommodation for travelers during train time will find this a convenient rendezvous.

The building will be a three-story and basement brick, fireproof throughout, with ornamental terra cotta front, beautiful art glass windows and canopy over sidewalk to entrance to theatre. The theatre will have a seating capacity of three thousand persons, with an auditorium and balcony. There will also be installed a mammoth pipe organ. There will be rest rooms for the ladies and smoking rooms for the gentlemen, also check rooms for baggage for the convenience of travelers passing through the city.

The Equipment Service Department of the NEWS will answer any queries regarding theatre equipment and furnishings. There is no charge whatsoever for this service.

Describing the Theory and Principles of Slide Projection

Cleaning

Most of us as a rule wash our hands at least once a day. Cleaning the condenser, mirrors, and projection lens is as important to the polish it. Of course, such action is not wasted, success of projection as our personal appearance may be judged of import. A slight film of dust on the mirror, for example, will cut in two its usefulness. A dirty or finger-marked projection lens, while not showing the dirt marks on the screen, will deliver far less light than a clean one. Perhaps those of us who wear glasses can well appreciate the necessity of keeping the glass clean, and should find no trouble in cleaning lenses and mirrors. The process is identical, and is of just as great importance.

Many people, when the picture looks spotted as if there were dust on the lens surface, naturally take out the projection lens and but the real cause does not lie, as a rule, in the projection lens.

Why do we see an object on the screen? Mainly because the projection lens has picked up the image of the object and projected it there; but the point from which the lens picks up the object is not in the lens itself, but at a distance to the rear of it corresponding to its focal length. When we put a slide into the machine, we adjust the projection lens until it projects a picture of that slide; hence, anything projected on the screen must be in the vicinity of the slide.

Thus, dirt on the condensing lenses, since they are directly behind the slide, may be projected oin the screen; a crack or a chip, especially if on the front condensing lens, will tend to be reproduced on the screen. It is therefore essential that the condensing lenses be free from imperfections and clean.

One other point in regard to bellows: when the bellows are completely stretched out (as when showing in a small room) care must be taken that the bellows do not sag, thus cutting off a portion of the light beam between the slide and projection lens.

Aids to Good Projection

Good pictures require, naturally, a first-class lantern with a good projection lens, but there are several other aids. A dark room is of course essential. The difference between a good picture and poor one may oftentimes be the difference between a dark room and a semi-darkened one.

Again, the type of screen is important. An ordinary sheet will do as a screen, but it is elementary. A good screen must have a non-porous surface, that is every minute spot on the screen must reflect light. With an ordinary sheet, much of the light goes through the cloth. A very fine weave is therefore necessary.

Several months ago we published a series of articles on the subject of Incandescent projection. The author was Mr. H. F. Barnes, who is also the author of the present series, which originally appeared in one of the Bulletins of the Edison Lamp Works.

Mr. Barnes has the happy faculty of combining technical knowledge to practical application, and what is of even greater importance, of stating it in simple, easy understandable language.

Showing the Direction and Intensity of Light Rays Falling upon Different Reflecting Surfaces. With the plaster surface, the light is scattered with much the same intensity in all directions. With the prepared screen, the light is thrown back, within a certain angle, in the direction from which it comes

For a permanent installation, a prepared screen is always recommended. The prepared screen reflects back a much greater percentage of the light thrown upon it without unnecessary scattering. A muslin sheet or a plaster wall, for example, scatters the light in all directions (Fig. 16). A prepared screen, such a one with a metalized or glass-beaded surface, throws the picture back after the manner shown. Prepared screens are better adapted to long throws. For short throws, in a wide room, a screen which scatters the light, is necessary, and a clean white sheet of very fine weave is well adapted.

The matter of cleanliness of screen is also of importance. Tests were made on two different cloth screen surfaces; one new, clean and white, the other, of the same material but which had been in use several weeks. The latter sample did not appear to have collected a very great percentage of dust and grime, but on test it was found that the actual amount of light reflected by the used screen was only one-half of the new sample. It is, therefore, essential that the screen surface be kept clean.

Other Uses for Stereopticon Type Lamps

Stereoptican lamps find extensive use in medical and dental spot lighting apparatus, in microscopic examinations; in automatic advertising machines; in many small motion picture machines; in opaque projection of products where an enlargement is desired, in order to pick out imperfections; and in spot lighting for theatres; and many effects for the stage and show window lighting.

Lamps with a stereopticon type filament are also extensively used in flood-lighting, although in the case of flood-lighting, the life of the lamp is longer. A lamp designed for flood-lighting, while it is possible to use it with stereopticon apparatus, will not put a maximum amount of light on the screen, as compared with the regular stereopticon lamp, due to the fact that the flood-lighting lamp is a longer life lamp and, consequently, of lower efficiency.

With flood-lighting, the lamp is enclosed in a parabolic reflector. A large angle of rays of the lamp is thus directed into a fairly well controlled beam.

In photography, for enlarging, where lenses are used, a stereopticon type lamp is usually the most convenient light source. The stereopticon type lamp also finds extensive application in various classes of signal apparatus.

87. What is the easiest and quickest way to know whether or not the capacity of a wire is overloaded to an appreciable extent?

Care should be taken not to draw a current from any line greater than the current carrying capacity of the conductor, the connected load being such that the conductors are not overloaded. If a wire is overloaded excessive heating takes place and danger of fire is encountered, also the insulation may be broken down or destroyed so that trouble of grounding or short circuit may later result.

88. Give conditions that an overloaded wire is likely to cause.

Answered in 87.

89. In putting a new or different bulb on a mercury arc rectifier and it fails to operate, how can positive proof be found that it is or is not the fault of the tube?

If when the bulb is tipped the starting terminal fails to produce an arc then the wiring circuits are probably at fault, but should

90. Why does the carbon crater form on the side of the carbon towards the condensors?

Because the lower carbon is set slightly forward of the center line of the upper carbon.

91. In using D. C. current, which carbon diminishes the quickest? Why?

The positive carbon of a D. C. circuit diminishes the quicker because of greater oxidization due to the more intense heat.

92. In using an A. C. current, which carbon diminishes the quickest? Why?

The carbons of an A. C. circuit burn at the same rate due to the change in direction of the flow of current.

93. In using D. C. current, give detail explanation why needle forms on lower carbon.

In a D. C. circuit, while the passage of the current thru the carbon vapor flows from the positive to the negative carbon, yet negatively charged ions are thrown off by the negative carbon or cathode. These ions leave the outer surface of the cathode so that the carbon burns to a point.

Unique Film Mending Shears Approved

Every once in awhile a device comes onto the market that is simple and obvious that we all wonder why we didn't think of it ourselves years ago. That is exactly the case with a pair of Film Mending Shears shown to us recently by the Blue Seal Products Company. These shears are so practical that they sell themselves on examination.

The Blue Seal Mending shears, as the illustration shows, consists of three tools in one. A cutting edge permits the projectionist to trim his film for the splice; a sharp chisel-like point on one jaw of the shears is for use as a scraper; and the tips of the blades are flattened out for use as a vise on which to locate the perforations while the clamp is applied.

The shears are only 7½" long and are made of drop forged steel. This means that they are practically indestructible and will stand the hardest kind of treatment without injury.

For a small additional sum the company will supply a bracket for the bench into which the lower jaw of the clamp may be placed and fastened.

In the past the film mending equipment of the average projection room consisted of a razor blade for both cutting and scraping and either a patented bench clamp that occupied considerable space or a home made one that took up less space and did the work less satisfactorily. If a pair of scissors was used they could not be found as a rule, and if they were in evidence. This new combination device does the work of all the other tools, does it better, with less trouble and with less space.

It is one of the finest projection-room accessories it has been our pleasure to test and approve. Every projection-room needs one.

The Blue Seal Products Co., now located at Englewood, N. J., is to enlarge its organization and will open a manufacturing plant in the central part of Brooklyn. It has several other products that will be found of interest to the motion picture theatre.

Hints on Use of Portable Plants with Mazda Sets

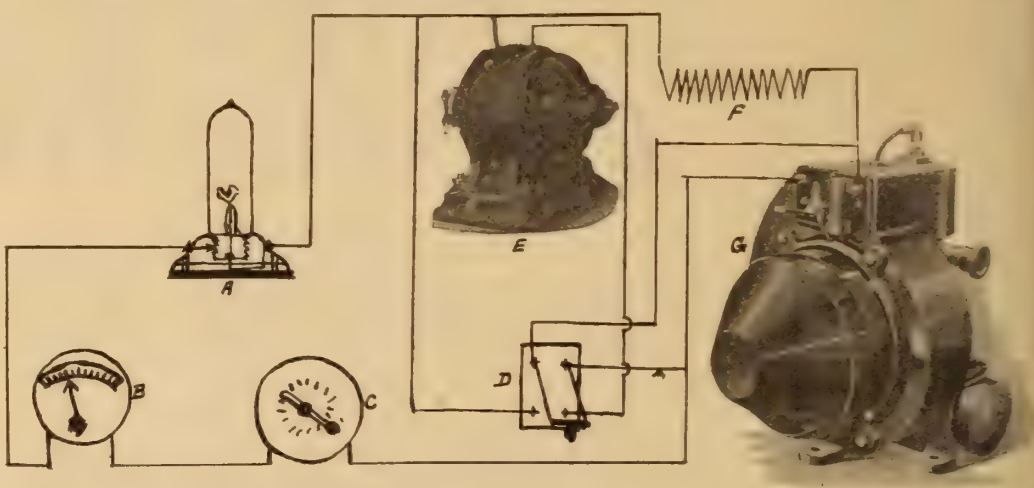
GREAT complaint has been made that the 32-volt generating outfit when used to operate the motion picture machine, does not always do the job satisfactorily. The greatest cause for complaint has been that the bulb required just 32 volts, not one degree more or less. If too much "juice" was run into the bulb it would burn out instantly.

When a generator starts up, operated by a gas engine, without any load on the line it speeds far ahead of its normal revolutions per minute when fully loaded. To obtain 32 volts from a generator when the line is loaded means that it will be one capable of developing 36 to 40 volts when it is started with no load on the line. Now a cold motion picture light bulb does not offer its maximum resistance until the filament starts to heat. Therefore more than 32 volts would pass through the filament which would burn it out.

The solution is to have the line fully loaded when the bulb is cut in. One of the most successful means of obtaining this result was explained by Francis J. Armstrong, a 32-volt plant distributor and engineer in the Singer Building, New York, the other day.

Any 32-volt farm lighting plant can be used for motion picture projection provided the total power output is equal to the wattage required by the lamp plus that required by the small motor used for turning the reels. A little excess power above that actually required is not a bad feature. The variable resistance shown in the sketch must be of sufficient resistance to absorb the entire output of the generator. The motion picture lamps now used are of the high efficient type, which means that for the best work they must have a fixed current with practically no voltage variation. It is, therefore, wise to have an amateur in the line as shown on the sketch. There is no switch used between the source of electric current and the lamp, the resistance is used entirely for this purpose.

When a motor is required to operate a film a resistance equal to that of the motor at full speed must be inserted, in the line as shown in the sketch. When the motor switch is thrown into the "on" position this resistance is automatically cut out, but when the motor is shut off, the resistance automatically cuts in keeping the resistance of the total circuit a constant quantity.



"A" is Incandescent lamp
"B" is Ammeter
"C" is Variable resistance
"D" is Double pole single throw knife switch
"E" is Motor
"F" is Fixed resistance equal to that of motor at full speed
"G" is Engine driven generator

In other words, the circuit is designed to maintain a fixed load at all times on the engine no matter whether the lamp is being turned off or on, or whether the motor is used or not. The only care required is at the time of starting the generator at which time the variable resistance must absorb the full output.

Some of the Things that Make and Unmake the Cameraman

With Several Actual Incidents that Illustrate the Subject

By Pierre A. Jeltrup

THIS department receives a large number of queries from prospective cameramen regarding the duties of the assistant who wishes to advance in his profession. Many of these questions are answered in the article by Mr. Jeltrup.

SOME people are born Cameramen, others are made. When they reach the top, no one distinguishes from the two; some times the one gets more credit than the other. It all depends on the point of view. To my estimation, the man who works himself into the ray of the calcium by dint of hard work and perspicacity is the one who deserves greater praise and greater glory than the one who is born with natural instincts.

Taking for granted one is not a born Cameraman, what are the necessary steps that should be taken to advance to recognition? There are five predominant steps: Care, Efficiency, Watchfulnes and Ability to Produce.

All Cameramen were at one time assistants. If there are those that were not, I do not know of them. A good assistant must be "careful." Be sure of what you do and never take things for granted. Make certain of them yourself. It might be hard to do this at times but it seems to be the safest and best policy. Taking things for granted has resulted in many a lost job. The excuse, he said so, oftimes falls short and will not be sufficient. Excuses are never any good as a rule. It is best, I have found out, that when you have something to do do it yourself. Don't leave it to the other chap. If he does it for you, you probably will not know what he is doing and consequently will not understand the proposition and you will be unable to cope with it the next time you meet it again. I remember of a case when an assistant, new to the job, had the amusing sport of shooting a few temporary titles. He did not like the idea of remaining a short time after hours shooting them and managed to have another assistant shoot them for him. He got away on time but he still remained ignorant of the trivial intricacies which are encountered. But the time soon came when he had to shoot a "rush order" of some 300 titles with no one to be found in the studio to help him. He had seen some shot and so had an idea how to set up. He loaded his magazines with Negative stock but did not know that it had to be reversed. He worked till four in the morning shooting the titles, but all his work was for naught as he had to shoot it all over again when the report came back from the laboratory.

He found out that Negative film must be reversed when titles are shot, but discovered it only after a strenuous example. If he had shot the first set of titles himself he would have learned the "why's and wherefors" at less expense.

After Carefulness comes Efficiency. We have become a great nation for efficiency, everything we do must be do quickly and accurately; and naturally th trait has found it's way into the Moti Picture world. It is another great ass which is to be found in an assistar Don't "rush in where angels fear tread." That is not efficiency, that's foc ishness. Do it quickly, quietly, ar above all do it well. Rushing arour and making a great deal of noise is n the ear marks of an efficient man; it the stamp of a bluffer. When Directo do that, people term it temperament, b not so with an assistant Camerama Doing things as quickly as one can ar doing them as correctly as possible is th foremost thing that is taken into consi eration. To my mind, and from what have learned, that is exactly what Can eramen want. They might not say an

"Getting on," quickly to the different ways of Cameramen is also an essential quality. Notice how they light a set. Compare the various lighting effects and weigh them in your mind. Different Cameramen as a rule lightup a set in different ways. No Cameraman works the same and naturally the quicker an assistant catches on, the more useful he becomes to his Cameraman. Paying attention is what counts. I know a Cameraman who was an assistant but a short time. It may be luck, but at any event he proved that he was attentive and watchful about details, which in turn earned him recognition. It came about in this way.

The Cameraman for whom this assistant worked, became ill and no other man could be had to take the vacancy. The only person on hand was the young assistant. Some spoke of having him shoot the scene. Always there are people who watch us; even though we do not know it. They had seen that he was always on the spot and always eager for knowledge concerning the Camera. He had paid attention to the light arrangement and he had enough confidence in himself to make some slight changes which he thought necessary. The report from the laboratory the next day stated, "All scenes shot O. K." It is needless to say that he got another chance to show what was in him and that he made good. It is true that some studios will not give the little fellow a chance, but it will out: and when it does, be ready when opportunity knocks and GET RESULTS.

Results are what they want. People don't usually excuse you for the mistakes you make. Excuses won't free them of that impression, and if you don't show them what you can do somebody will appreciate your work. Of course I know there are cases where people are unappreciative—well do I know it—but if we only stick to it and show them again and again what we have in us, some one will come along and give us the necessary boost.

But why is it that some assistants and second-Cameramen remain in that position all their lives? I knew one who had been an assistant about ten years and I always wondered what was the matter with him. So far as I could see he was always on the jump. His footage book was always correct, his camera was in excellent running condition, and some of the stuff he had shot was all that could be desired. What was the matter with him? One day I was enlightened.

As you undoubtedly know, if one of the magazines on a Pathe Camera are off, the remaining one will slip out as the first is not there to hold it in place. Work had just been finished for the day in this certain studio, the last big scene had been shot and the whole crew were dog-tired. For some reason, this assistant I speak of, had removed the unexposed magazine from the other and had left the exposed magazine insecurely on the camera. However the machine remained threaded up. In his hurry the assistant grabbed the Camera and ran—more or less—with it up the stairs to the dark room. When he reached the top of the stairs the inevitable happened. The exposed magazine which remained on the camera, separated from it's mate, jarred loose. Having nothing to cling to in this time of need it slipped out, banged to the floor and bounded most gracefully from step to step, unwinding itself as it bounced along.

Derisive cries went up as all concerned saw that extra hard work was before them the next day That man was negligent in not seeing that all was O. K. before moving his camera.

There was another assistant cameraman I knew who always meant well in trying to help his Cameraman, but whenever he moved about near the camera he was sure to wind his foot around the leg of the tripod and trip over it. Many a time his Cameraman had to make a complete new set up after this exhibition of clumsiness. He tried to do things quickly but he rarely did them right.

I remember once on location, there was only one camera along—a Pathe. The Cameraman had unscrewed the camera from the tripod and it was simply resting on the head with nothing to hold it there. Work had just begun and the Cameraman instructed his assistant to move the camera to another spot. But the assistant did not know that the camera was unscrewed. He went to the camera and threw the outfit over his shoulder. They had to quit work and return to the studio because "all the kings' horses and all the Kings' men, couldn't put the camera together again."

Jones to Deliver Paper on Film Transmission

At the coming convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, Mr. L. A. Jones of the Research Laboratory of the Eastman Kodak Company will deliver a paper on "The Transmission of Tinted Motion Picture Film." A synopsis of the paper has been prepared, as follows:

A special type of flicker photometer suitable for the measurement of the total transmission of tinted and toned motion picture film has been designed and constructed. Since a tinted motion picture consists of irregular areas of various densities, it is necessary to adopt some integrating method in order to measure the average transmission. This is accomplished by the use of a small integrating sphere in connection with a suitable projecting system. This projecting system is designed so as to duplicate the conditions existing in the practical projection of motion pictures.

The projection lens is located in the integrating sphere wall and the focal length and object distance is such that the picture is formed on the opposite wall of the sphere. The brightness of the opal glass window located in the wall of the sphere at a point 90° from the position occupied by the projection lens is measured by a suitable flicker photometer. This consists essentially of a Whitman disk. The arrangement of this disk is somewhat unique in that the photometric field proper is surrounded by a secondary field which at all times is illuminated to the same extent as the photometric field itself. Thus the field observed consists of an elliptical area in the center of which is a smaller elliptical area which is alternately illuminated by light from a field of unknown brightness and from a comparison lamp of known intensity.

wrote, a century almost, of music, of glorious operas succeeding one another like drops in a waterfall, from "Nabucco" to "Rigoletto" with its "Donne Mobile," and "Trovatore," and "Traviata" and "Aida," with its "Oh, Celeste Aida." Everything is moving before him—his whole life is passing in panorama."

For the quaintness of Mozart, it is possible to present the composer in a manner which follows:

"Why, it was only yesterday that I was romping about, foolish as a lamb and as simple. Wolfgang, have a little dignity, please. Remember how the people think of you! Ha, ha. Dignity, what's that?'—and the spirit before us actually danced and jigged and made the most curious sounds like this: Schnip, schnap, schnei and other funny syllables without meaning."

"You're wondering about that? Those words mean nothing. I used to string together rhyming syllables even when—well, when I seemed to have grown up." And as Mozart spoke of the growing up, his voice grew sadder. "No, I'd just string them together, schnip, schnap, schnei. I'd write to my cousin as dearest, best, lovingest, fairest, etc., etc., and signed myself 'your cos-box.' To my mother I would write, 'I send you 1,056,789,555 kisses. Now count them out and remember me.' Believe me, friends, in those days I had my fun and my little jokes—fun of my own sort. I used to go singing and laughing about. I'd laugh at almost anything. Tell me a joke, and I'd always be a good listener. I used to have a lot of fun teasing people, and the girls—oh me, oh my! The girls. If I had married all the girls I teased and promised, I'd have been married a hundred thousand times. Ha, from the earliest days, I had my fun—what you call puppy love, maybe, huh? When I was seven years old and playing the clavichord at the French Court, and all the nobles and courtiers are around, the king and queen overjoyed, I did jump to my feet and over into the queen's lap, as she sat right on the throne. I kissed her and I said, 'You are very good and I love you, and I will let you marry yourself to me.' Of course she smiled and kissed me, and whenever after that anyone should even hesitate to kiss me, I would say 'Remember the queen kissed me, and who are you to refuse?' It always worked."

To the Rescue of the Organ Owner

The Committee of Reference of the National Association of Organists will be glad to furnish exhibitors with accurate and expert information regarding the installing or rebuilding of theatre organs. It is an astounding fact that a large percentage of exhibitors are getting only a small portion of their money's worth from their instruments. The progressive manager, who desires up-to-date methods, using the power of music in picture presentation, cannot afford to ignore these problems.

The chief phase of this situation, about which the committee desires to carry on a campaign of education, is the lack of suitable location or adequate space for organs. In designing a new building, the organ, just as much as the stage or the box-office, should have proper space in the plans, and not an inch of this space should be used for any other purpose when the building is completed. If necessary it is better to cut out a few feet of lobby space, or take out a few rows of seats, in order to have the organ heard to best advantage.

It is a waste of money and a crime to allow plaster walls, thick curtains or scenery to choke the organ tone. An excess of curtains or fabrics in a theatre deadens the organ or any kind of music. The contrast between even a small orchestra and a muffled organ with its vague murmurings is causing unfavorable comment among patrons. When people are moving about the theatre such organs might as well not be played at all.

The grandeur, brilliance and color of a genuine, full-bodied concert organ are a valuable asset to a theatre, particularly as a solo feature, second only to a large orchestra. It is unfair to a good organist if the organ is of inferior quality, or badly situated, or both. If both organ and playing are unsatisfactory the patrons are doubly cheated. The public is no longer indifferent to the kind of music it hears in picture houses. Patrons enjoy hearing a fine organ, well situated, and they are beginning to know whether they are hearing it or not.

Sometimes an organ properly located is too small for the building. This may be due to a faulty specification or improper voicing.

Because of sharp competition and human nature organ builders often give somewhat prejudiced advice to exhibitors in these matters. Sometimes a specification looks large on paper, but contains too many stops which sound weak or inaudible when the organ is erected.

The National Association of Organists w founded fourteen years ago, with headquarte in New York, and local Councils throughout t country. Its object is to improve the standar of organ-playing wherever organs are foun and to secure the fullest recognition of t organist by the public whom he serves. Amon its members are many of the leading conce and theatre organists. At its annual Conventio it has lectures, discussions and actual demo strations of picture-playing.

The Committee of Reference consists Reginald L. McAll, for many years salesma and mechanical expert with leading orga firms; T. Tertius Noble, well-known recitali and organ architect; Charles M. Courboi organist of Wanamaker's New York and Phila delphia stores; Clifford Demarest, ex-Warde of the American Guild of Organists. In dealin with theatre organs the committee will consul with Firmin Swinnen, organist of the Rivoli the atre, New York, who has given recital tours i England and the Continent, and the other or ganists of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, as wel as others who have made a study of thes problems.

Organ builders' names must not be mentione in correspondence. There is no charge for th services of the Committee, which is actuate solely by a desire to improve the quality o organs, and thereby of organ-playing.

"Music Trades" Says:

THE Convention recently held at the Astor Hotel, between prominent members of the musical industry, musicians, and leading members of the musical picture industry, is likely to have very important results. It was called, as we know, for the purpose of enlarging the scope and improving the character of the music in the movie houses, of which there are some twenty-five thousand in this country today.

The discussions, which were attended by nearly three hundred representative men and women, were not only interesting, but informing. They covered a large range of subjects. There was a unanimous opinion to recognize the importance of adequate music to the moving picture business, as a business proposition.

Inasmuch as at the various meetings over one hundred cities were represented, there is no question but that a great step forward has been taken which must inevitably lead to opening up a large new market for our enterprising manufacturers, music publishers and dealers.

In the great majority of moving picture houses where films that have cost some of them, hundreds of thousands of dollars are shown, the music that at present accompanies them is wholly inadequate. From now on, under the impetus of the Convention, there is bound to be steady improvement. This was voiced by a number of proprietors of moving picture houses who were present at the Convention.

This movement should be aided, not only by manufacturers but by dealers all over the country. They should impress upon the owners and managers of moving picture houses, the importance of having good music to accompany the pictures. By such co-operation, the opportunity for the publishers and dealers of sheet music, of the manufacturers and dealers of musical instruments, of player pianos and organs, will be greatly increased.

AN IMPORTANT SUGGESTION

This is my opinion on the Music proposition

Why don't the film exchanges have music furnishe with all films? and why not have a supply on han same as they do the advertising matter. Why not sen the proper music with each shipment of films and i the exhibitor don't return it in good order charge hin for same, and in this way it would certainly help t put the picture over in a much better way. It woul be a great help to all of the small places for we fin it is very hard to get the music that is suitable for al subjects.

Why not advocate this and see what is thought o the suggestion.

Yours for more light on this subject,

We are using a small orchestra an have the Galaxy and Miscellany Series of Schirmer but we note that all of Mr. Winkler's Musical setting never use any of these selections. The Barton Organ

WHY THE BARTON DIVIDED MANUAL IMPROVES THEATRE ORGAN MUSIC

The duty of a theatre organ is to furnish music suitable for every action of the picture without being monotonous. If the music has a sameness or monotony, it distracts from the performance.—The Divided Manual multiplies by thousands the combinations of an organ—producing tone variety and exquisite tonal coloring—never before possible—A musical rendition that will play your pictures for an indefinite period with a never-ending variety of beautiful music—and played by any organist—doing away with the "especially trained," "hard to get" and "harder to keep" trick organist. Why therefore risk music that lacks that great necessary point for theatres—unending variety. Barton Organs are used in the finest theatres in the United States.

"Musical Courier" Says:

THIS rounded out three days of utmost importance in the history, growth and future development of music with the motion pictures. Those of us who attended all the meetings derived great benefit and surely one understands the situation better for having attended the congress. The arguments and discussions that at times seemed too serious, turned out not to be, and perhaps it was for a better understanding that they occurred. Again, congratulations to the Motion Picture News and all who helped to make this permanent organization possible.

not. What would you suggest to be the best music for the comedy?

EARLE J. SMITH,
Organist, Palace Theatre,
Waseca, Minn.

Answer:
For comedies it is perfectly alright to use the lighter music as long as the rythm and spirit of the composition seems to be in harmony with the intent of the situation.

For the travelogue I would be very hesitant to use fox-trot music. I would try to use something more or less neutral and something fine. To give you an idea of what I mean, say that you are looking at some pictures about mountain lakes, I would use the composition The Swan of Saint Saens, which is very peaceful, or say the Ave Maria by Schubert or the New World Symphony by Dvorak. Often in the travelogue I would attempt to get in something national. To some oriental picture I would use some oriental music, to a Japanese scene I would use some music of the same nature, to a picture about Italy I would use some popular Italian melody like Sole Mio

MUSIC EDITOR

Dear Mr. Isaacson:
For some weeks past I have been reading, with increasing interest, various articles concerning the convention of musical interests in the motion picture industry, convening this coming week.

It is a cause for regret with me that I cannot attend the convention. I have been interested in picture music for only a little over a year, but during that time have read everything obtainable on the subject; have opened several fine organs and played in two very good theatres, one in the Northwest and am now at the Strand in this city. I want to become permanently and prominently identified with this phase of the musical profession.

Now that the pictures have brought the organ into such prominence, I want to progress just as far in this line as possible.

Do the various studios in California employ musicians to arrange their cue sheets? Are you conversant with conditions on the Pacific Coast enough to enable you to tell me briefly if an ambitious and experienced organist would probably be able to find a really good opening out there?

Dear Mr. Isaacson:
Would you please inform me where I can get suitable material for musical accompaniment of moving pictures.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:
You say there is a great opportunity for composers in moving pictures. Being a composer, I am interested to know how to get a chance to write for pictures. I am an organist. At present teaching music in this city My ambition is to write a score for a real dramatic picture. I often feel that if given a chance I could do something big in that line. Please let me know how and where to get my chance.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:
I want to personally thank you for your reply to my letter written last November. A number of catalogs have come to me and I was able to select a library from them. Most of the large houses, however, seem to deal only in orchestra music for pictures which are of no help of course to an organist.

I have only a two-manual Wurlitzer with pedal keyboard, but I do try to play good music always. Our company owns four theatres and at my request after a lengthy explanation took out a license for the privi-

"Billboard" Says:

IT was the opinion of everyone in attendance at the meetings that this conference is the beginning of a new era in the history of music in America. Each session in itself brought information and suggestions which alone would have made the conference worthwhile. The need of better music more ably represented, and the abomination of wrong music, was most emphatically impressed upon each and everyone in the audience, and this in itself will have immeasurable effect for good throughout the nation. Each and every exhibitor through this country, as well as each and every person interested in music, should get in touch with the new organization and learn of the good things which are to be done, and in the accomplishment of which their wholehearted co-operation should be given.

Building Notes From the West Coast

Odessa, near Spokane, Wash., has a new community hall, a concrete structure, costing about $30,000, made possible through the community spirit and generosity of Odessa farmers, business men and citizens, who purchased stock in the corporation known as the Odessa Community Hall Association. The building is probably the only one of its kind in this part of the state. The main floor has a seating capacity of 500.

Charles E. Stilwell, Spokane, Wash., manager of the Casino, Class A and Unique theatres, has purchased a 90-foot frontage on the south side of Main avenue just west of Stevens street, for a reported consideration of $125,000. It is now occupied in part by the Unique theatre where Mr. Stilwell made his start in the moving picture game eight years ago. Mr. Stilwell came to Spokane twelve years ago and was four years representative of the Gamewell Fire Alarm and Telegraph Company. He installed alarm systems in Spokane, Salt Lake and other northwestern cities. He tells the following story of how he happened to get into the moving picture business:

"One day eight years ago I met J. D. Finley, a good friend. 'I want you to do me a favor,' he said. 'I want you to take the Unique theatre and run it.' I told him I knew nothing about running a theatre and could not make it pay. However, I yielded. At first it was uphill work, but it gradually got better and it wasn't long before we were paying good rent, and then the place went over the hill and has been going better ever since.

"A couple of years later I took over the management of the Class A and then the next year I bought the Casino from Dr. Clemmer and a week later the Rex. I sold the Rex last year. If building conditions next year are right I expect to put up a motion picture building that will be a credit to the city."

The first theatre of a string of show houses to be built throughout the northwest by the Woodward Enterprises, Inc., of Spokane, will be constructed at Puyallup, Wash., at a cost of $55,000, it is announced by O. D. Woodward, president of the company. Work on the new building will begin about May 1, and the house, when completed, will seat about 750 people. Rigg & Van Tyne are the architects for the structure. Mr. Woodward announced that the theatre would be used for both moving pictures and production work. Land for the theatre site has already been purchased, he stated. Production of moving pictures by the Woodward company will begin in the near future, Mr. Woodward stated. Some equipment has already arrived.

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"The Avenging Arrow"

(Ruth Roland—Pathe Serial—15 Episodes)

READY on your mark! Set! Go! ! They're off! ! ! It's a fast pace which Pathe is setting according to the first three episodes of the newest Ruth Roland serial, "The Avenging Arrow." The star has been at this serial game long enough to gauge its values for entertainment. She has distanced her rivals and has the field completely to herself. And because she knows the serial ingredients one can always be interested in her efforts. The elements which compose this newest continued photoplay are of the orthodox pattern. The disciples of good and bad are in their accustomed places. The backgrounds are varied enough to supply thrills and the players aren't afraid of danger in negotiating the high spots.

A serial is a serial. It may be impossible and improbable, but at least it offers concentrated action. No messages or morals are needed. But a vein of romance, a dash of adventure and some unfalutin incident must be incorporated. And "The Avenging Arrow" present this trinity in large, allopathic doses. It is a picture of Spanish love and passion and revenge. The hot blood of the Latins courses through the characters and the resultant action is flavored with tabasco sauce. The first three episodes are titled "The Eye of Mystery," "The Enemy Strikes," and "The Hand of Treachery." One can gauge that the entire cast is "up and at 'em." Two families are engaged in a feud which is keyed in an air of mystery and suspense. Treacherous Indians are employed for atmosphere.

The picture is handsomely staged, the director having an eye upon the gaps, ravines, mountains and other chiselled bits of nature to collect the thrills. Miss Roland still portrays her role with her customary enthusiasm. The supporting players would be accused of over-acting in a legitimate photoplay. But the keynote of serial interpretation is to generate action and suspense by intense expression and exaggerated gesture. The villain will be hissed because he belongs to the old school. S. E. Jennings makes him a very, very bad man. Others are Otto Lederer, Edward Hearn and William Steele. The serial is up to the standard of the previous ones starring Miss Roland. She should pack 'em in because she always gives a good show. Go to it. Line 'em up to the left.—LAURENCE REID.

"You'll Be Surprised"

(Single Reel Chester Comedy—Releasd by Educational)

YOU'LL be surprised once more at the amount of intelligence the Chester ape displays in "You'll Be Surprised." It is in this connection that this comedy depends largely for its entertaining qualities. The "monk" runs away with the show but is ably assisted by the baby, dog, and horse appearing with him in past releases.

There is no story to speak of the reel being just a series of sequences with the ape doing stunts, some of them probably aided by a clever camera man. Good for any program and far above the average slap stick connection.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"Worlds Apart"

(Eugene O'Brien-Selznick)

IT isn't often that a leading man and a leading woman "make" a picture but such is the case with Eugene O'Brien and Olive Tell in "Worlds Apart," for they have guided their roles through many time worn situations and still held the interest.

The story is of the usual O'Brien variety with the star cast in the role of a rich young man and appearing in many elaborate sets.

He is to marry a young woman of his class when a scheming millionaire casts the ogling eye at her and determines to win the maiden fair or foul. He chooses the latter way and calls in a young society matron to aid him for he holds a forged check signed by her husband. The plot begins to thicken when O'Brien holding the hand of his sweetheart announces at a party that they are to be married. Here the young matron appears and begs for a few minutes conversation with him. In another room she resorts to the old trick of throwing her arms about him while the villain points through a door and shows the other young lady what is going on. She falls for it, denounces O'Brien and will have nothing further to do with him.

The star goes to the slums, meets the "girl of his heart" and marries her while the millionaire marries the other one. The plot jumps here and there and back again. O'Brien's wife turns out to be the daughter of a butler who is working for the millionaire who is shot by the forger, who is sought and found in an opium joint and confesses his guilt.

Although the story has a combination of five or six plots joined together, it is clear and understandable and will interest.

The cast includes, Arthur Houseman, Florence Billings, William Tooker, Warren Cook and Louise Prussing.—FRANK LEONARD.

Bill and Bob Series

(Cyrus Williams-Pathe)

THE Bill and Bob series is predominantly educational in character. This does not mean that they are dry, stereotyped samples of applied screen pedagogy. Far from it—Bill and Bob are boys. Place two lusty young American Boy Scouts in the environment of woodland and plains; give them a log cobin to live in; set them on the trail of the predatory bobcat, the raccoon or the coyote with traps and a Winchester; and finally, let them have as constant companion a one-eyed, fighting terrier called "Rags," and you have a combination of elements that are bound to prove interesting and amusing as well as educational. Moreover, the action moves against a background of foliage-decked hillsides, pleasant clearings in the woodlands and trails that lead into ravines and along swift-moving streams. The educational phase of the series is the exposition of how a pair of trappers live in the woods and manipulate their traps in catching the quarry.

The preceding paragraph describes the general character of the series. We saw four of the single-reelers, captioned consecutively: Trapping the Bobcat, Trapping the Raccoon, Trapping the Timber Wolf, and Trapping the Coyote. Each reel begins with a short subtitle, describing the destructive character of the animal which is the object of the hunt, and the losses to farmer and ranchman for which these animals are annually responsible. This prefatory title is to forestall any possible criticism of cruelty. One thing is to be commended especially—there are no killings visualized on the screen. In each case, the animal is trapped, bound with ropes and thus conducted in triumph to the camp—as the picture fades out. We speak, of course, of the four members which we saw and which are listed above. And the dog "Rags" deserves special mention; he'll win a genuine laugh from any audience no matter how staid. Pathe will release one reel a month, beginning on March 6th.—E. F. SUPPLE.

"Annabel Lee"

EDGAR ALLAN POE'S poem, "Annabel Lee," being nothing more than a simple love ballad, cannot naturally give to this picture much more than its name. The story is extraneous matter built up about the romance of a fisherman and the daughter of a wealthy neighbor. The father objects to the match, and the young man, played by Jack O'Brien, undertakes an expedition to the South Seas in an effort to salvage a sunken treasure. A mutiny occurs, and he is cast upon the seas in a small boat. Thrown upon a desert island, he survives until a passing ship picks him up. Arriving home he finds the girl, although harassed by another suitor, still waiting for him. So the picture ends.

At best this picture is for the smaller houses. It is by no means an elaborate production. And Director William J. Scully has not turned out a flawless product.

Lorraine Harding does not get any great personality into her part. Jack O'Brien plays well, but cannot convince as a rugged son of the sea. The picture is of five-reel length.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"THE FOUR HORSEMEN"

(Metro)

rvelous Production Reaches the Heights of Picture Art

MIGHTY step forward has been achieved in the picture industry with Metro's colossal production, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," adapted from Ibanez' impressive story. Truly superes are in order in describing its merits and proportions. The statee that it is the first million dollar production to reach the screen is s verified when one considers its rich and spectacular appeal, its painskg detail, and the embellishments which have accompanied its prention. The significance of its theme, the grandeur of its romance, the ssiveness of its magnificent settings, the vividness of its stark realism, piritual quality of its message—these thoughts sweep over the specta- nd transport him.

has not been an easy task to adapt a story of such import. But those ure sticklers for true adaptations will marvel over the fidelity of idea, cterization and dramatic contents which June Mathis has incorporated. s faithful is Rex Ingram, the director. One gains the impression that ight have been a horseman in the clouds, himself, looking down so t would carry the sweep, the robustness, the vitality, the color, the eur that the story demanded. Surely he has been inspired from height because of his perspective, appreciated in the manner in the picture soars to its logical climaxes and the clever arrangements scenes and the artistic guidance of a most distinguished cast. The h color and atmosphere, its life, are truly painted in the prologue war. Every scene is definite in outline and wonderfully dovetailed he progress of the story. There is a place for everything and everyis in place.

Argentine, the natives and their national dance, the primitive white f passion—these are all caught and presented in kaleidoscopic prons. Yet beneath the call of adventure, the desire to live and love, is the ominous fear of tragedy. Happiness and sorrow go arm in ke birth and death. The suspense is overwhelming even when war come over the horizon. One instinctively feels the dreaded hoofs Four Horsemen War, Conquest, Famine and Death, even though one be unfamiliar with the author and his interpretation of the biblical ecy.

e Four Horsemen" cannot be called a war picture. It is more a in racial traits with adventure, romance and the effects of war used it color. The symbols of the four riders in the sky, prancing on teeds is awe-inspiring—a marvel of camera work. These scenes are ersed with the action and heighten it. They also lend a spiritual ance. Ingram does not touch upon the actual conflict but on the of war—such as what to expect from an invasion and when passions ided by hate. The war episodes are immense in their spectacular . The only criticism may be aimed at some incidental display of d hatred—which could be eliminated without destroying the logic upting the action.

e Four Horsemen" carries the sweep of the "Birth of a Nation" in elation of climaxes; it is as picturesque in atmosphere and color as et" and its humorous note is as finely balanced as in "Way Down Space forbids giving play to the technical achievements and what n accomplished in its many scenes. But suffice to state that it is a effort to give the screen its place in the sun. Its dramatic moments reme. It exudes charm and generates life. It stands as a monuto the industry. A long list of players render perfect interpretation. one of them is ideally cast; every one acts with inspiration—even to numerable extras. But credit should go to Rudolph Valentino as the Alice Terry as the girl, John Sainpolis, Joseph Swickard, and e Beery.—Length, 9 reels.—Laurence Reid.

This tremendous production will leave you through its marvelous collection of thrills; it will inspire you with its moments; it will fascinate you with its beautiful romance and its colorenture. The picture is a faithful adaptation of Vicente Blasco Ibanez' adventure and conquest. A picture of a thousand colors, a thousand thousand actors. A picture sure to leave a lasting impression because of ness. A picture superbly acted by an all star cast. A picture directed finite taste by Rex Ingram. Adventure, drama, romance, humor, pathos, suspense, action, sentiment. These are the elements which compose "The orsemen."

"A PERFECT CRIME"

(Dwan-Asso'. Producers)

Director and Star Make Character Study Interesting

THE human note is generously displayed in Allan Dwan's latest picture for Associated Producers. Since "A Perfect Crime" is not endowed with the customary screen ingredients which spell action and suspense, the director has relied upon the humanities, the details of humdrum life to make it interesting. Adapted from a magazine story it presents Monte Blue in a role which might have been conceived with him in mind, so easily does he grasp the psychology of the character. It is quite a novel idea which scores because of its resemblance to life in the general outline, although it offers several improbabilities. "A Perfect Crime" presents a hero who is suffering from an inferiority complex. He lacks personality and pep and ekes out a colorless existence in a bank without being noticed by his associates. The star makes the figure stooped and he certainly invites sympathy.

The novelty of the picture comes in the Jekyll-Hyde character of the hero. While he is ostensibly a failure to everyone including himself, he is in reality living a dual existence. The powers at the bank place temptation in his way in an effort to get rid of him. And to all appearances he takes advantage of it. He is depicted as taking the money which accounts for his grand splurge into society. But penetrating into the soul of such a character it doesn't seem reasonable that he would stoop to such length to assert himself. Carefully planting his other self and suppressing his bank personality he is able to hoodwink every person he meets. Which is where the logic disappears. A man would have to be a consummate actor to get away with it. Yet he appears in the society of his sweetheart and the bank president without raising suspicion. Immaculately attired and with a superb poise he is the perfect gentleman and liar. A detective is called in who penetrates the dual identity, but is frustrated by the gullible financier. And it turns out that the money isn't stolen at all but placed in a vault.

One will wonder how the hero can dress and disport himself on a salary of sixty dollars a month. So he slinks back into his humdrum personality and proves his honesty. There is a moral to this picture which establishes the idea that one can become anything he chooses by living the part. It is an effective argument for the "underdog" who can emerge a social lion by just spreading the "bull" and keeping up appearances. Mr. Dwan has made the most of the story and characterization. The flaws, doubtless, appeared in the original script. It offers romance, humor and pathos and keeps moving. Certainly it is a novelty, and there is no doubt that it offers good entertainment.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Allan Dwan's newest comedy drama, "A Perfect Crime," which appears at the ———— theatre next ————, reveals the desirability of indulging in that American pastime, pretending to be what you aren't. The hero, Wally Griggs, is a grand pretender. With the aid of a little nerve he is transformed from a timid bank messenger to a dominant humbug whose latest book on faked travels brings him a fortune—and of course a girl. The picture is said to combine humor with pathos and offers clever characterization. The story is simple and true to life.

Monte Blue, considered one of the ablest actors on the screen, has the role of Wally Griggs, the awkward, bashful fellow. He quite suddenly decides to rob the bank where he is employed as messenger. From this weighty decision to the conclusion the picture is rich in humor and human interest. He blossoms forth into a dashing social lion. A uniformly good cast has been selected to support Mr. Blue. Jacqueline Logan, a former Ziegfeld girl, is seen in the leading feminine role. Stanton Heck and Hardee Kirkland are also in the company. The settings are attractive.

PROGRAM READER

All his life Wally Griggs was moved by fear. He worked a humdrum existence in a bank and when the day was over he had no place to turn to except a colorless room. He was governed by fear and timidity. No one ever paid much attention to him. Then one day he plucked up courage enough to rob the bank. But did he rob it? He came to a decision to enjoy life. But how? Could he rid himself of his excessive timidity and become a social lion? He craved companionship and love. Was he rewarded? When "A Perfect Crime" comes to the ———— theatre next ———— patrons are certain to be entertained with one of the most original pictures of the year. "A Perfect Crime" is an Allan Dwan production.

SUGGESTIONS

The exploitation possibilities of this picture are numerous and varied. In the first place the original story appeared in the pages of the Saturday Evening Post. So the exhibitor should hammer hard on this angle. The title can come in for some good exploitation through linking up with stores. Signs prepared for women's specialty stores announcing that "It is a Perfect Crime" not to take advantage of our sale," et cetera, would be effective. The title can be exploited for most any kind of store, or photographers, dentists, and social functions. You can work up a deal of interest with the title. Bill the picture as a human and humorous account of a timid man who found his courage. Bill it as a comedy drama and feature the cast. Make use of Dwan's name also.

CATCH LINES

"STRAIGHT IS THE WAY"
(Cosmopolitan-Paramount)

Crook Comedy Drama Is Highly Diverting

THERE won't be any question about this picture offering 100 per cent entertainment. While a perfectly obvious little story of the redemption of a pair of crooks, yet it is so cleverly developed, radiates so much humor and wit and is acted so naturally that it enlists the interest of the most jaded picturegoer. In the first place it has a corking title which is to be appreciated by the passer-by. In the second place Robert G. Vignola has realized its values by stressing the humor and satire, thus eliminating the desire to hunt for flaws. Had he treated it too seriously the effort might have aroused condemnation. Thus he permits the spectator to take it lightly. True it has its improbabilities, is far-fetched in its old situations, but just at the moment it skates on thin ice along comes the director and the title editor and the high lights are turned on. So the interest is maintained.

A couple of crooks find it too hot in New York so they make their way to a certain hamlet to rest and ply their trade. They stumble on to a deserted wing of a house heavily mortgaged. Which is the point where the story begins. On the other side of the door dwells a kindly aunt, a relic of bygone aristocracy, and her charming niece. The humor maintains itself in the desire of the women to call on a departed spirit for assistance, while the crooks are looking over the situation without their knowledge. The Ouija board is utilized and the conversational by-play between the gullible women and the unobserved crooks is provocative of laughter. It doesn't require any amount of intuition to discover how it will end. One knows to a certainty that romance and the memories of mother-love will provide the motif of redemption.

The climax shows the mortgage about to shape itself, with the women appealing to "ouija" for the aid of the departed spirit. The listeners on the other side of the partition conceive a plan to plant enough stolen wealth to make the kindly souls independently rich. The situation is hokum, yet it is endowed with the human note that it never seems out of place. The second crook is the skinflint with the mortgage who enters the house to dramatize it and is knocked out by one of the heroes. A bit of soft focus photography enables the aunt to believe that "Uncle Henry" was responsible for the hollow. Matt Moore, George Parsons, and the rest of the cast are excellent. It didn't cost much to make this picture, but it offers more entertainment than a few million dollar productions we could name. The settings are immense and help a great deal in putting it over.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A picture based upon the redemption of crooks is offered in "Straight Is the Way" which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. All the necessary dramatic ingredients are intact, such as heart interest, sentiment, pathos, romance and melodrama. And it is enacted by an exceptionally well balanced cast that includes Matt Moore, George Parsons, Gladys Leslie, Mabel Bert and others. Robert G. Vignola directed the production from a scenario by Frances Marion, the original story having been prepared by Ethel Watts Mumford.

The crooks in question have journeyed to the country to try their luck. In burglarizing a house they discover that the occupants are a couple of women who are experiencing poverty. They make themselves at home in a deserted wing and in prying on the women learn that the house is heavily mortgaged. Rather than see the kindly souls turned out they effect a plan to recoup a fortune for the old aunt and her attractive niece. In doing so they are also regenerated. It is a simple story which scores for its human touches and the flashes of rich humor.

PROGRAM READER

The city had become too hot for them so they decided to try their luck in a country town. The "pickings" weren't very good there, but they did manage to find sanctuary away from the minions of the law. It was in a deserted wing of a house occupied by two women, a kindly aunt and her attractive niece. The women were hard pressed for financial matters, so the crooks took up their life of crime to make the women comfortable and happy. How they are regenerated is told in five reels of most enjoyable comedy-drama. The picture is "Straight Is the Way" adapted by Frances Marion from Ethel Watts Mumford's story and directed by Robert G. Vignola. The picture is rich in heart interest and humor and is well acted by Matt Moore, Gladys Leslie and others. At the ———— theatre next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

You can announce a most enjoyable treat in store for your patrons here. Tell them it is rich in heart interest, humanities and humor. Tell them it is a story of crooks who find redemption through romance and memories of mother love. Tell them it is a simple story of everyday people. You can stress the humor, which is a most dominant factor toward the picture's success. Link up with the Ouija board. Ask your patrons if they use Ouija to solve their troubles. Have the orchestra play the old tunes—the songs of long ago. Your theme might be "Old Time." The title can be exploited in several ways. Play up the cast. Gladys Leslie has been a star in her own right. And advertise Matt Moore, George Morgans and the others. Bill it as a heart interest comedy-drama filled with clever crooks.

(Realart)

Incredible Plot, But Has Appealing Moments

IN accepting this picture starring Mary Miles Minter, one must swallow hook, line and sinker and make due allowances for its fantastic plot, its far-fetched idea, its crudities and the gloomy key in which it is pitched. If one becomes the least analytical one will be forced to dismiss it entirely as too incredible. Yet one is forced to accept it seriously because of the sombre vein and its utter lack of comedy relief. Thus its flaws become noticeable. The spectator who is inclined to fairy stories will find it highly imaginative, but if he is looking for realism he will be compelled to shut his eyes. For realities are missing. The screen has developed double exposure work to cover a multitude of sins. This development is seen here in a deal of eerie action concerning departed spirits and after death hocus-pocus.

The star appears as an Irish immigrant who believes in the pretty idea that the ghosts of dead young mothers come back to earth to watch over their children on All Soul's Eve—as James M. Barrie would have it. The picture measures out a modicum of interest up to the point where the star, doubling as a young mother, is murdered by a lunatic. Then it defies logic. Previously in the role of the immigrant she has witnessed tragedy in Ireland and her appearance in America is linked up with her mother's death. This constant gloomy atmosphere becomes oppressive as the action progresses. It is quite pathetic and sweet up to the point where the drama is lugged in arbitrarily. An adventuress maps out a campaign to ensnare a husband and failing, adopts the plan of ridding him of his wife by proxy. Thus the employment of the lunatic. No coroner's jury is necessary in this crude scene. Her death is accepted by the countryside as natural. Then the husband and father seeks the solace of the villainess to forget his sorrow.

The latter character is badly overdrawn and does things which are ridiculous. It is when both are out carousing and the man has returned home in a drunken condition that his boy is taken ill. Unable to arouse the father, the Irish colleen, who is his servant, gets into communication with the youngster's dead mother. It is All Soul's Eve again, and her apparition floating down from heaven has its effect. The doctor is called and arrives in a pouring rain storm to discover that the lad is out of danger. The soul of the deceased had entered the soul of the susceptible heroine. Thus recovery is certain. It is hardly necessary to state that the picture ends happily. The acting is first rate except for the wooden performance of Jack Holt.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"All Souls' Eve," adapted for Mary Miles Minter from the Broadway stage play, will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— and ————. The story deals with the return of a dead mother's spirit on "All Souls' Eve," when, as an Irish legend has it, all the ghostly world visits again the haunts of its temporal life. Finding her son and her husband nearly wrecked from grief, the soul of the mother passes into the body of the little Irish nursemaid, who comforts the lad and brings him out of danger. It is a charming story excellently acted by the star who appears in a dual role.

The picture offers a wealth of heart interest and an intense note of mother love. It also presents moments of vivid drama in scenes which hold the attention through the compelling acting of the star, Jack Holt, Carmen Phillips and others. Its supernatural theme told in a restrained, natural way is sure to impress those who scoff at ghosts. The picture is appropriately staged. Elmer Harris wrote the scenario from Anna Crawford Flexner's play. Chester Franklin directed

His love for Alice had been the biggest, finest thing in his life. And when he lost her through the vile schemes of a jealous woman, he thought he never could be comforted. But suddenly he seemed to see in Nora the very image and spirit of his lost Alice! It was Nora's love, more real and vital than the air he breathed, surrounding him, bracing him when he thought all was despair. His little boy was shadowed by death, but the departed spirit of Alice entered the soul of Nora to watch over her son. See "All Souls' Eve," the Mary Miles Minter picture which comes to the———— theatre next ————. It is a screen version of Anna Crawford Flexner's play and offers a most entertaining hour.

SUGGESTIONS

You can provoke a deal of discussion about this picture and stimulate interest among your patrons if you hammer on the supernatural idea. Whether people believe in ghosts, spirits and communication with the dead or not does not matter. The thing is to get them interested. Tell them of Barrie's fancy—that the only spirits that return to earth are those of dead young mothers, who come back to see that their children are faring properly. Tell that Mary Miles Minter appears in a most difficult role and gives a charming performance. Tell that Jack Holt is her leading man. Play up the idea of Hallow'e'en and where it originated and what it means. Describe it as a poignant drama of the heart and home, an adaptation of the play.

"THE OLD SWIMMIN' HOLE"
(Ray-First National)

Artistic Presentation of Riley Poem; Great Entertainment

CHARLES RAY certainly offers a big surprise package in "The Old Swimmin' Hole," adapted from James Whitcomb Riley's poem of the same name. In the first place we never dreamed that entertainment could be made from it since it furnishes no plot. But plots aren't needed when there is a wealth of incident. The big surprise comes, however, in the total absence of titles. And this raises the idea that Ray and, also, Chaplin do not need them to express their art. Both are superb pantomimists so that every gesture, every expression is caught and understood. Anything these stars do can be understood by a child.

"The Old Swimmin' Hole" is a classic of its kind. It speaks a language which can be appreciated by everyone, not only up and down the Main Streets of the country, but the Broadways as well. Care and worry will be forgotten when Ray turns back the pages of life and becomes the barefoot boy. Since it has an absence of plot, the incorporation of titles would have broken up the continuity. Besides they would have been superfluous. Nothing is done here which cannot be caught by the spectator. One can guess what the characters are saying by the expressions on the faces. It is a great credit to Ray, and also Joseph De Grasse, the director. And Arthur S. Kane and First National should feel highly elated. If this picture doesn't clean up for the exhibitor, then nothing will. There is no natural sequence of events. No thread of story is discernible. Yet no healthy, mischievous boy does things in order. So its development is entirely correct.

The barefoot hero has his humorous moments in school (scenes excellently done by the director and star) and his efforts to be spared the rod at home are genuinely true and funny. Again he is invited to a picnic and wears his brogans and how they hurt his feet! A rich scene is the incident which offers the fight to win the friendship of the best girl. These fights are also real. And the "showing off" tactics to please her are in line with boyish character. Perhaps the funniest bit is when the boy attempts to recite before the class and discovers that the white mouse tucked away in his blouse is giving him anxious moments. The cave episode is a treat because it shows him lording over his pals by smoking real tobacco and reeling faint afterward in the customary manner. There isn't a false touch anywhere. The atmosphere and local color are wonderfully appealing. There is a scene of an old water mill which is like a rare etching. The technical details are perfect; so is the acting. "The Old Swimmin' Hole" is as Riley would have it. One doesn't associate it with the word "movie." It is a replica of boyhood life.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Charles Ray, one of the real talented stars of the screen, offers his immense following a big surprise in "The Old Swimmin' Hole," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. It is a picture without a subtitle. Each scene is told strictly by pantomime—pantomime so easily understood that words are truly unnecessary. The picture is also plotless in the dramatic sense, there being no theme or idea exploited. It is just an exposition of boyhood life as found in the rural districts of the country. The picture is based upon James Whitcomb Riley's celebrated poem of the same name.

The barefoot boy as interpreted by Ray lives again. His joys and sorrows are richly presented. He is typically boyish as he sleeps overtime and is late to school. He slides into his seat unobserved and spends his study hours sending notes to his best girl. The entire picture is a rare study in boyish expression. Humor is generated in his efforts to speak, to beat his rival for the affections of the prettiest girl, to smoke real tobacco. Every scene is said to be exquisitely presented and enacted against a background of charming rustic settings. Mr. Ray is splendidly supported. Joseph De Grasse directed.

PROGRAM READER

C'm on, Skinny! Oh, you! Let's go in swimmin'. What? The last one in is called a sissy? O-o-h, but it's cold! Run, fellers, here comes the old man! You dassn't knock the chip off my shoulder! Well, just you try! Can you imagine it all? Doesn't your memory go back to the days when you were a barefoot boy out in the country and swimmin' holes, best girls, hickory sticks, picnics, and fights and stolen fruits spelled unbounded happiness? Come and see Charles Ray in his greatest picture—a picture without a subtitle. A picture which offers one charming scene after another. A picture based upon James Whitcomb Riley's celebrated poem and exquisitely told against delightful backgrounds. "The Old Swimmin' Hole" will be at the ———— next ————. Don't by any chance miss it.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a knockout. And go the limit on advertising its possibilities. First, you have the name of the author. You can feature him and present stories for newspaper columns. Then you can print the entire poem and use it for throwaways. But you have a big surprise for your patrons in the fact that it is wordless. Do not tell them what is in store for them. Let them come and find rich entertainment. Tell them that a big treat is in store for them. Play it up as Ray's greatest picture—a picture which will be talked about for years. You can arrange a fine prologue with kiddies being featured. And your musical arrangement can be

Lacks Action, But Interest After a Fashion

"IN THE BISHOP'S CARRIAGE" has been so much improved upon since its day, that to make a picture of it at the present time brings to light its antiquated plot. In fact it has served the screen before not only in its original shape but in various guises. The chief fault of the picture is its lack of action. Once the characters and their motives are planted, there is nothing to do but wait for the orthodox conclusion with suspense relegated entirely to the background. It will surprise many to see Bebe Daniels in legitimate drama and those who appreciate her comedy talent will find occasion to be dissatisfied with her present vehicle. It seems to us that her forte lies in a comedy direction and not in straight dramatic patterns.

The opening reel discloses the only punch visible here. The heroine, brought up as a crook by Tom Dorgan, works the fainting trick at a railroad terminal and, in making a getaway, climbs into the bishop's carriage. The scene is definite in outline and measures out the only point of suspense. The remaining interest is centered upon the ability of the girl to squeeze out of a tight predicament which develops into a rather tame situation after all. The characters scarcely move from the set, and once the romance is introduced it becomes very obvious and old-fashioned. The outstanding figure is Dorgan, who is caught with the goods and sent to prison. But there is very little opportunity to make anything out of the crook. He comes back to make drama out of the romance and doesn't succeed. There isn't much bid for pathos and sympathy. The result is the picture is neither fish, fowl, nor good red herring.

No incident marks the development of the sequences. The heroine simply uses her resourcefulness in finding shelter and the call of romance makes her follow the straight and narrow path. As far as the technicalities are concerned the picture is above criticism. It is wonderfully well lighted and the details spell perfection. But there is no inspiration in the idea. Not being a melodrama and lacking the customary sure-fire elements which make a crook story real interesting, it merely succeeds in entertaining after a fashion. Bebe Daniels possesses a vital personality. When she adorns a picture, it never can be called dull. Wade Boteler is good as the crook and Herbert Standing fits the clerical cloth of the bishop in acceptable fashion. After witnessing the picture, a previous release, "You Never Can Tell" looks better than ever.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Bebe Daniels, the vivacious Realart star, who created such a sensation in "You Never Can Tell," comes to the ———— theatre next ———— in "She Couldn't Help It," an adaptation of Miriam Michelson's story, "In the Bishop's Carriage." All those who remember the fascinating tale will recall the adventures of Nance Olden, who hopped into the bishop's carriage to escape the law and found romance waiting around the corner. She is a crook who doesn't know the difference between right and wrong until she enters the bishop's life and discovers romance and finds redemption.

There are many comedy opportunities when Nance, afraid of the police, persists in calling the bishop "father." She pretends that she is unbalanced. The story is well put together, measures out a full quota of action and suspense and is excellently acted by the star and a cast that includes Emory Johnson, Wade Boteler, Herbert Standing, Z. Well Covington and Helen Raymond. Maurice Campbell directed.

PROGRAM READER

Bebe Daniels, starring in "She Couldn't Help It," which is the current feature at the ———— theatre has the role of a girl whose natural ability to draw clever sketches is amusingly woven into the plot of a story which concerns a bishop, a crook, a young lawyer and other figures. The picture is a screen version of Miriam Michelson's fascinating story, "In the Bishop's Carriage," which created such a sensation in book form and upon the stage. The star has the role of a clever pickpocket who escapes the police by inviting herself into the nearest vehicle she spies. It happens to be the carriage of an astonished bishop. Miss Daniels is supported by a splendid cast.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a picture to exploit on its fame as a book. Tell that it is an adaptation of Miriam Michelson's fascinating book, "In the Bishop's Carriage," which created a big hit as a novel and on the starge. You can put over a big exploitation for your lobby if you go in for the sensational style. An old-fashioned carriage will stimulate interest and it could be used for a box-office instead of your regular window. You can tie up with your book-stores and have a sale on the book again. And send out your advertising by mail. Tell that Bebe Daniels is the star and play up her past features. Your crowd should remember "You Never Can Tell," one of the bright pictures of the year. Play up the cast too. The title can come in for some good exploitation.

CATCH LINES

She had been schooled in the ways of a thief. Then a day came when she stepped out of the old life into the colorful life of romance and regeneration. See "She Couldn't Help It."

"THE CONCERT"
(Goldwyn)

Another Stage Vehicle Adaptation Which Flops

THE best way to review this production is to compare it with its recent twin "The Great Lover." Both pictures are adaptations of Leo Ditrichstein's stage vehicles and so near alike in theme and material provided that it seems surprising that they have been released so close together.

"The Concert" is largely on the lines of the play with some descriptive titles added, illustrated by what amounts to still pictures of the stage version. It is slow moving, practically devoid of suspense and the story is perfectly obvious from the beginning. The titles earn a few laughs. The production as a whole is artistically done. The acting is excellent if walking about and talking can be called screen acting.

The trouble with the whole production lies in the fact that "The Concert" was not good photoplay material. As a stage play it provided a cleverly constructed idea for a star having a reputation and talent for playing peculiar roles. As a picture it is a very fine example of what too many stage plays become when used for the screen, right the opposite of what should be provided. This picture won't please twenty-five per cent of any audience for all that a lot of money has been spent in producing it. It wastes the talents of a good director and an exceptional cast.

The story of "The Concert" concerns a pianist, beloved by all his feminine pupils, one especially, a young matron and how they become disillusioned of each other when the wife and husband of the pair pretend to have become affinities. In the end both couples decide they are very well satisfied with each other.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A screen version of Herman Bahr's satirical play which scored such a big hit upon the speaking stage with Leo Ditrichstein as the star, will be offered as the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. This is a play based upon the artistic temperament of a musician who finds himself considerable of an idol by feminine audiences. He basks in the radiance of their charm in general and in the vital personality of Delphine, a married woman in particular. A time comes when he would indulge in romance with her. But her husband and the musician's wife discover that they can also play the game. The couples agree to find harmony, but in the end the swapping arrangement only brings discord.

The play was rich in satirical flashes and scored for its subtle humor. This note hasn't been lost upon the screen. In fact the scenes are so arranged that the humorous note is dominant. Lewis S. Stone appears in Ditrichstein's role and contributes a finely modulated performance—one rich in poise and repression. A prominent supporting cast renders adequate assistance—a cast that includes Myrtle Stedman, Mabel Julienne Scott, Raymond Hatton and others. The picture is interestingly developed, the direction being in the hands of Victor Schertzinger.

PROGRAM READER

It is the natural thing to pay homage to a great musician. By an ability to arouse the emotions, a player on the violin or the pianoforte can create a large and appreciative public. It happens that in "The Concert" a musician encourages the affection of a married woman. This liaison is looked on with favor by the forsaken wife and husband. And these innocent parties decide that four can play the game as well as two. How the romantic affairs terminated is told in five reels of delightful comedy-drama. "The Concert" is a screen version of Leo Ditrichstein's successful play of the same name in which he starred for so many seasons. It will come to the ———— theatre next ———— with an exceptional cast of players headed by Lewis S. Stone. It is said to be a very delightful picture.

SUGGESTIONS

You can put this picture over by announcing that it is an adaptation of the stage success in which Leo Ditrichstein starred. Bring out that its rich and rare comedy is intact in the silent version. Bring out that it is a most delightful satire upon the artistic temperament. For a prologue you can have some musician play upon the pianoforte. Get the best artist in town and have him play a brilliant solo number. Or a violinist would be O. K. if the pianist cannot be obtained. Play up the cast. Most of them have been stars some time or other. You can state that it is as breezy as "Hold Your Horses" and "Scratch My Back." And treat your copy to arouse interest in the artistic temperament. Send out teasers asking whether it is wise to fall in love with a professional musician.

He was a celebrated musician and his feminine audiences paid homage to him. Did he respond? See "The Concert."

"IF ONLY JIM"
(Universal)

Carey's Latest Is Amusing and Entertaining

HARRY CAREY is at his best in "If Only Jim," for the story gives him plenty of opportunity to display his talents as an actor and strut and stride about the stage in a character which is bound to appeal, especially to those who love the western drama.

The story runs along in the usual vein with plenty of thrills and fights and for contrast has a strong sympathetic vein throughout, in that the star finds a lonely child out on the desert, becomes a mother to it and invites all the men in the town to brother it.

To start the action the bad man begins his plotting and planning early and uses every device to trick the star out of his rightful claim to a gold mine.

And he succeeds very well with his scheming until in the last reel, the star takes it upon himself to do a little scheming. The villain and his accomplices are working at the mine when Carey appears and in a thrilling gun fight the star scatters the bad men and teaches them a lesson.

But this is not all for Carey has to settle with the villain's right hand man who is in love with the heroine. And this he does right after his "defugelty" at the mine.

The scene of the fight is laid in the star's cabin and is very thrilling to witness in that the combatants throw their guns away and go to it hammer and tongs.

The villain sneaks one over, seizes a gun and as Carey is rushing him fires into his shoulder. But the day is saved by a dog, who by the way is one of the best actors of his class on the screen. The animal actor grabs a revolver in his mouth and carries it to Carey, who in the knick of time fires and kills his rival.

The picture is well directed, and has some good shots of the out-doors.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Harry Carey, characterized as the "he's human" star, will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in his latest (and what is considered by many his most human) photoplay, "If Only Jim," which has been adapted from the novel "Bruvver Jim's Baby." The picture presents the star in a highly colorful role—a role which he extracts the utmost from in sympathy and appeal. It permits Harry Carey to show a new side to his talent. "If Only Jim" is a story rich in the elements of heart interest, pathos, juvenile appeal, romance, sentiment and local color.

The star and his capable company sound all these elements and carry the story along with keen action and good suspense. It is a picture laid in the West, with an assortment of characters to give it atmosphere. It is said by those in a position to know to equal the memorable "Cheyenne Harry" stories in the manner it intrigues the imagination and compels attention. Mr. Carey is supported by Carol Halloway, who has become a favorite because of her sincere efforts, Ruth Royce, Duke Lee, Roy Coulson, Joe Hazelton, Minnie Prevost and others. The story has been adapted by George C. Hull, while Jacques Jaccard has directed the feature in a skillful manner.

PROGRAM READER

He's human. That's what we must say about Harry Carey. We trust our patrons feel the same way. Ever since he blazed his popularity on the screen in his memorable Western types he has kept faith with the human note. The Universal star comes to the ———— theatre next ———— in "If Only Jim," his latest release. This is an adaptation of the novel "Bruvver Jim's Baby" and permits Mr. Carey to assert his personality in a most colorful way. The picture is well punctuated with heart interest, pathos, sentiment, romance, action and suspense and it is finely acted by a cast that includes Duke Lee, Carol Halloway, Ruth Royce, Roy Coulson and others. Come to the ———— theatre and see the human star—the star who can make you feel like a pal. It is a first-rate picture, one carrying a likely story and excellently directed.

SUGGESTIONS

Harry Carey doesn't need a deal of exploitation. Get out the electric signs and tell that he's human in your copy and it will quite suffice. It wouldn't be advisable to give away the plot. His stories are simple western documents which rely upon action, suspense and the human note. You can tell them that it is an adaptation of the novel "Bruvver Jim's Baby," by Philip V. Mighels. Tell them it is packed with good incident, romance, sentiment, pathos, thrills, juvenile appeal and heart interest. Make mention of the supporting cast, especially the name of Carol Halloway. She will be remembered for her fine support of William Duncan in Vitagraph serials and has a definite screen personality. A prologue can be effective if a male quartette is used in cowboy attire, singing the old prairie songs such as "Clementine," "Jim Along Josie," "Old Dan Tucker," etc.

CATCH LINES

See Harry Carey, the he's human star in "If Only Jim." A picture of rich action and suspense.

Is he human? You bet he's human. Who? Harry Carey. See the popular star in his latest picture, "If Only Jim," a story of everyday people.

"DYNAMITE ALLEN"
(Fox)

Disconnected and Wildly Improbable Melodrama

IT has been a long time since we have set in on a picture, sponsored by a reputable producer, that had as little to recommend it as "Dynamite Allen."

The story bears all the earmarks of having been turned out over night by the so-called trained scenarioist whose bag of tricks was exhausted long ago and who has a supreme contempt for the grey matter of people who pay money to see pictures. "Dynamite Allen" is little more than a series of wildly melodramatic incidents.

It has the orthodox villain usually relegated nowadays to serials. Its hero is of the homespun type with nothing to do but stand around. There is a murder, in the first reel, an innocent man going to prison and a lot of scheming and conniving in the second, arson in the third, faith cure in the fourth and the clutch in the last.

Mr. Walsh has no opportunity for his athletics and makes a sorry job of limited chances for acting. The whole cast is inclined to overact, although they are good types and apparently competent. Titles cover long lapses of time and make explanations about the story. The direction is not inspired, although a Griffith would have been helpless with what has been furnished from which to make a modern picture. The photography is clear, but there has been no attempt at artistic effects. A few sets are good but most of them are only rough interiors.

In acting honors only one player, Billy Gilbert got out of the "movie" rut, although a child will please since she is a pretty little miss and plays her role with great seriousness.

A synopsis of the story wouldn't mean much. The picture is about a family by the name of Allen, who have an awful lot of trouble because a nephew of a rich old dame is a crook. Finally the guilty are punished and the hero and heroine pull the conventional finish.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

George Walsh, athlete and film star, will be seen in his latest William Fox picture, "Dynamite Allen" at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

"Dynamite Allen" is a thrilling melodrama with a number of big scenes among which is a realistic train wreck. Mr. Walsh in the title role is under the necessity of stealing a railway locomotive in order to rescue his sweetheart and mother but before he fully accomplishes his purpose, the railroad employees turn a bridge, the locomotive plunging into a river.

The star is cast as an energetic young hero of the homespun type on whom it has devolved to support his mother and sisters when his father is sent to prison on the charge of a murder he did not commit. The picture has plenty of action and provides plenty of acting opportunities. A well balanced supporting cast has been secured. The picture was directed by Dell Henderson, who has a fine reputation for producing good melodrama.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The feature production on the bill at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ———— is "Dynamite Allen," a William Fox picture starring George Walsh.

In the title role Mr. Walsh plays the part of a young chap who by his energetic manner has earned the role of "Dynamite." How he saves his sweetheart from being kidnapped, frees his father who has been unjustly sent to prison and punishes his enemies, makes a strong dramatic film story. In support of the star are such well known players as Edna Murphy, Dorothy Allen, Brigham Royce and Billy Gilbert. The picture was directed by Dell Henderson and others of popular favor.

The picture is in five reels with thrills and dramatic interest carefully builded to a strong climax in the last scenes. One of the thrills comes when Mr. Walsh drives a locomotive off the open end of a draw bridge. There is a realistic trial scene and many other exciting sequences. The star is given a fine opportunity for acting and his performance is praiseworthy.

SUGGESTIONS

Bill the star above everything else. Mention the wreck scene and other melodramatic highlights. Give the title some attention. Window displays in which you reproduce the train wreck scenes can be made by use of a toy locomotive, specially constructed draw bridge and small scenic background. Use plenty of stills showing the scenes from the picture. Billboards and window cards in the right locations should work well on this picture as it is melodrama.

CATCH LINES

A vivid story of the common people with the star cast as an energetic young coal miner, enacted in correct locales, with a thrill in every foot of the picture.

A George Walsh picture packed with thrilling stunts and sensational situations.

A romance that breathes the spirit of chivalry, quaint, charming and pleasing.

"EXTRAVAGANCE"
(Metro)

Interest Dulled by a Too Lengthy Picture

WE do not know when Ben Ames Williams wrote this story which Metro has transferred to the screen with May Allison in the starring role, but it has not the humor, the characterizations, nor the original incident which fill some of his stories. Possibly the adaption is partly responsible, for the picture is allowed to drag itself out to six reels, and it is only in the fifth reel that there is stimulating action to awaken an audience.

In the first four reels there is only the star acting the petulant, extravagant wife in a succession of scenes which are deadly similar, and talking in the subtitles a mass of baby talk and sugary phrases. May Allison cannot, of course, make herself lovable in a role which is, for the vast part of the picture, unsympathetic. The best she can do is to be winsome, or whatever you want to call it when wives try to cajole their husbands into spending money to gratify their feminine pride. And in her cajoling Miss Allison gets a bit tiresome. She pets her father until he gives her a big church wedding; she teases her husband into buying her expensive clothes, and she vamps and tricks him into buying her a new house. And by this time the audience is thoroughly familiar with Miss Allison's sidelong glances and brimming eyes, and is quite weary of her character. It is so very long before her husband falls low enough to steal in order to gratify her love of luxury.

A great deal of this is due largely to the astounding amount of footage which is taken up by each incident. Some of this, for instance, the elaborate wedding scene, will make an audience appeal, but other parts, while beautifully staged, seem too lengthy for the slight point they are intended to put over. There is an outdoor beach party, sequence which is especially well done from an artistic point of view.

Robert Edeson is an admirable stern parent, and Theodore von Eltz gives a good performance opposite the star. William Courtwright gives a splendid characterization.—Length, 6 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

THE CAST

Nancy Brown ..... May Allison
Richard Vane ..... Robert Edeson
Dick Vane ..... Theodor von Eltz

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Extravagance," a screen version of Ben Ames Williams's story which appeared under the title of "More Stately Mansions" in Good Housekeeping, will be presented at the ———— theatre on ———— and ———— of the coming week. The popular star, May Allison, appears in the stellar role of this interesting production, and is supported by a notable cast headed by Robert Edeson. Combined with a display of most artistic acting is a story which because it mirrors faithfully a problem common to everyday life is vibrant throughout with a powerful appeal. The story presents the predicament of a young man of meagre means who married a wife with social aspirations and an excessive desire for finery, far beyond the means of the young husband to satisfy. But she loves her husband none the less sincerely, and the climax is reached when she is suddenly brought face to face with a full realization of the results of her undue extravagance. If you like a dramatic story enacted by a capable cast, you cannot afford to miss the presentation of "Extravagance" at the ———— theatre during the coing week.

PROGRAM READER

Nancy was one of those women who considered money something which was obtained by teasing, either your father or your husband, long enough and cleverly enough. First of all she saw no reason why she could not have a big church wedding with six bridesmaids, flower girls, and everything. So she teased her father. Later she wanted a gorgeous dress. So she teased her husband. Finally she had her heart set on a most wonderful house—just the kind she had always dreamed of. So she teased and cajoled, and practiced all the little tricks that only a woman knows until her husband bought it for her. But it was more than he could afford, and so——

This is the basis of "Extravagance," the feature picture at the ———— theatre on ————. May Allison is the star, and the picture is adapted from "More Stately Mansions," a magazine story by Ben Ames Williams, one of the most popular writers in America today. Robert Edeson, veteran of stage and screen, appears in the cast.

SUGGESTIONS

May Allison, becoming as she is, better and better known every day, should be the basis for most of your advertising. Tell them that she has an ideal part, and that this is a picture which will appeal to women as well as to men, for in it Miss Allison wears a number of elaborate and stylish gowns. The story is by Ben Ames Williams, whose stories are familiar to all magazine readers. Worthy of mention in your advertising is Robert Edeson, who has an important part in the cast. You may be able to use the "house buying" sequence to effect a tie-up with the local real estate dealer, or at least use it to run teasers in the want ad. columns of the daily paper.

(Cntinued from first column)

A story that goes beyond the conventional in plot construction and development with dynamic George Walsh ideally cast and splendidly supported.

A red blooded tale of the Pennsylvania mining regions with George Walsh playing a role that calls for action and acting.

A stirring drama which shows the futility of crime to hide crime in which the star has a role eminently suited to his talents.

"THE MARRIAGE OF WILLIAM ASHE"
(Metro)

Star Enlivens Story of British Politics

EXCEPT that this picturization of Mrs. Humphrey Ward's story deals rather lightly and, we suspect, quite untruthfully, with British political life, it will make fair entertainment. May Allison's part is largely of the "cute" variety, and she puts vim and zest in many scenes which otherwise would be of mediocre interest.

It is also elaborately produced. Some excellent exteriors were discovered for the Scotch highland sequence, and there are some big ballroom sets and interiors of a British mansion. Another sequence is laid in Venice and while the number of exteriors here are limited both in size and number, such as are, make pretty pictures.

It is in the delineation of the Prime Minister of England, for instance, that the story appears unconvincing. He is made a comedy type—a henpecked, boobish husband. His wife is a comedy shrew. Wyndham Standing is well cast as the Secretary of Home Affairs, being dignified and of stately bearing, although a trifle youngish looking for the part.

The story concerns William Ashe (Standing), who marries an impetuous and impulsive young member of British nobility. She makes an enemy of the wife of the prime minister, and is induced by the villain to publish a book of caustic cartoons, in which her husband's offical chief and his wife are held up for public ridicule. The result is of course, that the political career of William Ashe is ruined. But he learns that his wife has been true to him and that her association with his enemy was simply the result of the latter's villainy in persuading her that the publication of her book would be of the greatest benefit to her husband. So he forgives his wife, placing her affection above his political career.

There is a charity ball sequence in which May Allison chooses to portray Lady Godiva. She appears atop of a huge white horse, clad in only in a lengthy wig. It is so cut and photographed that it will not be offensive. A strong romantic flavor runs through it all and because of this and its scenic beauty it should satisfy despite its unconvincing story.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

An attractive romance of British political life will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. It is entitled "The Marriage of William Ashe," and stars the dainty Metro actress, May Allison. Dramatized from Mrs. Humphrey Ward's celebrated novel and produced as a motion picture under the general supervision of Bayard Veiller, this picture will stand forth as one of the most entertaining bits of screen amusement that has been seen at the ———— theatre in some time.

Miss Allison plays the part of Lady Kitty Bristol, a vivacious young girl not at all in accord with the generally accepted notions of what a younger member of the British nobility should be. She marries William Ashe, a staid and dignified member of the Cabinet and in her simplicity, takes steps to advance him poiitically which prove disastrous to his career. But Ashe finds that he can still love the little wife, despite her fatal error.

Playing the part of Ashe is Wyndham Standing, an accomplished screen actor. Other fully capable players appear in the cast with Miss Allison. The picture was directed by Edward Sloman. It will be shown at the ———— theatre for ———— days.

PROGRAM READER

Lady Kitty Bristol knew nought of the art of politics, but in the art of love she had graduated with the highest honors. So when she married a member of the British cabinet, her efforts to aid him in his political career proved most disastrous, but her attempts to win and hold his love for her were successful to the nth degree. Lady Kitty Bristol is May Allison; William Ashe, her husband, is Wyndham Standing, and the picture is "The Marriage of William Ashe," a Metro production which will be shown at the ———— theatre beginning ———— for a period of ———— days.

The story was adapted to the screen from the celebrated novel by Mrs. Humphrey Ward, and is a romantic drama which holds the interest throughout. It has been very lavishly produced, and the scenes showing the life of British nobility are accurate in every detail and were filmed after long and thorough study in order that every detail might be perfect. Part of the story is laid in Venice, and while the entire picture was made in the United States, these scenes are so perfect and of such pictorial beauty, that one is taken into the atmosphere of the "queen city of the seas"—the city of romance, tinkling guitars and clear moonlight nights.

SUGGESTIONS

This novel by Mrs. Humphrey Ward has had a great many readers, and her name should sprinkle all your ad. copy. May Allison, of course, is the main attraction. You can state that she has a bright vivacious part and does herself full justice. State that she is one of the most winsome and attractive of screen stars; that she has had a rapid rise to stardom, and that in this picture she wears some stunning gowns and costumes. Wyndham Standing is a well known leading man. A great amount of money has been spent on the filming of this production, and you can advertise it as a lavish feature.

"WITHOUT LIMIT"
(Baker-Metro)

Entertaining Despite a Mechanical Development

THIS adaptation of the Satevepost story, "Temple Dusk," as sponsored by George D. Baker, doesn't carry the interest of the original, yet despite its mechanical treatment the picture manages to entertain because it is based upon a good idea, carries some dramatic elements and for the most part is capably interpreted. It doesn't start off in its screen shape with the expected highlights. The story carried a punch from the opening paragraph, but in showing every little detail and planting the characters, the sequences become ragged with the result that the value of suspense is lost. In fact the picture bears evidence of being poorly constructed. There are gaps in the action which show the cutting and piecing together haven't been accomplished with any great amount of skill. One is expected to jump at conclusions.

This is a story which could have been dovetailed in regard to its scenes. One is never completely held at attention because the action is rambling. Yet with the first two reels over the interest picks up and is maintained to the finish. "Without Limit" is a story of contrasts and naturally points a great deal of dramatic conflict. The idea behind it is based upon the brotherhood of man. A gambler's conception of religion is to treat his fellow beings in a charitable manner. A young weakling finds himself involved due to the forgery of a check. He has married a girl of easy virtue during a drunken moment and realizing his crime tries to enlist the interest of the gambler. In emphasizing the situation the director employs so much detail that the "message" is never brought out vividly. The hero's father is a clergyman. Naturally the difference between his station in life and that of the gambler's encourages effective drama.

The punch of the picture comes when the youth returns from four years of war completely redeemed. His wife is in the clutches of a villain, but proves herself a woman of character at the supreme moment. And the gambler realizing his end is near makes a will leaving his estate divided between his friends, one of whom is the clergyman. The mere detailing of this picture cannot compensate for the many dramatic situations, the character drawing, the notes of heart interest, pathos and romance. While it doesn't ring as genuine as the original nevertheless it strikes a sympathetic chord in the heart of the spectator. It offers some clever twists and the interpretation is first rate.—Length, 7 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The Metro picture, "Without Limit," is considered one of the most unusual and powerful pictures of its kind ever made. Adapted and directed by George D. Baker from Calvin Johnston's magazine story, "Temple Dusk," it will come to the ———— theatre next ———— as the feature attraction. Included in the cast are such favorites as Anna Q. Nilsson, Frank Currier, Robert Schable and Charles Lane. For stark power, compelling interest and a plot of persons living in wealth on the skirts of society, "Without Limit" is said to be in a class by itself as a stimulating picture.

It tells the story of Ember a pleasure loving girl, who in a drunken moment marries a coward and discovers her mistake in a sumptous gambling palace. She learns that her new husband is a forger who refuses to take his punishment at the hands of Palter, the gambling king. Ember almost sinks to abandonment, while her husband, whom she has left, takes a strong hold on life. The denouement alternates in the gambling den and a church. The picture carries an original idea and a sharply defined moral and is moreover excellently acted.

PROGRAM READER

A splendid triumph of the screen—that is the most fitting phrase descriptive of the photoplay, "Without Limit," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with a cast that includes Anna Q. Nilsson and others. It is a picturization of Calvin Johnston's vivid story, "Temple Dusk," which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. All who remember the tale will recall Ember, the forlorn girl; Palter, the old impassive gambler who with all his faults has a fine philosophy of tolerance; the minister, his son, the croupier, the roue, and other vital characters. The story compels interest by sheer dramatic strength and the stark realism of the situations. Come and be royally entertained.

SUGGESTIONS

You can exploit this picture as one of the big surprises. First off you have the fact that it was considered one of the best ever written of its kind when it appeared under the title of "Temple Dusk" in the Saturday Evening Post. Bring out that it is a George D. Baker production and features Anna Q. Nilsson, Robert Schable, Charles Lane and a host of others. Bill it as a stark melodrama which entertains from first to last because of its interest compelling moments. Play up the fact that the story depicts the character of a master gambler who dominates his fellow beings by a strange philosophy. You can use dice as an advertisement for cards or throwaways. Catch phrases such as "Where a square gambler and a minister find much in common." Get out your stickers and exploit the title. Bill it as an unusual story of sensational scenes.

CATCH LINES

See "Without Limit" a picture of tremendous interest. How a square gambler and a minister found much in common.

"THE SNOB"
(Realart)

Good Production of Commonplace Story—Will Get By

FOR about three reels this breezes along very nicely, providing excellent entertainment and presenting a logical well developed, even if obvious story and then it becomes necessary to let the star be a heroine instead of a heavy, with the result that the snob is reformed overnight (literally) and the rest of the production becomes conventional "movie" except for a trick finish tacked on after the place where the end of most pictures has been reached.

However, "The Snob" gets such a good start and even in its most commonplace sequences has bits of good business, most of them of a comedy turn that we rather figure will pass as better than average entertainment, especially with the feminine of an audience.

From a production and acting standpoint "The Snob" is exceptional. A very fine cast of competent players, all perfect types has been provided. In fact Miss Hawley contributes less to the success of the production than any of the principal players. This is partly due to the fact that during the best sequences she is presented as a snob and that her role does not provide any great opportunities, considered from a starring viewpoint. Good titles and a well knit continuity help the picture over some rough spots.

The story is of the "rah-rah" boy variety, concerning principally a young man who is working his way through college and the daughter of a rich family who is very much up stage. Hence the title "The Snob." All at once the snob decides "Julia O' Grady and the Governor's Lady" split fifty-fifty in the opinion of regular people, so she takes a job as waitress in the college town restaurant just to be obliging and word is sent to the hero that animosity for the common people, especially "Captain Bill" is a thing of the past. Wanda wears lots of pretty clothes and they have a dance, a football game, etc.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A picture founded upon clean, wholesome college life with its real youth and real American sport and ideals is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— in "The Snob," the Realart production starring Wanda Hawley. This is a screen version of William Neidig's interesting story of the same name which captivated its readers when it appeared between the pages of a popular magazine. Miss Hawley plays the part of a wealthy girl who falls in love with a college football hero, only to snub him on learning that he waits on table in a college dining-hall. His friends, however, are determined to teach her a lesson in deportment.

The heroine is made to realize what a snob she has been—and what a splendidly democratic place an American college is. It is a story which is easily adaptable to the screen and moves with considerable action and suspense. It is said that "The Snob" abounds in local color and charming atmosphere. Prominent in Miss Hawley's supporting cast are William Lawrence, Edwin Stevens, Walter Hiers and others of equal ability. Sam Woods directed from a scenario by Alice Eyton.

PROGRAM READER

Her mother had brought her up to snub everyone who didn't have an ancestral tree or who didn't have much money. She was taught to keep her nose in the air much after the fashion of a bird dog. She wouldn't have to notice ordinary people if she adopted such a policy. She loved to snub waiters. But when she snubbed the star quarterback of the football team after she had fallen in love with him—just because he waited on table—well, she let herself in for a grand chastisement in which the whole college joined. This is an outline of "The Snob," the Wanda Hawley, Realart picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. It is a fine, healthy, enjoyable picture. Don't miss it.

SUGGESTIONS

If you are located in a college town, so much the better in the exploitation of this picture. You can stimulate a lot of interest among the undergraduates. If not, you can stimulate interest among high school students. Play up the college spirit which is emphasized here. Play up the fact that the heroine snubs a college football player because he works for a living. Such a picture can create a deal of good in teaching young people to be tolerant. Put out your college pennants.

From News Correspondences

William Fox was a Detroit visitor for a few hours last Sunday, calling on W. D. Shafer, manager of the Fox Washington, and W. C. Barnes, Fox branch exchange manager.

Earl Hennessy has sold his interests in the Detroit Film Co., a States right exchange, to Frank E. Beecher and Phil J. Fetz. Mr. Hennessy will travel the State for Minter-United.

William Elliott, manager of the Ferry Field, after taking the baths for two weeks in Mt. Clemens, has so improved in health that he is back at his desk.

Another censorship bill has been introduced in the State legislature. This provides that the State superintendent of education and two of his staff are to act as censors.

SALT LAKE CITY

Suit to enjoin the Salt Lake Federation of Musicians from spreading alleged information that the American and Gem theatres are "unfair" to organized labor was started in the Third District Court last week by the Swanson theatre circuit.

The complaint stated that the American theatre discontinued using an orchestra last July because of a declaration of the federation that members would not be permitted to play in an orchestra of less than eleven pieces. Motion picture operators went on strike in sympathy early in November, the complaint alleged.

George Carpenter recently secured the motion pictures of the local Boy Scout caravan's trip to picturesque Zion Canon. All the Boy Scouts were enlisted to sell tickets to the picture, which was shown in addition to the regular bill.

The only mistake Carpenter made was in underestimating the salesmanship ability of an earnest Boy Scout. The house was packed and could not accommodate the crowds on Saturday.

The Askimen and Harris vaudeville circuit has taken over the building formerly occupied by the Pantages circuit, which is now in the splendid new building on Main street. The building is being completely remodeled, new dressing-rooms are being built and the balcony is being strengthened.

CINCINNATI

Sunday morning organ recitals are to be a feature of the entertainments in the new Ascher theatre, Seventh and Vine streets, which is now under construction. This innovation in photoplay entertainment was announced recently by the management. An orchestra of more than two dozen pieces also will be engaged for the regular performances. The theatre will have a seating capacity of almost 2,000.

Cincinnati motion picture men expect to raise $22,000 as a result of the campaign for the starving children of Europe. At a recent meeting at the Hotel Gibson more than 25 exhibitors in Greater Cincinnati pledged themselves to raise an amount "in keeping with the exceptional prosperity that has met the industry here within the last three years." Minute men have been enlisted to speak in all the theatres of Greater Cincinnati.

INDIANAPOLIS

The Neal Theatre Company of Montpelier, Ind., has increased its capital stock from $10,000 to $20,000. The Blackstone Theatre Corporation of South Bend is increasing its capital from $600,000 to $800,000 through an issue of preferred stock.

New theatre projects for South Bend and possibly for nearby towns are thought to lie behind the incorporation last week of the Palace Theatre Corporation, with headquarters at South Bend. Capital stock is fixed at $900,000, of which $500,000 is preferred and directors are J. W. Joseph, Henry Abrams and B. M. Plaut. The articles of incorporation state the company will operate theatres and opera houses.

The week of February 13 was about the biggest in a theatrical way that Indianapolis ever has seen. Every important theatre, movie, vaudeville and legitimate, put on extra heavy bills, and strange to say none have complained about business. Here is what the houses fought each other with: Murat, "Way Down East" at $2 top; Ohio, "Earthbound;" Circle, "The Kid;" Colonial, "The Love Light;" Loew's State, opening week with twenty film stars present in person; Englishs, premiere of "Dulcy," legitimate. The Circle kept "The Kid," and the Murat kept "Way Down East" on for two weeks. The fact that the Murat, which is a legitimate house, carried "Way Down East" for two weeks at $2 per seat, top, with every seat reserved is marvelous when it is considered that the house is far out of the down town district.

CLEVELAND

"Way Down East" is in the third week of an indefinite run at the Euclid Avenue Opera House, and still playing to an average of 2,500 people daily at a top price of $2. Mr. Ottinger, who is managing the show here, says that the receipts for "Way Down East" have exceeded any reached locally by "The Birth of a Nation," the only other two dollar movie shown here.

W. C. Bachmeyer, Metro's Central States district manager, was in town last week, handing out a glad hand to the exhibitors.

Fred G. Sliter, district manager for Robertson-Cole, spent a couple of days in Cleveland during the past week, and expressed his appreciation for the enthusiastic reception of R. C. pictures in this territory.

"Luxury," as interpreted by Ruby De Remer, whom Paul Helleu, noted French artist acclaims America's reigning beauty, will reach Ohio exhibitors through the Ohio Film Classic, 510 Sloan Building. Messrs. Shram have just announced the purchase of this six reel feature, and its immediate distribution.

R. C. Steuve, owner and manager of the Orpheum theatre, Canton, was visiting the Cleveland exchanges on Friday. Mr. Steuve says film conditions in Canton are A-1. "While some exhibitors are kicking about business, I must say," says Mr. Steuve, "that we have had a very satisfactory season. I attribute one cause of success to the serial, "The Lost City," which we have just concluded. I had not run a serial in my house for over four years."

Harry Reavy is back in Cleveland. Reavy, who used to cover the state for Metro, in the days gone by, is now with George Wilson, manager of the local Reelcraft offices. Reavy has been selling film in Illinois during the past few years.

SAN DIEGO

The San Diego State Normal School has been designated as the distributing center for southern California for the films issued through the bureau of commercial economics at Washington, D. C., these films being distributed for free display to universities, colleges, technical schools, community centers, chambers of commerce and various other organizations, educational and fraternal. The films are of two types—industrial and scenic—and vary from one to five reels.

Recently a social "get-together" of the management of the Bush Theatres and their 56 employees was held at the Arcade Dance Hall, following the last show of the evening. The affair was in the nature of a masque ball. President G. A. Bush and Mrs. Bush were crowned as king and queen of the occasion and led the grand march. The committee in charge was composed of Al Stoll, chief operator at the Superba, Jack Gillis, house manager of the Broadway, and Miss Evelyn Parr, cashier of the latter house. Among the selections played by the orchestra was the "Silver Strand Waltz," composed by Mrs. Bush.

J. J. Dorey has succeeded Stuart Taber as editor of "The Chain of Blue," the house organ of the Bush Theatres.

CINCINNATI

D. W. Griffith's big film, "Way Down East," occupies the position of a first class dramatic performance this week in Cincinnati. It is playing at the Lyric, one of Cincinnati's biggest legitimate houses. Booking is for one week, with screenings twice daily, at 2:15 and 8:15.

For goodness sake be warned against the extravagance of cheapness!

The important thing about any purchase is not what you get for the purchase price. The "cheap" purchase is usually the most extravagant.

Simply and briefly: The relation of first cost to final economy is the important thing.

Producers, distributors and exhibitors generally concede that Rothacker Prints are the most desirable from the standpoint of screen brilliancy, security, service and general satisfaction. As a matter of fact, the many savings in Rothacker Prints and Rothacker Service soon cancel the slight difference in first cost over less beautiful and less durable prints.

There are many who still believe that Rothacker Prints are "too expensive" but actually this is not the case. You will probably be very much surprised to learn how little more Rothacker Prints really cost.

Poster Advertising

POOR posters, like poor doctors, will do far more harm than good. Not only does poor advertising fail to pay—it is sure to produce evil results. Therefore the exhibitor should use fine posters—or none!

The production of really fine posters depends altogether upon the genius of the men responsible for their conception, design and execution. Upon that fact the success of the RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. is primarily based—for it has gathered together practically all the big men who have ever been concerned with poster production. It is a highly selected staff of poster artists and poster printers secured at enormous salaries. And not only are these poster creators the best in the profession—but practically all of the big men are included. Further they are trained and directed to act as a perfect unit. In poster production this organization is what the Boston Symphony Society is to music. In both cases all of the real masters are included, which makes serious competition or duplication utterly impossible.

These things are facts. Familiar facts to every man conversant with poster lithography in America. They are easily subject to verification—and they furnish the one and only reason for the vast superiority of the RITCHEY poster.

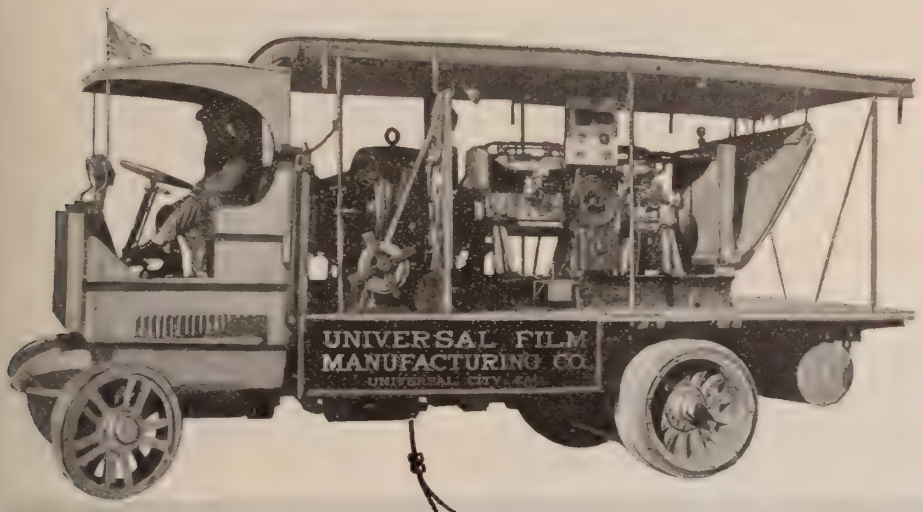
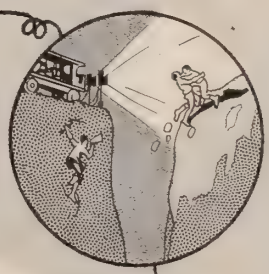
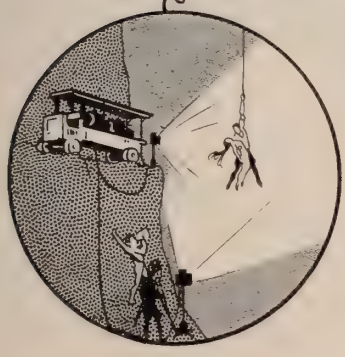
UNIVERSAL'S LIGHT THAT NEVER FAILS!







ONE big reason why you can be sure that those "52 Good Pictures a Year" are better pictures at a better price is because the equipment of Universal City includes every known producing facility. The portable power plants, for instance, are always ready—Universal directors can have light for photographing whenever and wherever needed. The power wagons help make it possible to photograph any location exactly as Nature made it—not as the studio imitates it—and this without expensive delays, last-minute makeshifts or poorly-done hurry-up jobs to save rental on other people's equipment. Which is another reason why you frequently get a Special at less than a Special's special price.

The Problem of the Bad Day

Your profit per show shows you have shows without profit

ONE of the most successful exhibitors in the United States started a few months ago to figure his profit per show.

He found that almost invariably his nights of profit and his afternoons of profit were identical each week.

He was working certain days and nights to pay for the loss on other days and nights.

He tried the special attraction on the poor days and filled his seats at the cost of a special attraction. His attraction took most of his profit.

He tried Ruth Roland in a serial and at one fell swoop he turned one of the poor days into one of the most profitable.

He made that day good for fifteen solid weeks and at the end of that time he had given his patrons the habit of attending his theatre.

"The Avenging Arrow," the finest serial ever made for the most popular serial star is now ready for release.

The greatest opportunity ever given American exhibitors to create the theatre habit in their patrons is here.

A Clean-Clean-Clean Western story of charm and adventure, of romance and thrill, with the greatest star of all.

"I AM THE WOMAN"

A STORY of the Golden West in which woman's pluck and wit win over conspiracy and intrigue. One that makes the blood leap through one's veins with its hair raising and death defying deeds. An actual chapter from the inspiring history of the West written by that most prolific of authors, Tex O'Reilly.

MAD LOVE
With LINA CAVALIERI

SUGGESTS the story of Francesca and Paola, but with the virtue of self-abnegation and sacrifice replacing the human frailties where the body becomes master of the soul. A tale of Latin love in which this beautiful and powerful actress shows at her best in a role that might have been considered Sardou's masterpiece.

The WINDING TRAIL With BUCK MANNING

THE ideal vehicle in which to best show that sterling delineator of western types, Buck Manning. Here is a story that lacks bombast and bravado, one in which heroism bears the Sterling mark stamped upon a tale of the hills where red-blooded men "do things" and where deeds of valor are performed as part of their daily life.

VOICES
With VIOLA ALLEN

SUPREME is the word that best describes this wonderful picture in which elemental passions are rendered subservient to the great spiritual influence that pervades the story. Love, ambition, temptation and conscience are some of the factors that go far toward making this production one that will live in the memory of the spectator for years to come.

OL. XXIII MARCH 12, 1921 No. XII

Close-Up Views

AT a recent, informal gathering of a few men prominent in the industry several keen estimates of the future were made.

We give them here, briefly and disjointedly. They e solid bits of thought, and it seems to us, largely rrect and constructive.

Here they are:

We cannot avoid European competition. Europe art-wise and experienced. Europe can and will oduce pictures to meet the American taste. Today, r instance there are, in New York City, at least ten ctures of German make several of which will be own in American theatres this year.

Europe can produce cheaply. The low cost of tras—in France, for instance, the hire is forty cents day; the small salary paid the star and cast; low chanical labor costs—all combine with the low rate exchange to make production cost in Europe today out one-sixth the American figure.

Consequently the tariff-protection problem arises. he exhibitor and distributor will welcome the reign product; the American producer must protect nself.

Will there be a protective tariff on foreign films to this country? It would seem so.

Foreign competition is one of the greatest problems out to face the American picture industry.

New York City will soon have several long run pic- e theatres (we prophesied this some time ago).

Right now, pictures that could stand longer runs, haps even season runs, are shunted away from New rk with a week's trial.

What is the matter with the Strand, Rivoli and lto?

The Strand opened five years ago with a week run icy. Its immediate success had a big effect upon oduction. Consider the advance in production since years ago. And yet the Strand, just now, and with at hesitation chances a two week run.

The industry is in a state of transition today. Its machinery is being changed all around—to get out of volume production and into the fewer and big attraction stage.

Volume production doesn't pay. Big attractions do.

The production unit is getting down to fewer and fewer pictures a year.

Pictures—the better kind—are being made by a complete and trained staff of specialists. No ego, no alibi, no domination by any one individual, no guesswork. Time and forethought are used.

As pictures grow they will force the spoken play out of New York's legitimate theatres.

The order of the future in this business will be a system, from producer to public, whereby pictures are freely selective.

The public must be allowed to select; the exhibitor must be allowed to select for the public; the distributor must be allowed to select from the producer.

This is economic. All other methods are uneconomic to just the degree they depart from this rule.

If one producer owned all of the theatres of the country and only this producer's pictures were shown in the theatres the motion picture would quickly degenerate into an unprogressive, unsatisfactory and unprofitable attraction.

Why insist then that an exhibitor must book all of one producer's pictures?

The principle is the same.

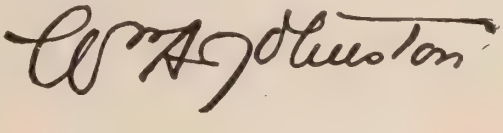
Any producer or distributor, whose good product is arbitrarily shut out of an exhibitor controlled town or section or out of first run representation is justified in building a theatre. Capital will back him in such a venture. And the public will support him when it is informed that good pictures are arbitrarily withheld from it.



National Board of Review Confers with Producers

A special committee of the National Board of Review has been appointed to confer with a Producer's Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry with a view to preventing at its source the production in all motion pictures of detailed presentation of questionable matter and in continuance of its policy of keeping the motion picture free and wholesome for the amusement of the public generally.

The National Board of Review has been conducting a nationwide inquiry conducted through its National Advisory Committee consisting of municipal officers such as Commissioners of Public Safety, License Commissioners and other officials charged with the regulation of commercial amusements in the leading cities of thirty-eight states as to the effects of certain types of motion pictures on the playgoing public.

The correspondents and reports support the judgment of the Executive Committee of the National Board relative to a definite stand against the growing tendency of some producers, directors, and scenario writers to attempt to circumvent the rulings of the National Board, revised in accordance with public opinion and placed in the hands of all motion picture directors in 1916, it is stated.

Wm. S. Smith Made Head of Producers' Ass'n

Wm. S. Smith, general manager of Western Vitagraph, was elected president of the Motion Picture Producers' Association of Los Angeles, at its February meeting. The other officers chosen were:

Abraham Lehr, Goldwyn, first vice president; Joseph W. Engel, Metro, second vice president; Charles H. Christie, Christie Films, third vice president; Frank A. Garbutt, Famous Players-Lasky, treasurer, and W. J. Reynolds, secretary.

Mr. Reynolds, the secretary, reported the thorough success of the producers' new buying corporation, which has already been paying dividends to the members for four months. Articles of standard equipment are purchased in sufficient quantity to supply all studios at a distinct saving over individual orders.

Wheeler Company Leases Studio Space on Coast

One of the most recent film productions to make its appearance on the Rialto is being incorporated under the name of Wheeler Productions, headed by Captain Clifford Slater Wheeler.

Studio space is being leased at Universal City, Cal., for the production of various picture enterprises. The theme of the pictures, now in the making, will touch upon national vital topics portrayed in a dramatically vivid form, it is announced.

Loew Deplores Suggestive Advertising of Films

In a talk which was marked by the decisive attitude he took in his stand, Marcus Loew, president of Loew's Theatres, Inc., deprecated the effect of salacious advertising and emphasized, by the way of contrast, the fecund power of good exploitation in selling pictures, at the weekly meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at the Cafe Boulevard February 24.

"Good exploitation will do the work of the suggestive title and of the suggestive advertisement, and do it far more effectively," was the manner in which Mr. Loew summed up the argument against the salacious advertisement. This conclusion was voiced only after he had uttered a serious warning on the acuteness of the censorship situation which, he contended, the motion picture industry is facing.

This, he declared, was entirely due to the misleading use of titles and advertising material in the presentation of motion picture productions to the public.

Frances Eldridge Brings Suit Against Company

Frances Eldridge, screen star, has brought suit in the New York Supreme Court against the World Motion Picture Corporation for $9,750 for failure to pay for her services and costumes as the star in a production called "The Little Liar," and for further failing to carry out the terms of a contract alleged to have been entered into on November 6, 1920.

According to the complaint filed by P. H. Goldbaum, the attorney for Miss Eldridge, the company was to pay the star a salary as well as the costs of such costumes necessary for the performance of her service. This, it is alleged, has not been done.

Censorship Bills Defeated in Three States; Clayton Bill Amended

Measures for Censorship before Utah and Rhode Island Legislature

THE past week has experienced no abatement of the nation-wide agitation centering around the question of legalized censorship for motion pictures. In Oregon, New Hampshire and Vermont proposed censorship measures were definitely rejected by the legislatures of these three states. Bills providing for state censorship were introduced for legislative action in Rhode Island and Utah. The Clayton Bill, now awaiting action by the New York legislature, has received at least three amendments in committee. Predictions as to eventual fate of the bill at the hands of the state legislators are of a conflicting character. The creation of a motion picture censoring department outside of the police department in Chicago is not likely to be approved, according to late advices from the Windy City. A plan of censorship under which certain detailed police officials will be empowered to censor pictures is now being formulated in Detroit, and it is expected that this scheme will be in operation within a few days. This plan, it is expected, will render censorship entirely unnecessary, says a report from the Detroit correspondent of the News. Word from Harrisburg, Pa., advises that that section of the state law relating to immoral or improper advertising is to be strictly enforced by the state board of censors.

Censorship Bills Defeated

According to wires just received at the headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, both censorship bills were killed in the New Hampshire legislature. In view of the tremendous agitation back of this legislation the early defeat of this intolerant legislation may well be described as a great victory for the organized exhibitors. The leader in the fight was Senator C. H. Bean, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

The exhibitors of Vermont defeated censorship in the closing hours of last week's legislative session.

House Bill No. 172, providing for a state board of motion picture commissioners with the power to appoint any viewers necessary to see and censor all films that come into the state was defeated during the last week of the Oregon legislature. The bill after being amended passed the house. It was reported upon unfavorably by the senate committee, however, and later killed.

Censor Bills Introduced

An act has just been introduced in the state legislature at Providence, R. I., providing for the censoring of motion picture films. The bill provides that it shall be illegal to show any film unless it shall first have been seen and approved by the Rhode Island State Boardof Censors. The board is authorized to disapprove such films as are "cruel, obscene, sacrilegious, indecent or immoral, or such as tend to debase or corrupt morals."

The board is given power to hire inspectors and to make reasonable regulations. Persons aggrieved by its decisions are given the right to apply to the Superior Court in Providence for a remedy. Special permits may be issued for the showing of any film for educational purposes.

Persons found guilty of exhibiting any picture not approved by the censors may be fined not more than $50 or imprisoned not over 30 days. Provision is made for an annual appropriation, but the amount is left to the descretion of the finance committee.

The board, if the bill passes, will consist of three persons, one to be a woman. It is to be named by the Governor with the advice and consent of the senate, each member to serve three years.

A bill, designed to prohibit any manner of entertainment, exhibition or amusement on Sundays and to prevent at all times the showing of any motion pictures in which there is cigarette smoking, has been introduced into the State Legislature of Utah by Representative Parker, of Cache County.

The proposed law makes it unlawful "for any person or persons, corporations or companies to conduct any motion picture exhibition of any sort that is offensive to decency, or is adapted to excite vicious or lewd thoughts, or acts, or which is lewd or obscene or vulgar, or which is of any obscene or indecent or immoral nature, or to be offensive to the moral sense, or in which there is pictured the smoking of cigarettes."

"It shall be unlawful under the provisions of the proposed act for any child under the age of 16 years to attend any motion picture show or any place of amusement where motion pictures are exhibited or any vaudeville or theatrical performance after the hour of 6 o'clock in the evening, unless the child be accompanied by its parents, guardian or an adult person designated by the parent or guardian of such child."

Violation of any provision of the law is classed as a misdemeanor.

Clayton Bill Is Amended

At least three amendments are to be made to the Clayton censorship bill, introduced in the New York State Assembly last week. One amendment provides that news reels will not have to be submitted to the proposed state board of censors, although the board will have jurisdiction over such film and will be given the power to refuse a release on any news picture to which objection has been filed and sustained.

Another amendment requires that the censoring board shall specifically state the grounds on which a picture has been refused permission for release in New York State.

The third proposed amendment provides that it will not be necessary for the censorship board to pass upon all pictures already made, such pictures being given a special approval. Pictures made and released, however, after next July, providing, of course, that the bill becomes a law, must be submitted to the censorship board.

Canon Chase, of Brooklyn, appeared in Albany on Tuesday, March 1. He predicted that the bill would pass saying that there was a strong sentiment for a censorship throughout the entire state. One of the head officials of the State Conference of Mayors, however, made the prediction on the same date, that the bill would not pass, his prediction being made on interviews with several of the more powerful members of the Legislature.

John J. McInerney, who has represented the motion picture industry at various hearings before the New York State Legislature, arrived in Albany, N. Y., on March 2, in an effort to test out the sentiments of assemblymen and senators on the Clayton Bill. Mr. McInerney left on the 3rd for a conference in New York City. While in Albany, he expressed the opinion that much of the criticism against pictures was due to the suggestive titles rather than to the pictures themselves.

A Suggestion

VISUAL proof that a more strict censorship of motion pictures is not needed in New York, might work to the advantage of exhibitors and producers, in presenting to the legislators the method of censoring and cutting objectionable films now being shown in this state. Many legislators admit that they are not frequent patrons of the motion picture shows, and in view of the fact that much of the criticism they hear in capitol corridors is in favor of the censorship measure, they would naturally find it a difficult matter to be of an open mind when the bill comes up for a vote. Both the senate and assembly chambers can be easily darkened for the showing of motion pictures and with a machine installed, when the bill comes up for a hearing, it would be an easy matter to show the adequateness of the method now employed along these lines.

Funds Collected Turned Over to Comptroller of Hoover Relief Fund at Capitol Theatre

AT a meeting at the Capitol Theatre, New York City, March 2, Mr. S. L. Rothafel, chairman for Greater New York, and Mr. Charles Pettijohn, of the National Motion Picture Committee of the Hoover Relief Committee, turned over to James J. Rick, comptroller of the Hoover Relief Fund the first payment of the funds collected by the Motion Picture Industry for the relief of Europe's starving children. Greater New York's first payment was $160,000, and the National Committee's first payment was $500,000. The checks were signed by the chairman and delivered to Mr. Rick before a battery of motion picture cameras, in order that the screens of the theatres in which the funds were collected may themselves publish the news to the motion-picture public who so generously responded to the appeal. Mr. Rothafel explained that the amounts delivered at the meeting were but the first payment, as many of the theatres are still selling matinee tickets, returns for which will be made later. Mr. Pettijohn stated that the National Committee will turn over additional amounts as rapidly as statements are received from sections of the country which either started or continued their drive later than the Metropolis.

The following Greater New York theatres were notably successful, among them being houses of from 250 seats up to 5,000:

Capitol theatre, $10,405.47; Plaza theatre, $1,146.75; Rivoli theatre, $1,049.40; Strand theatre, $1,006.78; Rialto theatre, $729.95; Audubon & Washington theatres (under same management), $1,101.57; Adelphi & Symphony theatres (under same management), $926.15; 44th Street theatre, $567.58; City Hall theatre, $441.00; Olympic theatre, $408.22.

Mrs. Julia Forester and the women's organizations of which she had charge and which gave such splendid co-operation in the sale of tickets in Greater New York was highly commended for their splendid work.

The meeting marked the close of the active drive for the Relief Fund, and the various committees were discharged. Mrs. Forester will remain as Mr. Rothafel's assistant until all funds have been turned over to the Relief Council and accounts settled.

Among those present were: Mrs. Julia Forester; F. L. Rothafel; Charles Pettijohn; James J. Rick; J. E. Chadwick, N. Y. Film Club; Harry H. Buxbaum, Famous Players; H. C. Einstein, Hoover Relief Council; C. L. Yearsley, First National; Mr. Behrens, Behrens Supply Co.; Julian Solomon; Jerome A. Myers; Joseph Seider, and many committee workers.

Censorship Bill Defeated

Chicago Awaits Decision

The third and final public hearing on the proposed censorship ordinance was held last week by the judiciary committee of the Chicago Council and indications are that the creation of a motion picture department outside the police department, as recommended by Attorney Timothy D. Hurley's censorship commission, will not be approved.

Abolition of the pink permit, allowing films to be shown to adults only, and enlargement of the present moving picture censors' powers to give the right to censor posters displayed in front of movie houses, probably will be recommended by the committee.

To Expand Police Powers

The Detroit plan of motion picture censorship, which is expected to make state censorship unnecessary, will be in complete operation within a few days.

The plan provides, first of all, an expansion of the present censorship of moving pictures, which has been in the sole hands of Detective Sergeant Royal A. Baker. The first step in this expansion was made a few days ago when Stephen A. Geitz, a clerk in the record office of the police department, ranking as a patrolman, was detailed by Commissioner Inches to work with Sergeant Baker. In a few days two other associates will be named, the plan provides. All the city officials and private organizations, which have been interested in the plan, have felt that a definite and consistent censorship would meet all the needs of the state.

Issue Warning on Posters

Strict enforcement of the section of the motion picture censorship law relating to "banners, posters, or other like advertising matter," is to be insisted upon by the Pennsylvania Board of Censors.

Under a heading, "Final Warning," in big, black letters, the board this week sent notices to the motion picture industry calling attention to the provision of the Act of May 15, 1915, which requires that all such advertising matter shall contain nothing that is "immoral or improper" and requiring that a copy of any such banner or poster shall be sent to the board to be censored.

The notice calls attention to the fact that the board will not permit the display of anything on posters that has been eliminated from films in the censorship process, and adds by way of further warning: "That any person who violates any of the provisions of this Act, and is convicted thereof summarily before any alderman, magistrate, or justice of the peace, shall be sentenced to pay a fine of not less than twenty-five dollars or more than fifty dollars for the first offense."

Ohio Censor Against Bill

Mrs. Maude Murray Miller, chairman of the Ohio Board of Censors, is opposed to the McCoy bill, according to a statement published recently by The Cleveland News-Leader.

The McCoy bill wants suppressed any motion picture in which there appears a murder, a robbery, a theft, a hold-up, or any act made criminal by the laws of the State of Ohio.

Mrs. Maude Murray Miller points out in the article that the observance of the McCoy bill would put the motion picture theatres of the state completely out of business.

However, Mrs. Miller did offer some suggestions, which, in her opinion, would accomplish what Reverend H. H. Straub, lobbyist of the Lord's Day Alliance of Ohio, is aiming at.

"In order to make its regulations effective," says Mrs. Miller, "the Board of Censors should have charge of all motion picture advertising. Many of the posters now depict scenes which would not be permitted to be shown on any screen in Ohio. Such posters should be eliminated."

"I also recommend, as a cure for the present trouble between the theatres and the church, that there be a larger appropriation for the Ohio Board of Censors, so that it could employ inspectors and other necessary employees to see that its eliminations and orders are carried out."

Mrs. Miller also came out, in the Leader-News article, as heartily in favor of the Sunday movie.

"Four Horsemen" to Run in Mission, Los Angeles

"The Four Horsemen," the big Metro special, has been booked for the Mission theatre, Los Angeles, to open March 9. The first night prices will be two, three and five dollars. Later on the prices will be $1.50 top.

Pennsylvania Exhibitors Meet Next Week; New Yorkers Preparing

Success for Harrisburg Convention; New York Meeting in April

PREPARATIONS are now well under way for the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York in Rochester, N. Y., on April 5, 6 and 7. Arrangements are also virtually completed for the convention to be held next week when the Pennsylvania exhibitors will meet on March 8 and 9 at the Hotel Penn Harris, in Harrisburg, Pa.

John S. Evans, one of the Executive Committee members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America from the State of Pennsylvania, states that he has sent out four urgent appeals to attend. They call attention to the antagonistic legislation pending, to the need of immediate action and above all things to the importance of influencing the members of the Legislature by appeals from exhibitors and from their constituents generally.

This is the first time that a statewide organization in Pennsylvania, without any geographical division, has been attempted and it bids fair to be entirely successful. Philadelphia will send a delegation of about fifty men, while Pittsburg will be largely represented. A striking feature of this convention is the demand for reservations coming from small exhibitors in remote parts of the state. The convention will be opened on Tuesday at 2 P. M. by Mr. Evans and will then at once plunge into business. Sydney S. Cohen, the National President of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and Charles L. O'Reilly, Executive Committee member from New York, will attend the convention. For Wednesday night a big banquet has been planned to which the Governor and a number of prominent state officials have been invited.

Preparations for the great New York State Convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York are in full swing. The convention will be held on April 5, 6, and 7 at the Seneca Hotel in the City of Rochester.

It will be remembered that at the last state convention, Rochester received the unanimous vote of the delegates for the 1921 convention because of the extraordinary good work that Rochester has always done on behalf of organization in this state. The Rochester men are vying with each other to make this convention a real record breaker. Every committee is working energetically and industriously. Two hundred rooms have been reserved for delegates in the Senecca Hotel alone.

I. M. Salyerds, chairman of the Executive Committee, is putting signs in every exchange in the State of New York announcing very conspicuously the time and place of the convention. He has prepared a cartoon, postcard size, showing a man and his wife carrying a suitcase with lettering as follows: "Wifey and I are going to the Rochester convention of the exhibitors of the State of New York. Bring Yours."

Every piece of mail that goes out of the exchanges to New York exhibitors contains reminders of the convention, among them a schedule pocket holder which will give in detail the specific hours of the meetings that will be called together with convention.

There will be a Movie Ball on Wednesday, which, in all probability, will be held in the armory, although nothing definite has been decided. The decorations planned are on a large scale, indeed, they may be described as lavish. There will be a banquet on Thursday night to which prominent members of the State Senate and Assembly have been invited and there have been so far two acceptances. More, no doubt, will arrive in the next few days.

The whole City of Rochester is interested in the convention. The Chamber of Commerce of the Flower City is putting forth every effort for the comfort of the delegation, co-operating with the local organization.

One of the busiest men is John J. Farren, of the Victoria theatre, on whose shoulders rests the responsibility for the success of the Movie Ball. Mr. Farren has an enviable reputation as an indefatiguable worker and this time he is out to beat his best record.

If the present interest in the convention is sustained to the end, the Rochester event will go down into history as the biggest gathering of exhibitors ever known in the State of New York. Reservations are coming in constantly and exhibitors intending to attend, whether delegates or not, should make sure immediately to get attention.

W. A. Calihan is in charge of the publicity for the hall. No better selection could have been made, for, as a result of his activities, the Rochester papers have begun a teaser campaign eight weeks ahead of the convention. Mr. Calihan is a welcome visitor in all the newspaper offices of the Rochester press and a 100% publicity record may confidentially be expected. The Executive Committee, which is keeping the machinery going, consists of I. M. Salyerds, chairman, Victoria theatre; W. H. Kelly, secretary, Victoria theatre; George H. Caffrey, treasurer, Clinton theatre; Mr. George Kress, as chairman of the Entertainment Committee, has a heavy load to carry because the entertainment features of this committee will form an important part of the proceedings. Mr. J. Greenstone, of the Empire theatre, is chairman of the Committee on Concessions. F. J. Koch, of the Lyndhurst, is chairman on Accommodations, while C. Stahler, of the Rose Garden theatre, is chairman of the Banquet committee. Mr. Koch is the man to write to for reservations.

Many important questions will be discussed and acted upon at this convention, and a new set of officers will be elected.

Samuel Goldwyn en Route Abroad Issues Warning

SAMUEL GOLDWYN, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, sailed Saturday, February 26, on the Aquitania. Mr. Goldwyn's statement, issued before his departure, warned against weakening the leadership of the United States in photoplay production.

"America has gained a world's market in motion pictures and, if we are not careful, we will lose it in a short time," he said.

"The proposed legislative limitations on the motion pictures will have a serious financial effect on this big industry which, solely through the aggressiveness of American producers, has established the United States as the leading nation in this new art.

"Foreign film producers are increasing their output with startling rapidity. For America to sacrifice its freedom in this means of expression will therefore result in a sacrifice of world business.

"Objectionable themes in motion pictures are bound to be eliminated. Salaciousness is doomed not only because it is not artistic but because it is not profitable."

Mr. Goldwyn will visit England and continental Europe to study cinema conditions. He will be gone two months.

Missouri Exhibitors May Have Deposit Relief

Proposed legislation engrossed by the State Senate on February 26, will effect serious changes in the advance deposit system to the benefit of Missouri exhibitors. The bills introduced by Senator Penzel, of Butler, Mo., and later amended by the Judiciary Committee, would provide for the establishment of a scheme whereby all exhibitors who are compelled to advance money to exhibitor producers on film productions not ready for delivery, would be required only to deposit their certified cheques with a local bank or trust company. The cheque would be kept there until the film is received by the exhibitor.

The proposed bills were offered at the instigation of numerous Missouri amusement house proprietors who have found continued objections to the existing deposit system.

Wm. Brady in Los Angeles; Exhibitors Oppose Him

William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, arrived in Los Angeles on Saturday of last week after completing a tour of twenty-four states, during which he spoke against proposed censorship legislation and blue law measures. He was met by representatives of local film organizations and tendered a banquet under the auspices of the Allied Amusement Industries of California. At the dinner he made a speech urging united action against national adverse legislation, and his remarks were warmly applauded by those present. Eugene H. Roth, chairman of the Allied Amusement Industries, writes the National Association's headquarters that the Allied Amusement Industries has pledged Mr. Brady "their support nationally."

Mr. Brady's arrival in Los Angeles met with no favorable response on the part of the organized exhibitors of Southern California. At a meeting called on Monday evening by William D. Taylor, president of the Directors' Association, at which representatives of various motion picture organizations were present, representatives of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Southern California and Arizona resented the presence of Mr. Brady and declared their determination to withdraw, anticipating the formation of a body affiliated with National Association. Upon being persuaded that the new body was not to be affiliated with the National Association, the theatre owners remained.

Frank A. Garbutt of the Producers' Association presented a plan for an anti-censorship organization with members from every department of the industry. Reorganization and election of officers are to be taken up after the completion of membership drive and securing of a state charter. The initiation fee is to be $2 and the annual dues $6, payable semi-annually.

In a wire just received from Glenn Harper, secretary of the Theatre Owners of Southern California and Arizona, the statement is made that the newly formed organization will confine its activities to state legislative matters. "Brady was in no way responsible for this meeting," reads Harper's wire. "His reception here was met with opposition by exhibitors who stand 100 per cent Theatre Owners of America and Sydney S. Cohen."

Mayors' Conference Will Discuss Censorship

Motion picture censorship in this State will undoubtedly be one of the subjects to be discussed at the midwinter meeting of the New York State Conference of Mayors, which will be held in Albany during the coming week. It is understood that the Conference, while not actively opposing the censorship bill, recently introduced by Assembly Clayton, will nevertheless file its formal protest to the passage of the measure.

Added Features for A. M. P. A. Dinner at Biltmore

ADDED starters have been entered in "The Naked Truth" event, the formal annual function of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at the Biltmore Hotel on March 4. As a result of added invitation acceptances and added events on the entertainment program the function promises to eclipse even the anticipations of the instigators who prepared the program when the dinner was first planned.

Harry Reichenbach has sent word from Chicago that he will surely be on hand to take part in the entertainment. In addition to providing extemporaneous entertainment, Harry will have a leading part in the headline act of the bill entitled "The Big Five."

Two additional acts have been announced on the program within the last week. Vivian Moses, of Fox Pictures, is responsible for the first one which will be nameless, but which was written by Mr. Moses, Leslie Jordon and E. P. McNamee, who will take the principal characters in the sketch. This will be a travesty on putting over a "sure fire" road show flivver in limousine style.

"A Mere Detail" is the title of the skit written by Dan Carson Goodman and described as an economic tragedy in one reel with a filler which will be enacted by Maurie Meyers, Claud LaBell, Vincent Trotta, Fred Baer, E. P. McNamee and W. F. Eberhardt.

Although formal dress will be worn by most of the members, it is not essential, and members of the motion picture industry who find themselves in the city that evening are extended a cordial invitation to put in an appearance at the Biltmore where Tom Wiley, chairman of the committee on arrangements, will be glad to provide accommodations for them at this dinner.

John Storey Sales M'g'r of Ass'd Exhibitors

John E. Storey, for the past year assistant to Elmer Pearson, director of exchanges, of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has been named sales manager of the reorganized Associated Exhibitors, Inc. Mr. Storey assumed his new duties on March first.

E. A. Eschmann, feature sales manager of Pathe for nearly a year, succeeds Mr. Storey as assistant to the director of exchanges.

Mr. Storey is one of the oldest members of the Pathe sales force, which, incidentally, he joined nearly four years ago as manager of the Kansas City branch. From that post he was named manager of the Pacific Coast Division, and his work in that capacity was so noteworthy that almost exactly a year ago, he was brought to the home office as assistant to Director of Exchanges Pearson.

Middletown House Gives $416 to Hoover Drive

Word from Manager Theo. C. Chifos, of the Sorg theatre, Middletown, Ohio, has been received to the effect that the sum of $416.67 has been realized in the theatre's drive for the Hoover Fund Film Campaign. The proceeds have been turned over to the Relief Fund Committee.

Censorship in Disfavor in District of Columbia

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who have charge of the regulation of amusements in the Capital City, have decided against censorship. This is their decision after a meeting held Monday afternoon, February 28. Although censorship was disowned, however, more stringent police regulations seem inevitable. The meeting was instigated by the amendments introduced by Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts.

The chair was occupied by Commissioner Hettrick who gave the proponents of the Censorship Ordinance the first chance to be heard. Among those who spoke for censorship were the Rev. Lucius Clark, the Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, Charles A. McMahon, William McK. Clayton, Mrs. S. N. Woodley, president of the National Association for Moving Picture Betterment and Mary Wright Johnson, representing the Federation of Women's Clubs. Their arguments moved were mainly to the effect that drastic regulations were needed.

Sidney Cohen appeared at hearing on behalf of Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and in addition the exhibitors organizations throughout the country cooperated with the Washingtonians through direct appeals to their representatives.

One of the features of the occasion was an impassioned speech by D. W. Griffith who told of the dangers of censorship, not only to motion pictures but to the liberties of all American citizens. Other speakers against censorship were A. Bruce Brylawski, Robert N. Harper, Representative Geo. H. Timkham, of Massachusetts; Maurice Rosenberg and Thomas J. Donovan, president of the Central Citizens' Association.

At the conclusion of the hearing the impression prevailed that the commissioners would reject the Draconic proposals of the Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts.

New Orleans Building Restrictions Questioned

The right of the city of New Orleans to prohibit property owners from establishing a motion picture theatre in a section, declared by special ordinance to be devoted exclusively to residential purposes, was challenged directly last week by mandamus proceedings instituted in the Civil District Court.

The action was brought by Walter J. Falgout and Edward M. Gordon, of Orleans and Jefferson Parishes, respectively, and it seeks to have the judicial tribunal compel the city of New Orleans and its engineer, John Klorer, issue them a permit to construct and operate a picture show on property surrounded by Carrollton avenue, Sycamore, Short and Panola streets.

March 4 was set as the date when the city must show cause why the court should not require the issuance of the permit.

Franchise Holders Condemn Suggestive Titles and Advertising

A GENERAL call to producers to avoid every suggestion of salaciousness in titles, sub-titles or advertis- matter of motion picture productions s sounded by seventy-five exhibitors m Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas at the ual meeting of Associated First Na- al Pictures of Iowa in session at Des ines, Iowa, on February 14. Metro to Adopt Unit Plan of Production on Coast

Metro has adopted the unit plan of production, according to reports received from the West Coast. Hereafter Bayard Veiller, Maxwell Karger, Rex Ingram, Winchell Smith, Nazimova, George Baker, Dallas Fitzgerald and Wesley Ruggles will each supervise an individual production.

All Metro subjects, after the present ones are completed, will be made on the Coast. Joseph Engle, treasurer, of Metro, left for the East to work out final details. Each unit will have their own continuity writers. Four directors will make all star productions.

Neutral Agency Needed in Film Industry

By W. W. Hodkinson

THE entire motion picture industry is seriously disturbed by the constant battle between producers on the one hand and the exhibitors on the other. The exactions of certain producing groups have undoubtedly worked a hardship on the exhibitor. Producers who are wasteful in their methods, who pay unconscionable sums of money for stars and stories, whose whole business structure is reared on politics and favoritism rather than on a civil service basis of merit are bound to get deeper and deeper into the mire. Some of them are now seeking to escape by laying hold of the exhibitors' legitimate profits and dragging the exhibitors down into the mire with them. The resentment and resistance of the exhibitor under these circumstances are altogether natural and quite legitimate.

On the other hand, there are many localities in which the exhibitors by reason of booking combinations have the upper hand, and I regret to say they are inclined to be just as tyrannical as the grasping and over-capitalized producer. A producer is entitled to a legitimate profit on his creation just as the exhibitor is entitled to a steady supply of good quality pictures at reasonable prices. Either element working alone and with no vision beyond its immediate financial aim is running in the wrong direction.

There must be some method of equitable arbitration. There must be some institution which deals fairly with the producer, encouraging the producer of merit and talent and discouraging the production of inferior pictures. Such an institution to insure a constant supply of quality must set adequate rewards and incentives before the producers. By a process of judicious sifting such an institution will always be in a position to supply the exhibitor with successful box office attractions.

The present struggle between producers and exhibitors is largely caused by a surplus of inferior pictures which the market cannot digest. If a neutral and competent agency applying a selective machinery of proved value had always been functioning in this industry the present destructive antagonisms would never have been known.

E. W. Hammons Back From Los Angeles Trip

E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Films Corporation of America and its distributing subsidary, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., returned to New York this week after a month's trip to Los Angeles. While on the coast he held conferences with the various units producing pictures for Educational and made a number of suggestions which were prompted by his study of exchange and exhibiting conditions through the United States and Canada.

Mr. Hammon found the film producing colony greatly interested in the progress that has been made by Educational, and the plans of a number of producers of short subjects were laid before him. However, he stated that while some important preliminaries had been completed, he was not yet ready to announce acquisition of further product.

$100,000 Worth of Negatives Burn on Coast

A fire, originating in the cutting room of the C. L. Chester Studio Administration Building, Los Angeles, on Saturday morning, February 26, caused a loss of negatives whose value has been estimated at $100,000. The fire spread through the cutting room to the big vault containing the films, burning them all. The vault adjoining was not damaged.

The fire will not affect the Chester releases for Federated, and negatives of all these subjects to be released in March and April are being shipped. Tom McGowan was badly burned in attempting to save the negatives.

Protests Against Confiscation of Films

A vigorous protest on behalf of the motion picture industry, against the alleged seizure and sale of motion pictures by the collector of customs of New York has been lodged with the Secretary of the Treasury by Paul H. Cromelin, president of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation and chairman of the Exporters Division of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

The protest was based upon a notice advertising the sale of a miscellaneous lot of film consisting of approximately 171 reels, which had been sent to the seizure room of the Customs House and advertised for sale at public auction on February 23, according to word from the National Association's headquarters. Mr. Cromelin, in a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, states that it is not customary in the picture industry to sell films outright, but to lease them, and that the sale of any films by the customs officials for unpaid duties is a dangerous practice.

"There are a number of pirates in this industry who are watching every opportunity to get possession of films such as these, which they have put out with disregard to the original owners and lessees," wrote Mr. Cromelin in his protest to Washington.

"Regardless of whose property may be involved, this high-handed, arbitrary action, practically without notice, is unjust and unfair to a great industry whose representatives have been assured in Washington such a course would not be taken and we insist and demand that the property of motion picture exporters and importers be protected against such confiscatory action as is announced in the notice of sale complained of."

Music and the Picture

The Man in the Music

By Charles D. Isaacson

AST week I pointed out how it is possible to add an interest to the music of your theatre by making the composers em something more than names on paper. ius, I told of Beethoven, the deaf man, of rdi, the tall, lovely old man, of Mozart, io just couldn't grow up.

Now, if your audience can be made to feel t presence of Beethoven whom for instance y use a movement of a symphony, you have additional grip on the listeners. You can ject the personality of Beethoven, through sles, publicity, program notes, etc.,—using the y sentences I did last week.

So, with the others.

Now, at the request of a great many of my rders, I shall from time to time, draw little rd portraits of the great masters of music. t I cannot pause longer than the present ie with that one subject. There are so ny topics, crying for attention—I hope that r inquirers will pardon my seeming failure o follow your expressed desires.

The following portraits are from my book ace to Face with Great Musicians"—

MENDELSSOHN

It was a day in spring, as it should have n, when we went out to meet Felix Mendelsh. Buds about to bloom, little green sprout- grasses taking their first modest glimpse the world—youth scampering and laughing, air fraught with a myriad of throbbing ulses.

And then there was Mendelssohn.

If Fragonard had ever lived to paint the rait of this man he would have repree ed him with dashing fauns and roguish e cupids, all grouped with fastidious arngement around the oval of the frame.

Here was the very personification of the on when little pussy willows stick their y heads out on the green stalk. There is ing sad in springtime. There can be noth- but laughter and victory. In springtime never thinks about the morrow; one never s beneath the countenance of things; one r philosophizes. Just life and living.

A man of small frame, delicate as a lily, suggesting the power and endurance of an —his large, luminous eyes seemed to have depth and liquid softness of a forest lake. moved forward, loosely jointed and lightly, hand extended in welcome. A deep, rich e spoke to us as in a chant.

In the first moment we were with him we zed the whole past of his life—his utter dom from worry or woes. In the face of man who has known an obstacle there is ten the struggle on his brow. Who has by sheer dint of his own acquired power scribes his biography in his whole future g. Nothing of this sort was to be seen Mendelssohn. In him spoke Springtime—hich all is victory—just life and living.

Nurtured in the bosom of the wealthiest ly in all Hamburg, the grandson of the test philosopher of the time, the son of g, earnest parents, himself handsome, d, brilliant, amazingly promising, the idol of the idols, the friend from his boyhood days, of Goethe and Zelter, a pianist at five, a composer at eight, a world figure at seventeen, the best beloved musician in Europe at twenty-five, what could the world seem to Mendelssohn but a place made for him to grow up in, peopled with individuals created to please him, to aid him, to listen to him, to praise him, to glorify his name?"

BULLETIN OF THE ASSOCIATION OF MUSICAL AND MOTION PICTURE INTERESTS

WE, the undersigned committee, send greetings to the field. Our first meeting as the Special Committee of Five is being held too late to catch this issue of The News. Full report next week. We expect to draft by-laws, and constitution, and to summon the Executive Board representing all elements of the allied arts.

BRAHMS

"Here is the picture we saw coming along the road:

"A short man, walking so briskly as to make his little, squodgy legs do terrific labor. How he went so quickly and so straight was a problem, for the little frame was corpulent. His hat was off—he crushed it in his hand at the side, behind his back he held his other hand, somewhat in the attitude of the Little Corporal of Corsica. Despite the warmth of the day the man was clothed in a long coat, most too big for him about the arms and the neck.

"As we came nearer the little bulk became more distinguishable in the details. A splendid head on the broad shoulders came out of a short neck—a head that instantly arrested attention. Despite a wealth of beard and mustache it was a forehead that was most amazing broad, massive, and intellectually dominant. In the eyes spoke mastery and strength; the whole face seemed heroic, Jove-like. He was smoking a cigarette, puffing away like a steam-engine.

"It was Johannes Brahms. We would attempt to make his acquaintance here, without our formal introductions. So we stood stock still and waited for him. He noted the action, and for a moment it seemed as if he were about to turn about face and give us a glimpse of his back. But he went on, and as he was about to pass us he snorted, "Good morning."

"This is Mr. Brahms?" we asked. "Johannes Brahms, the famous composer?"

"He looked us up and down sharply: 'You mean my brother—he is over the hill—but he is the most unamiable musician in the country." And he went on, leaving us nonplussed with mortification."

BACH

"In a great wide-armed chair sits the master of the house, smoking a deep-bowled pipe and sipping occasionally at a mug of creamy ale. On his lap are two of his children—on the floor are several more, and hustling around the stove and dishes are more Bach boys and girls aiding their mother.

"Supper is being made ready—and that, despite its daily occurrence, is an event of importance. Steaming pots bubble joyously, the youngsters chatter, clatter, the old man continues his smoking, dropping a word now and then to the baby on his knees.

"As we come into the room Mr. Bach jumps up, almost upsetting the pipe, the mug, and the children.

"'Company—Good. Welcome, my dear people,' he says, in his gruff, deep voice, which comes from the very pit of that huge paunch. 'Anna,' he shouts, 'we have company—they will stay with us for supper,' and listening to no entreaties, he persuades us to sit down at the table.

"'Yes, we dine early; it leaves more time for work afterwards,' he explains, 'and besides the children need to get to sleep.'

GLUCK

"Think of him, towering over the embroidered, bewigged philosophers. Tall, massive and broad-shouldered, with his head always pushed forward with a kind of defiance. His face, deeply pock-marked—in repose, very red and savage; in anger, white with the pock-marks blackly contrasting and savage. His hair was mussed most often, with the powder on in careless fashion. It was a big face, round and hard in its outlines and the cut of the features, the eyebrows raised in querying manner. One could but think that the Creator in molding his contour had been very determined about it, and left very little of softness to mark the soul of the man. There was an intelligence about the eyes, however, that, if you looked intently, seemed to give out a hint of the mountains, the mountains in the far distance which you wanted always to approach, but which always seemed to move further as you came closer. A poet? Not in that frame, and yet, and yet—he was! It was difficult to dissociate the idea of the animal; that thick neck was like a boar's, his heavy hands seemed rather fitted to continue to swing the ax than the conductor's baton—and when he spoke or sang it was done so boisterously that it made you move back a bit, away from him. He played the harpsichord, and he did it as your ice man might. He smashed at the keyboard, he pounded it—no little grace notes, oh, no. Chords, heavy, sonorous, orchestral in their effects. Well, just like all his music in fact.

"When he entered the parlors of the bigwigs of the day he seemed to be so much out of place, awkward, stiff, and sulky. He spread all

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST

The Adams Theatre Company has started work on the new theatre to be located on the north side of Adams, between Wabash and State, which they expect, will be opened early in June. The building at present occupying that site will be completely remodelled and turned into a four hundred and fifty seat theatre which is to be modern and de luxe in every respect. The officers of the Adams Theatre Company are Harry N. Ortenstein, president; Harold Leopold, vice-president; M. W. Wells, treasurer, and Milton Katz, secretary. The first three have been associated together for sometime as owners of the Vista, New Park and Twentieth Century Theatres on the southside.

Max Goldstine has completed arrangements for running pictures at Orchestra Hall from May 9 until October 2. The first big feature to be shown there will be "Passion," the imported picture released by First National, which has proved such a tremendous success at the Capitol, New York, and wherever else shown to date, and which Mr. Goldstine believes, will be good for a three month's run. Following "Passion," "Man, Woman, Marriage" the Holubar picture starring Dorothy Phillips, will be shown for an indefinite period. Mr. Goldstine left for Los Angeles on a combined business and pleasure trip on February 26 and expects to return to Chicago about March 19.

H. H. Haven, who has charge of Bartola Musical Instrument Company's sales in the Northwest, was visiting Chicago headquarters in the Mallers Building last week getting in touch with the latest features which have been incorporated in the new Barton organ. Mr. Haven reports organ sales are holding up wonderfully in his territory and that his company is doing a splendid business.

Oscar A. Doob, exploitation representative for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the Chicago territory, and for a number of years associated in the advertising and publicity field of motion pictures, has resigned from the Paramount organization to become advertising and sales promotion manager of the Lake & Export Coal Corporation. This step will continue Doob in association with Harris P. Wolfberg, former Paramount district manager, who recently resigned to become vice-president and general sales manager of the Lake & Export Coal Corporation. Before coming to Chicago Doob was publicity and advertising manager for the Libson Chain of theatres in Ohio, and before that dramatic editor of several metropolitan newspapers. While in Chicago he originated the "What's Your Hurry?" traffic tieup exploitation which has come into national use.

One of the biggest film deals ever put over in the Chicago territory was consummated last week shortly after Joseph H. Gilday took charge of the Chicago office of Famous Players-Lasky. It was the signing of contracts by Ascher Brothers for the next six months product of Famous Players- Lasky Corporation, and involves service for virtually all the Ascher houses in Chicago and includes the much anticipated Cecil B. De Mille super special, "Forbidden Fruit."

Watterson R. Rothacker and Douglas D. Rothacker are back in Chicago after a hurried visit to New York. Watterson Rothacker plans to leave for California about the first of March.

As a special attraction in connection with the showing of "The Hidden Light" at Barbee's Loop Theatre, Chicago, which goes in there March 27 for an indefinite run, the management through Gollos Enterprises has arranged for the personal appearance of Dolores Cassinelli, the star of the picture. Miss Cassinelli is a Chicago girl, having been educated at the Holy Name Convent, and entered upon her screen career at the old Essanay plant on Argyle Street. "The Greek Singer," "When Soul Meets Soul" and "Do Dreams Come True" were some of the pictures she made. Gollos Enterprises have secured the rights to "The Hidden Light" for the central west territory and have outlined an extensive exploitation campaign. Irving Mack, who is handling the advertising for Gollos Enterprises, as well as for Barbee's Theatre, is in charge of the exploitation.

Ascher Brothers have made arrangements to put before their public the Lester Cuneo series released by Capital, is the announcement from Capital headquarters in Chicago. The Cuneo pictures will be shown throughout the entire chain of Ascher houses. It is a distinct compliment to the entertainment qualities incorporated in the Cuneo features to have the powerful Ascher chain accord them 100 per cent booking, as has been done.

Miss Betty Compson, noted heroine of "The Miracle Man," was recently signed up for five years to appear in Paramount Pictures, stopped off in Chicago last Sunday, and the stop, although only three hours long, was made the excuse for much publicity in the Chicago papers.

Gollos and Gollos Film Company, with offices in the Masonic Temple, have just purchased for their territory the Burton King production entitled, "Every Man's Price," starring Grace Darling. George and Harold Gollos, owners of the Gollos and Gollos Film Company, were so well pleased with the results obtained on their recent release, "The Sacred Flame," that they have closed a contract for the picture for the state of Indiana. George Gollos has just returned from a trip to New York where he spent two weeks looking over the state rights field and closed several contracts for features, names of which will be announced later.

Lillian Walker and Harry Reichenbach were the speakers at the regular bi-weekly luncheon of the Motion Picture Press Club, which was held at the Stratford Hotel last week. Mr. Reichenbach, who was in Chicago putting over "Outside the Law," gave a clever talk on how to put stories across in the daily press.

Favorite Players' Film Corporation have recently added a number of important features to the list of pictures they are releasing in this territory and Manager Ike Van Ronkel is very much pleased over the reception exhibitors are giving them. They include, "The Way Women Love," and "Luxury," both featuring Rubye De Remer and produced by Arrow Film Company, for which Mr. Van Ronkel has secured the Illinois and Indiana rights. "The Wrong Woman," featuring Olive Tell and Montague Love, will be released in Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin. Favorite Players Film Corporation have also arranged with Gollos Enterprises to distribute "Whispering Devils," "The Hidden Light," and "She Played and Paid," in Indiana. Next month Favorite Players will release in Illinois and Indiana, the new Clara Kimball Young production, "Straight From Paris."

A pre showing of "Black Beauty," the widely heralded Vitagraph special production, was held last week at the Ziegfeld Theatre, and Manager Tarbell was congratulated by many of the exhibitors present on the excellence of the picture and its box office value.

Maurice Fleckels is spending several days in Chicago and is busy conferring over the future plans for the rapidly expanding business of Favorite Players Film Corporation. Art Telser, formerly with Goldwyn, has been made sales manager for Favorite Players and already is making an excellent record, the week ending February 26th having been the biggest in the point of cash receipts and new contracts, in the history of this exchange.

Max Hyman boarded a train for California Monday, where he will spend several weeks vacationing around Los Angeles and Hollywood.

Having completed its first month at the Randolph theatre, "The Kid" goes merrily along, continuing its second record-breaking month at Jones, Linick & Schaefer's house. Extra performances continue to be given, the schedule being to start at 8:30 in the morning and repeating at intervals of one hour, the last show starting promptly at midnight. The Rose, Boston and the Alcazar theatres, recently acquired by Jones, Linick & Schaefer, already have begun to bloom under the management of this progressive firm and now sparkle with new paint, new draperies and new carpets.

Celebrated Players announce the closing of a contract for the first Chicago showing of "The Servant in the House," the first of the Wallgreene specials, with Barbee's Loop theatre for the week of March 6. Celebrated Players' Prizma Master Pictures come in for double recognition this week, "The Melody of the Flowers" being featured in both the Riviera and Balaban & Katz's New Tivoli.

Irene Hunt, who has been playing important parts in pictures for several years, has been selected for the role of Emma Gannell, wife of Tom Gannell, the part enacted by Frank Elliott. Miss Hunt recently supported Viola Dana in "Cinderella's Twin," which just has been released by Metro. Jane Atherton, a niece of Gertrude Atherton the writer will have an important part in the production, as will Dan Todd. Miss Atherton just has made her film debut, but shows promise of rare ability.

"Colorado." It is her first appearance in a Universal picture for several years, her last Universal roles having been in support of Harry Carey.

Others in the cast are Charles Newton, Lillian West, Charles I. Moyne, Leonard Clapham, Da Crimmins and Rosa Gore, besides dozens of others who participate in the mine rescue scenes. The play was adapted for the screen by Wallace Clifton.

The premier showing of the two reel picture which the Rothacker Company produced for the Chicago Y. M. C. A. Hotel, was staged for Chicago officials of the Young Men's Christian Association. How the "Y" Hotel can be of service to the young men strangers is pictured in a dramatic way. The film will be given wide circulation in Chicago.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

The Jucklins—

Great! Monte Blue is just beginning to establish himself, and his following grows with each picture. Business excellent during run. (East.)

Rather good, but the name is its worst enemy. Did not draw at all. (West.)

Fair picture. The title is poor. Average box office value. (West.)

Frontier of the Stars—

Not up to Meighan's standard. His own work excellent, but support poor and not worthy of him. Business good, for Meighan is a great drawing card for me. (East.)

This one went over big and continued so during run. Audiences well pleased with the story. (West.)

Paying the Piper—

A slender story produced to bring Dorothy Dickson into pictures. Not a strong box office attraction. (East.)

Found this to be a fair picture. Business about average. (West.)

This display on "The Scoffer," four columns by eighteen inches, was used by the Victory theatre, Tacoma, Wash.

A great attraction. This one brought large box office receipts. (West.)

Second week to fair business. (East.)

Forbidden Fruit—

DeMille's pictures always draw immense crowds. This was proved interesting, but not startling. Patrons like the atmosphere of affluence which permeates these pictures. Constantly large attendance. (Middle West.)

This one packed the house every performance. A very fine entertaining picture and patrons seemed well pleased. (West.)

A fairly good picture with business about as usual. (West.)

The Inside of the Cup—

Did a capacity business. A prereview given for the benefit of ministers caused widespread comment, which added to its power of attraction. (Middle West.)

Good story, well done. Pleased the masses. We had a satisfactory two week run. (West.)

A good picture with which we had more than usual business. (West.)

The Rookie's Return—

About the average Douglas MacLean type of film. Amusing farce, which drew well. (Middle West.)

Extremely good picture. 100 per cent entertainment. Good cast, good story, clean and wholesome. (West.)

Straight Is the Way—

Fair. The plot of the picture is weak and it does not hold the attention of the audience. (East.)

Brewster's Millions—

This is a splendid picture and went over big with our audiences. Played to large business for one week. (Middle West.)

What Happened to Jones—

A good Washburn picture, but it takes something with a little more punch to get the money out here. (West.)

Silk Hosiery—

Failed to draw. Our spring style show saved the day. (West.)

Education of Elizabeth—

Women came to see Billie and the gowns. Did better than expected, as she has not done well at all of late. (West.)

A fair picture. Nothing extraordinary. Average business. (West.)

The Passionate Pilgrim—

An entertaining picture, which went over big. Packed houses during run. (West.)

O'Malley of the Mounted—

A sure-fire box office attraction and a great picture. (West.)

Midsummer Madness—

Good picture doing a fair business. (East.)

Opinions varied—some liked it immensely, others panned it vigorously. Business only fair. Personal opinion—it's a wonder! (East.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Dinty—

One of the best pictures seen in this city in many months. Packed them in all week. Many favorable comments on excellent work of Wesley Barry. (East.)

An average picture with business about as usual. (West.)

Had fair business with this one. Audiences ordinarily pleased. (West.)

The Kid—

May be ranked as one of Chaplin's best. It continues to hold out crowds at every performance. (Middle West.)

Kept crowds standing out on the sidewalk for a week. Now on second big week. (Middle West.)

Wonderful business from morning till night. Great picture. (East)

A great attraction. Going big on second week of showing. (West.)

Passion—

Played it one week to excellent business at almost double regular admission price. Think it a splendid production and a box office winner. (East.)

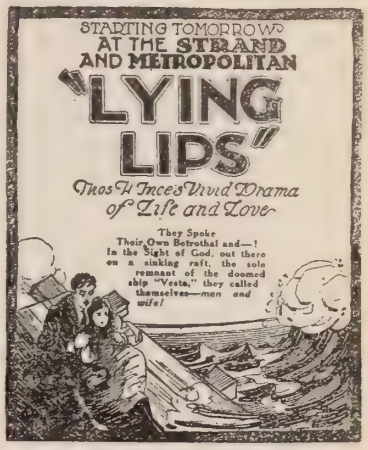
One of the greatest films ever shown here. Played to capacity houses during its entire two week's run. (Middle West.)

Still pulling splendidly. Big business. (East.)

Going big on third week's showing. A wonderful production. (West.)

The Truth About Husbands—

Good picture. Appeals only to women. Fair business. (Middle West.)



STARTING TOMORROW
AT THE STRAND AND METROPOLITAN
"LYING LIPS"
Thos H. Ince's Vivid Drama of Life and Love
They Spoke Their Own Betrothal and—! In the Sight of God, out there on a sinking raft, the sole remnant of the doomed ship "Vesta," they called themselves—man and wife!
BUT HERE IS THE SAME LINEAGE
ILLUSTRATED ---- TAKE YOUR PICK.

Double column by five inch display for "Lying Lips," by the Palace theatre, Buffalo

---

A fair picture. Had average box office receipts. (West.)

Woman in His House—

A very nice, entertaining picture and brought more than usual business. (West.)

Curtain—

Fair picture, with business just about fair. MacDonald not very popular here. (East.)

The Scoffer—

A good clean picture with a punch. A little heavy, but a good comedy will remedy this. (West.)

METRO

Cinderella's Twin—

This little star always draws well for me, and this was not as clever as "The Chorus Girl's Romance," business was almost as good. Consider it a good business-getter. (East.)

Fairly entertaining and patrons were pleased. Good business. (West.)

The Marriage of William Asche—

As stilted on the screen as it was in book form, but drew largely on the strength of the author's name. (Middle West.)

The Great Redeemer—

Mediocre picture bringing only fair business. (East.)

Billions—

A good picture. About the usual business. (West.)

Without Limit—

Considered one of the strongest plays of the year by critics and patrons alike. Opened to fair business but picked up steadily during the week. (Middle West.)

Third of a page on "The Snob," the work of Harold Wendt, publicity director of the Rivoli theatre, Toledo, Ohio

GOLDWYN

Prisoners of Love—

Betty Compson's beauty and personality exploited in a story containing nothing new. Business was fair. (East.)

Earthbound—

Above the average, but the action is rather slow, and this type of picture may not please everybody. It is the kind that will draw well among the intellectuals. (Middle West.)

Boys Will Be Boys—

Very entertaining and seemed to please. Good business during run. (West.)

Milestones—

Very pretty picture and very well done but not much of a business getter. (East.)

ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS

Lying Lips—

Proving one of the biggest hits ever shown here. It has been held for the third week—a record duplicated only once in this city. (Middle West.)

One of Ince's greatest films. Has been held for the second week, and is still drawing big. (Middle West.)

A fine production, vastly entertaining. Brought good business. (West.)

This "The Rookie's Return" 'ad. is by Phil Gersdorf, manager of the Imperial theatre, Jacksonville, Fla.

Is now on its second big week. House packed at all performances. Large box office receipts. (West.)

Very good feature which brought good returns. (West.)

A Thousand to One—

An ordinary picture with which we had poor business during run. (West.)

Despite unusual opposition, it proved a good box office attraction for the week. (Middle West.)

REALART

Ducks and Drakes—

Did good business all week. (East.)

All Soul's Eve—

Syrupy sweet and unconvincing. Would not have played it if could have been avoided. Business—just what I expected—poor! (East.)

Her First Elopement—

Good feature which seemed to entertain the audience. Good business. (West.)

The Plaything of Broadway—

Fairly entertaining picture that did average business. (West.)

FOX

Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court—

10th week and still going big. This speaks for itself. (West.)

The Thief—

Fairly good feature which brought more than the usual business. (West.)

The Road Demon—

This sure did go over big and the box office proved it. Patrons well satisfied. (East.)

ROBERTSON-COLE

So Long Letty—

A fair picture well sprinkled with genuine humor and some striking bathing scenes. Drew a capacity house all week. (Middle West.)

Mistress of Shenstone—

Ran well for three days, rest of week about average. (East.)

Kismet—

A picture which appeals to the "better class" house. For such an audience this production cannot be surpassed. Big business for first week and opened well for the second. (East.)

Big Happiness—

A good production and fairly entertaining. Good box office value. (West.)

VITAGRAPH

Dead Men Tell No Tales—

The best dramatic, action picture I have played in years. Business poor at beginning, picked up on Wednesday and finished the week in most satisfactory shape. (East.)

Attracted large crowds of patrons who like melodrama. Title gives clew to character of story so those who came were prepared for thrills and got 'em. No picture for anyone with nerves. (Middle West.)

The Whisper Market—

Rather a good story and box office showed that it pleased the patrons. (West.)

UNIVERSAL

The Fire Cat—

This is a good one and was well liked by the audiences, consequently we had good business. (West.)

PATHE

The Devil—

Work of star pleasing but story failed absolutely to interest, and played to lowest business since opening of this theatre. (Middle West.)

One of the photoplay masterpieces of the age. Wonderful production. Excellent acting. But a picture that will appeal only to the discriminating. (Middle West.)

UNITED ARTISTS

The Love Light—

Too long. Out of date story. Mary does good work but public would not accept war story theme. Picture booked for two weeks. Business not warranting one week, the 2nd week was cancelled. (West.)

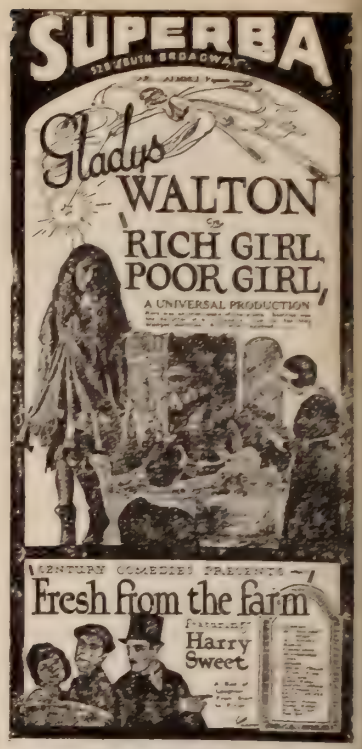
Even better than other Pickford pictures. Both story and star are in highest local favor. (Middle West.)

HODKINSON

Brute Master—

This picture proved very satisfactory. (East.)

"Hold Your Horses" display, four columns by ten inches by the California theatre, Los Angeles



Here is a three column by twelve inch display on "Rich Girl, Poor Girl," by the Superba theatre, Los Angeles

EQUITY

Hush—

This feature went over very big and this was warranted as it is a fine production. (West.)

STATES RIGHT

Isobel, or the Trail's End—

Very entertaining picture. Not quite up to the standard of the last few Curwood pictures. Good average. (Middle West.)

Excellent story, well acted and fairly directed. Author known and liked. (Middle West.)

Splendid production. Received unstinted praise. Prologue especially praised. Opened to full houses at two first-run theatres simultaneously. (Middle West.)

A splendid picture with well sustained suspense and beautiful photography and settings. Went over big at this house. (Middle West.)

The Servant in the House—

Interesting and well directed picture which should be sure fire attraction for high class audiences. We did excellent business with it for one week. (Middle West.)

The County Fair—

Only fair as a downtown attraction, but very big at a simultaneous uptown attraction. Good clean show, with lots of ginger in it. (Middle West.)

Girls Don't Gamble—

A fair picture and fair box office value. (West.)

The Untamed Woman—

Had this all week with a dancer, but the picture alone is great and ought to go over without the dancer. We had big business on this. (Middle West.)

"Right to Love" window display obtained by Harry Swift, Paramount exploitation man during the run of this picture at the Rialto theatre, Amsterdam, N. Y.

Curran's Advance Prologue

Presentation Innovation Tried Out by Boulder, Col., Theatre

A DISTINCT innovation was presented in the artistic prologue at the Curran theatre, Boulder, Colo. The innovation consisted in the fact that the prologue was really designed with a view to arousing interest in the feature picture of the following week which was "The Inside of the Cup."

In order that the connection was clearly established in the minds of the audience, a slide was flashed on the screen announcing: "INTERPRETATIVE DANCE of Winston Churchill's THE INSIDE OF THE CUP, A Paramount Picture by Misses Fern Bacon, Orgayle Hesser and Helen Stuart."

The dance was artistically planned and just as artistically executed. Two girls made their entrance behind the dark curtain drapings from the wings, each holding a large silver cup in which Japanese incense was burning. After the dance, the girls took positions well down stage on each side, stretching full length and fanning the burning incense. At this point a girl clad entirely in white, the third of the trio, made her entrance carrying a basket of flowers and executing a little dance, at the conclusion of which she went over, picked up the two cups and dumped out their contents which were replaced by flowers from the basket. The prologue was effective in its vivid display of the theme of "The Inside of the Cup" and made a tremendous impression.

Fred V. Greene, Jr., Paramount exploitation representative for Denver, who helped the management plan the program, also staged an extensive exploitation campaign on "Brewster's Millions" that bore fruitful results. A portly comedian of the city, who was a "dead ringer" for Fatty Arbuckle, dressed up in baby costume and toured the city in an automobile that was surrounded with the stage money advertising Fatty's 1000 Laughs.

He had ten dollars in pennies which he distributed to kids who thronged around the corners at which his car stopped; and a keen observer declared afterwards that most of these pennies found their way back to the box-office of the Curran theatre.

In addition to this stunt Greene arranged a window display with Royce's shops that tied up with the "doll costume" Arbuckle wears in the picture by showing a display of dollas. A bookstore tie up realized the possibilities of the book form of "Brewster's Millions."

Good Publicity for Norma Talmadge Put Over at St. Paul

Norma Talmadge has started the St. Paul school children on the road to better health and cleaner living. And the kiddies are taking to her suggestions like they would to a piece of caramel cake.

It all came about as a result of the recent health survey in the St. Paul public schools, which showed that the children in many instances were undernourished. The women's subdivision of the St. Paul Association aided the school authorities in the drive which followed the survey in the effort to impress upon the minds of the youngsters the need for proper food, sleep and recreation.

B. C. Ferriss, publicity director for the St. Paul theatres of Finkelstein and Ruben, wrote to Miss Talmadge laying down the rules of health adopted by the school officers and requesting her to write a letter to the children on good health. Miss Talmadge complied with a 300 word letter which was turned over to the women's organizations.

The letter proved to be a big hit and became one of the best publicity mediums Miss Talmadge ever received in the Northwest. The letter was printed in full in the St. Paul Pioneer Press on the first page of the Sunday dramatic section with Miss Talmadge's picture as a baby and as she is today. Through this newspaper her message was carried into 141,000 homes in St. Paul and vicinity. More than 1,000 copies of the paper were sent to the public schools for distribution and a photograph of the letter was given to each child.

The letter carried all the more weight because it came from Miss Talmadge.

Noble Makes Use of His Musical Genius

The unusual musical ear of Henri Keates, organist of the Liberty theatre, Portland, Ore., has been turned into an exploitation medium by Manager Paul Noble.

Mr. Keates possesses the rare musical ability of naming any note sounded, and his talent is to be put to use in the weekly Liberty concerts.

Patrons of the theatre who attended this concert are requested by the management to bring any instrument or device on which a note may be sounded. An old bottle which may be struck by a pencil or will give forth a sound, a piece of metal with which the brass railing about the Liberty balcony or downstairs loges may be lightly struck or a toy musical instrument are suggested as the types of equipment with which patrons may come ready for the test.

In addition, persons will be allowed to whistle or sing one or more notes. To do this Mr. Keates promises he will be able to name the note, tell in what key it is placed and then to go over to the piano or organ and reproduce exactly the same note.

Something New for Exploiting "Earthbound"

Among the excellent exploitation stunts which were put over for "Earthbound" during the recent showing at the Isis theatre, Grand Rapids, was one in which Hal Olver, Goldwyn exploiter, enacted the principal role himself, by climbing up the side of a four-story Grand Rapids building to unfurl banners advertising the picture.

Hal Olver's exploitation stunt for the showing of "Earthbound" at the Isis theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich., as told in the accompanying story

Another street stunt was to send about a man dressed as an eccentric professor carrying a large telescope which he would put up on various corners and proceed to examine the "daylight stars." When a crowd had gathered he would unfurl an "Earthbound" sign and proceed to another corner. Crowds quickly gathered about him at every stop. A cut showing the telescope stunt appears on this page.

Alhambra Has Unusual Lobby Display

E. R. Jarmuth, managing director of the Alhambra theatre, Los Angeles, originated a unique lobby display for the showing of "Love, Honor and Behave."

Hanging from the ceiling of the lobby, he had a great number of iron rolling pins and other weapons of the "happy married life." These were cut from heavy cardboard and painted a realistic color. Special posters around the walls of the lobby and one or two cut outs of Turpin and Phyllis Haver added to the realistic appearance of the scene.

Perhaps the most noteworthy scene of the entire lobby display, as well as one of the most humorous ideas ever connected with the publicity of a picture, was the huge blackboard which Mr. Jarmuth placed in his lobby. Cutouts of the heads of Charlie Murray, Phyllis Haver, Marie Prevost, and others were placed over and around the blackboard. A special sign was printed and placed over the board, reading:

"Hubbies: Write below and tell us how you make wiffie behave."

Just below the sign was the blackboard and a box of chalk.

It went over big. The public got the idea and every night the board was crowded with humorous and pathetic ideas of husbands, no doubt hen-pecked, judging from many of the advices of the board. There was hardly a moment of the day when a small crowd was not surrounding the board and it is needless to say that many of them were attracted inside to see the cause of all the laughter.

Mangan Presents Prologue for Scenic Subject

The presentation of "Horse Shoe and Bridal Veil" an Educational release showing views of Niagara Falls at the Broadway-Strand theatre, Detroit, this week, is of a magnitude equal to that usually given the feature picture.

Production manager Francis A. Mangan is giving the 500-foot subject a novel prelude.

The number on the program is called "The Legend of Niagara," and opens with a great sweep of Niagara Falls upon the stage. Scenery has been painted to duplicate one of the shots in the picture proper. By the use of several waterfall effects and a shading of the proper tinted lights the scene is made most realistic. The great body of water seemingly rushes over the brink of the falls with the proper sounds accompanying the music which was carefully arranged from "The Orgies of the Spirits" and timed to the fraction of the second. On a rocky cliff overlooking this scene is perched an Indian Chief peering out upon what was once the domain of the Red Man. As he reluctingly walks from the cliff gazing for one more last look the screen unnoticed drops in place with the shot from which the scene is taken from ahead of the main title which causes the scene to change from stage to screen without becoming obvious to the audience. The title of the picture "Horse Shoe and Bridal Veil" follows and the picture is on.

Pictures such as this offers great possibilities for a scenic prelude and with Mangan in charge of the staging at Phil Gleichman's Broadway-Strand no opportunity is overlooked.

Small Town Exhibitor Does Things for "River's End"

An accompanying cut shows a view of the lobby display which E. P. Wilson, manager of the Auditorium theatre, Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, originated for the showing of "The River's End."

Mr. Wilson used evergreen branches for the major part of his display material. The sign shown in the cut was constructed from cotton fastened to beaver board and sprinkled with "diamond dust." The inside of the lobby was arranged to represent an outdoor scene in the locale of the picture.

Women and Bargain Sale Put Over "Silk Hosiery"

Frank Hammond, of the Forsyth theatre, Atlanta, freely admits that he owes the biggest part of his best tie-up to a rare bi o' luck, but it was a tie-up that registered a pronounced hit.

When he booked "Silk Hosiery," he mapped out an extensive campaign by which every shop in town was to have a special sale of silk stockings—but the very first store he approached changed his plans. This store had been fortunate enough to get their hands on an immense lot of silk stockings, in new and fetching styles. They had bought them so cheap that, with an unexpected burst of generosity, they decided to make only about one hundred per cent profit, and start a tremendous sale.

The advertising manager and Mr. Hammond got their heads together with the result that the biggest silk hosiery sale in the history of Atlanta, if you can take the word of the women for it, took place at a local department store during the three days run of the picture.

Two thousand letters were mailed to charge-customers of the store, advising them of the sale, and enclosing a ticket for the picture—said ticket good for one admission when accompanied by another, and paid, admission. Customers were permitted to call up and "reserve" any number of pair of stockings, and the letters, with the admission tickets, had to be presented when the purchase was called for.

Three pairs of fine silk stockings (much higher priced than those of the sale) were given away at the box-office.

The stockings were arranged for the sale in small "aisle-tables," and each table bore a card with a portrait of Enid Bennett, and, underneath it, "Silk Hosiery," Forsyth today.

It got the women—and that was what both the advertising manager and Mr. Hammond were after—so it was a successful stunt for all concerned.

Original "Lying Lips" Presentation at St. Louis

In addition to a big exploitation campaign, Skouras Brothers, managing the New Grand Central and West End Lyric theatres, St. Louis, staged an elaborate prologue for the recent showing of "Lying Lips."

The stage setting provided was a library with a player standing before a large book on a table. The actor recited the following original poem:

Oh, the light that lies in woman's eyes
May lead man on to parad se!
Her lips may bid a man to go—
To heights of Love or depths of Woe.
'Tis plain that since the world began
Man ruled it but woman rules man.
Come let us turn true History's page,
And see The Woman who hath ruled each age.

Look now upon a woman who before
The Christian Era plunged the world in war,
Brought all men grief but brought to no man joy,
Siren of ancient Greece—Helen of Troy.

When Caesar ruled great Rome in all its glory,
A woman's charms enslaved him, says the story.
Her lying lips curved in a tempting smile—
Fair Cleopatra, sorcesses of the Nile.

Hell hath no fury like a woman's scorn,
So say the pages since the World was born.
The woman whom we next shall gaze upon—
Is Salome, dancing for the head of John.

The Land of Love and Lovers—fair Italy,
Produced the siren whom we next shall see.
Each of her lovers journeyed to his death:
Lucrezia Borgia—of poisoned breath!

When Louis Fifteenth sat enthroned in France,
A marvelous woman held him in a trance.
Come, History, turn thy mighty pages o'er
And show that beauty, Madame Pompadour.

So through the Ages, Woman held her sway,
From History's dawn unto the present day.
And modern Woman, we can well believe,
Is a true daughter of her Mother Eve.

Since every century and every land
Has e'er been moulded by a woman's hand,
Let us behold a story of today,
Where love and beauty hold bewitching sway:
Of romance on the land and aboard big ships,
Of men and women and of LYING LIPS.

Another Novel "Twin Beds" Lobby Display

A new idea in lobby displays for "Twin Beds" was recently put over by P. C. Osteen, manager of the Anderson theatre, Anderson, S. C.

Although other exhibitors have exploited this feature by means of cut-outs showing the de Havens in pajamas, and by window displays in furniture stores, it was Mr. Osteen's idea to utilize the rather large space he has in his foyer and arrange with a local furniture house to put a pair of twin beds therein.

In addition to the pair of beds, the exhibitor furnished that corner of the lobby with other trimmings usually found in a boudoir. The result was most satisfactory.

Dittman Gets Results with Teaser Campaign

J. F. Dittman, manager of the Strand and Majestic theatre, Freeport, Ill., has found the newspaper teaser ad campaign an effective means of reaching his public, and when "The Penalty" was booked for a week's showing.

The teaser ads were all one-column in width and nine inches deep, with heavy border line at the right and at the bottom. They consisted of part of the letters of the word "penalty" reversed. The first ad contained the letter E reversed with A and T also reversed, underneath it. At the bottom of the space were the words: "Look here tomorrow."

The second ad had another letter added, P; while the third had the letter Y with but the N and the L lacking. These were supplied on the fourth day.

Generous display advertising space was taken in the newspaper and a specially prepared postcard announcement was mailed to the patrons of the theatre. The card contained a line drawing of Lon Chaney as "Blizzard." Clear across the top of the card was the line, in large type, "You will never forget the," with title of play in heavier type underneath, followed by a brief item about the photoplay and about Lon Chaney.

A moderate amount of lobby decorating and billposting was done. "The Penalty" did a splendid business for the entire week, proving that Mr. Dittman knew his public.

How "The Kid" Was Exploited at Clinton, Ia.

Above is shown the bally-hoo which D. J. Smith, manager of the A-Musa-U theatre of Clinton, Iowa, used for his recent showing of "The Kid."

Mr. Smith had his impersonators walk about town, going through all the stores, etc. The usual amount of newspaper and other publicity was also done with the result that "The Kid" did a land office business for Mr. Smith.

How Brown Introduced Bebe to Memphis

"You Never Can Tell" Campaign Carefully Planned and Executed

PUTTING over a new star is not always the easiest thing on a showman's calendar, but when one does go over big, it is with a sense of elation that the promoter reviews the whys and wherefores after he has finished the congenial task of counting up a record week's receipts.

Bebe Daniels was the cause for some unusual activity in Memphis, Tenn., recently when she was booked to play the Strand theatre for a week in "You Never Can Tell."

Sensing something rather catchy in the title and knowing that if Bebe were given a good send-off at the start, she would pull strong on all subsequent occasions, G. E. Brown, director of advertising and publicity of The Memphis Eenterprises, Inc., used the title of her picture for a novel jingle contest.

The co-operation of The News-Scimitar, a leading afternoon newspaper, was obtained by Mr. Brown for this contest, which was slated to start a week before the opening and to continue during the week of showing. The front page was used daily during the first week, Mr. Brown landing double column heads with each story, the opening two of which were illustrated. For the second week of the publicity campaign, the stories, carried inside, were illustrated with appropriate cartoons.

Mr. Brown arranged to give prizes daily. The names of the best five jingle writers as well as their jingles were published each day during the two weeks' run of the contest. The contest attracted so much attention that more than 1,600 letters were received, carrying nearly 2,500 jingles.

Not satisfied with this publicity, which, by the way, carried the name of the play, the play, the theatre and the date as well as an occasional paragraph about some interesting feature of the play each day, Mr. Brown used 10,000 throw-aways with only the words, "You Never Can Tell," printed on them, as well as very liberal advertising space in all the daily papers and special feature stories.

By the end of the first week, the title of the picture became a by-word in Memphis and the words, "You Never Can Tell," were on nearly everyone's tongue.

One of the novelties of the advertising campaign laid out by Mr. Brown was a series of ads, each larger than the preceding one in which a skyline of Memphis was shown with a star overhead shooting through the sky. This star grew larger each day and on the day preceding the opening, burst into one four columns wide showing a close-up cut of Miss Daniels in a huge star and carrying a complete announcement of the play.

Probably as noteworthy a window display as was ever used as picture exploitation, same having been secured for the showing of "Isobel or The Trail's End" by the Metropolitan theatre, Washington, D. C.

Window Display De Luxe at Washington

Trophies of Artic Explorer Displayed by Capitol City's Exclusive Fur Store

HARRY M. CRANDALL'S Metropolitan theatre this season has maintained its undisputed supremacy among the photoplay houses in Washington, D. C., not only by the superior merit of its attractions, but also by the effective manner in which those attractions have been exploited. Two notable examples of the enterprise of the Crandall publicity and exploitation departments, under the direction of Nelson B. Bell and Bert B. Perkins, respectively, are afforded by the campaigns conducted on behalf of "Isobel," or "The Trail's End" and Charlie Chaplin in "The Kid," both of which have only recently completed standing-room weeks at the Metropolitan.

"Isobel" visualizes upon the screen a story of the country from which are derived a majority of all the fine furs worn in America. It therefore occurred to Mr. Bell that the logical tie-up for this picture was with the most exclusive fur store in the national capital. The difficulty of persuading the proprietor of the most fashionable fur shop in Washington, located on F street, between Twelfth and Thirteenth, the most dsirable business block in the city, to relinquish his entire window display space for purposes of picture exploitation also occurred to Mr. Bell. The difficulty seemed to have its genesis in the fact that no picture exhibitor in the capital ever had devised a window display of sufficient distinction to appeal to a sane business man engaged in catering to the most discriminating patronage in the capital of the nation. So it was planned to devise so exceptional a tie-up that no sane business man could afford to turn it down.

With this end in view, Mr. Perkins was dispatched to run down and secure a part or all of the Arctic collection of Mr. J. S. Warmbath, former member of the expeditions commanded by the late Admiral Peary in search of the North Pole and an explorer and lecturer of national repute.

It was found upon investigation that the Warmbath collection was in storage, but could be obtained for use at a price. This much assured, the Saks Fur Company was approached with the proposition that Harry M. Crandall would be pleased to have permission to dress his window with a fur display that would make his shop the most talked of as well and the most exclusive in the city. Permission was immediately granted Mr. Bell to utilize the entire window space of the company in any way he saw fit that would not lessen the prestige of the company.

The Warmbath relics were immediately installed in the Saks window to represent an Arctic scene of fur bartering which was placarded to indicate the character of much of the subject matter of "Isobel" as well as to indicate the source of the Saks company's superior stock of furs.

There were utilized in the display two Esquimaux figures, eight malamute dogs, two timber wolves, a rough-hewn Alaskan sledge, aPolar bear and a seal. The window was converted into a snow scene that was both realistic and authoritative. The display stood for the full week of the run of "Isobel" at the Metropolitan, only two blocks distant on the same street, and attracted thousands of interested spectators.

By virtue of the fact that this was the first time in the history of Washington picture presentation that an exclusive F street shop ever had dedicated its complete window display space to the exploitation of a photodrama, the newspapers devoted unusual amounts of space to photographs and stories laudatory of the display's artistic merit and educational value, as well as the exceptional appeal of the picture that had inspired it.

A similar tie-up was accomplished in the case of "The Kid," although the display was not so elaborate. In this instance the affiliation was made with Kafka's "Tots-to-Teens" shop, also on F street, and one of the few nationally known outfitters of children. The Kafka windows were dressed with large cut-outs of Chaplin and Jackie Coogan and decorative frames advertising the engagement of "The Kid" at the Metropolitan. In return for this concession, Kafka's was permitted to give away a limited number of seats for "The Kid" the first four days of the week, advertising to that effect. The gratuitous distribution of seats, even in small numbers, represented a loss to the Metropolitan, for the reason that Chaplin had been off the capital screens for more than a year, and overflow crowds greeted his reappearance. Nevertheless, the Crandall publicity department perceived distinct value in an arrangement that entailed a possible outlay of not more than $160 and an advertising campaign centered in the picture that otherwise would have cost $650. The Kafka shop realized handsomely from its investment as a result of the impetus given the sale of "kids'" apparel.

The business done by both "Isobel" and "The Kid" could only have been increased by enlargement of the theatre. Which may be taken as further proof that it pays to advertise judiciously—which is the only way that Harry M. Crandall and his publicity department seem to know anything about.

Indian Relics Used to Dress Lobby

In presenting "The Last of the Mohicans" at the Palace theatre, Buffalo, last week, Manager Howard Smith put on an eye-catching lobby display, consisting of a number of Indian relics which he was able to borrow from the Buffalo Historical society. The hit of the display, however, was a red Indian chief, donned with full war regalia, who was brought to Buffalo by Mr. Smith from the Onondaga reservation. Chief "Isaac" as he was called, paced up and down the lobby and in front of the theatre brandishing his old war hatchet in excellent exploitation manner. Instead of frightening the natives as he did in the days of Cherry Valley, the chief drove them to the box office. The old Indian also aided in advertising the production by attending various luncheon clubs. He was presented at the Chamber of Commerce one day, putting on a war dance in the building.

Prior to the showing, Mr. Smith screened the picture for the school principals, historical and educational societies in the Hutchinson-Central high school, with the result that much boosting was given the subject by those in attendance. School children flocked to the Palace the week of the showing and, of course, brought their parents along with them.

Naughty Wink Brings Good Business at Alamo No. 2

A huge cut-out of Viola Dana, seated in a big arm-chair, with one eye winking mysteriously, giving to the whole cut-out an expression of naughty flirtation that was quite attractive, was the lobby-display at the Alamo No. 2 Theatre, Atlanta, recently, when Manager George Schmidt played "Blackmail" for a two-day engagement.

Besides the business-getting cut-out, there were four cards hung across the front of the theatre, the first one reading, "No. 1. She promised her father she would be a good CROOK." "No. 2. And then she met a rich young man and decided to MARRY HIM." "No. 3. And the rich young man's lawyer decided it was BLACKMAIL." "No. 4. And the rest is too good to tell—you'll have to see the picture."

It was all quite simple—but when Manager Schmidt began counting up at the box-office, he decided that it was distinctly worth-while.

Darley Catches 'Em with "Wild West" Front

A lobby that attracted every small boy in town—and a lot of small boys' big brothers—was that of the Savoy theatre, Atlanta, which is managed by N. C. Darley, Sr.

The feature was "Before the White Man Came," a picture of Indian life in America, enacted by a cast of full-blooded Indians. Strung across the lobby from either side, and joining at the box office were two stout lines, on which were hung all sorts of Indian weapons, from the primitive stone-headed hatchet right on up to the modern rifle.

Cut-outs of Indians in war-paint and feathers were used generously about the lobby, and several animal skins were hung about on the walls.

But most interesting of all was a small brown canvas tepee, at one side of the lobby. In front of the tepee, on a dully glowing "fire," made up of well-concealed electric globes colored red, swung a pot, hanging in the approved Indian fashion. Inside the tepee reclined a fiercely painted and feathered "brave," who looked on at the crowds with lordly disdain. Every now and then, this lordly buck would emerge from his tepee and stroll back and forth across the lobby, in his beaded moccasions, his arms folded across his breast, for all the world like one of James Fenimore Cooper's beloved "Redskins."

Though it was an inexpensive lobby, it certainly brought the business, and Manager Darley was well content.

Gilbert's New Prologue Idea

Advance Advertising from Stage for "The First Born" by New York Theatre

AN advance prologue number that utilizes cut-outs made from producers' paper is something of a novelty, but as presented by B. S. Moss' Regent theatre, New York, for the showing of "The First Born," it offers distinct opportunities.

The number opened with the theatre darkened and the strains of "The Japanese Sandman" played softly by the orchestra.

With the stage lights out, the operator from the booth threw announcement slides advertising the coming attraction on a white transparent drop. This drop was then raised, disclosing a cut-out from a 24-sheet, as shown in the accompanying cut, mounted on muslin and basted on a large frame with a black cloth background.

Manager Gilbert secured a dozen or more Chinese lanterns, electrically illuminated, which added to the atmosphere of the scene. To the right of the figures was the golden image of an idol, before which hung a large brass bowl, supported by link chains attached to a line from the flies. A pretty Chinese maiden with the short, quick steps characteristic of Oriental girls approached the bowl and reverently applied the tiny flame to the pyramids of incense powder, the curling smoke and pungent scent from which was slowly wafted toward the audience.

The maid retiring, an humble coolie slowly approached the idol and prostrated himself before it, the descent of the curtain ending the effective little scene.

Obtaining an Oriental rickshaw, Mr. Gilbert made use of this in front of the house in advance of the showing. A girl was dressed in Chinese fashion and drawn up and down the street by a man similarly clad. The rickshaw and the two human figures in connection with it were a source of constant interest in front of the house.

Real Chief as Exploitation for Tourneur's Special

Associated Producers have gone into the 'show business"—at least the New York Exchange has, with a real live Indian chief who enacts his own prologue, eats fire and does a war dance in connection with the showing of Maurice Tourneur's "The Last of the Mohicans."

The name of the "show" is Chief Little Bear and he is a full-blooded Indian scout. His act fits right in with the Tourneur picture and exhibitors in New York and Jersey territory have found it to have exploitation value, particularly since the Chief appears in his regalia in the lobby of the theatre showing the picture. With the idea of catching on in New York, there is a possibility that it will be used in other sections of the country where "The Last of the Mohicans" is playing—provided the supply of genuine Indian chiefs holds out.

Ape Used to Exploit Picture

How Charnes Told Toledo People About "The Son of Tarzan" Serial

NAT CHARNAS, manager of the Strand theatre, Toledo, Ohio, pulled off the most talked of publicity stunt of the season last week in connection with the opening of the first installment of "The Son of Tarzan." Charnas got hold of an ape—a real ape, one which was city broke. All dressed up in the latest monkey attire, and sandwiched between two placards explaining his mission, the ape wandered alone and unmolested through the downtown streets of Toledo. Of course he was attended by a crowd, who wanted to be on hand if anything interesting happened. And they were rewarded because "it" happened all right. A standing street car at a busy street intersection roused something in Mr. Ape. He darted to the street car, climbed to the roof of the car, and pulled the trolley wheel from the wires. Traffic was stopped. Crowds came from all directions to see what caused the pause in the day's occupation. Meanwhile, the conductor and motorman offered every inducement to the ape to come down from the car roof. In vain. The police were summoned. Overpowered by numbers, the ape permitted himself to be removed to the street level. The car started up, traffic was resumed. But the ape was officially arrested. He was taken to police headquarters. And Charnas had a dickens of a time getting him out of the police station. He succeeded only by promising not to let the ape run loose through the streets of Toledo any more. Charnas complied to the order. So now the ape has temporary lodgings in a tree just outside the Strand theatre, and is well fastened to his moorings by a stout string. But there's always a mob of grown-ups and youngsters in front of the Strand theatre watching the antics of the animal, and in nine cases out of ten they follow their watching by buying a ticket and going in to see the show. Charnas says it's not only interesting to watch the psychological effect of the monkey outside the theatre, upon the passers-by who would otherwise keep right on going along, but it is highly satisfactory to count up the day's receipts.—ELSE LOEB.

Newark Theatre Stages Prologue for "First Born"

The presentation of "The First Born" at the Strand theatre, Newark, N. J., included an elaborate prologue staged by Manager William M. Drake and F. W. Mais.

The prologue opened with the four Chinese characters doing a specialty number. Then while three of the quartette reclined in dens as shown by the accompanying cut of the stage setting, the fourth continued on a platform three feet above the stage at the back of the set.

The stage setting was composed of a back drop showing a Chinese landscape masked by plush border draperies.

Schmidt Pulls Novelty Stunt

Atlanta Exploitation for "Silk Husbands and Calico Wives" Gets Full Measure of Attention

THERE hasn't been a picture in a long time that lent itself to "ballyhoo exploitation" like "Silk Husands and Calico Wives"—and it seldom has had better exploitation than that given it in Atlanta, when it played a week's highly successful engagement at the Alamo No. 2, which theatre is rapidly being put on the map by its alert young manager, George Schmidt.

Cut-outs of the two principal characters—the husband, in evening clothes, and standing beside an ornate dressing-table, the wife, with a broom in her hand, wearing a calico house-dress. These stood at opposite sides of the lobby, on the husband a sign reading, "I am the Silk Husband—have you seen my Calico Wife?" that on the wife reading, "I'm only a Calico Wife—but I love my Silk Husband!"

Instead of a lobby-frame full of photographs and stills, the center of the stage was occupied by an immense pale green card, carrying clever little teaser lines—such as "Man wants but little here below—but he wants that little dressed up," "If thou wouldst thy husband keep, try silk hose and trim shod feet," "Try not to look shabby in the morning—Man usually awakes with a grouch," "Do you charm your husband? Or do you wait for another woman to do it?" and so on.

But the exploitation did not cease with the lobby.

Four thousand small automobile-cards were printed, each one with a teaser line similar to that of the big card, and, on the other side, the name of the picture, the play-date, and the theatre. These were tied to automobiles which parked in the shopping district and in the vicinity of the Alamo No. 2.

A tall, gawky man, dressed like the "Simple Simon" of ancient Mother Goose rhymes, was also used to good advantage. The Alamo No. 2 is located in the heart of the shopping district, and this "ballyhoo" worked in the three or four blocks that made up the shopping district. He carried a small, shiny pail, like those children use at the beach. This was half-full of water, and when the man came to a group of women, he would seat himself on the curb, and fish diligently in the pail with a bent pen. On his back was a card which read, "I may be simple—but I'm not simple enough to miss as good a picture as 'Silk Husbands and Calico Wives' at the Alamo No. 2 this week."

It poured rain the first three days of the run—and Simple Simon gained some added attention by going around in the pouring rain, with an old stick, with wires like an umbrella, but without a cover.

All in all, the entire week's business was excellent despite the pouring rain and the cold weather.

Manager Schmidt makes a specialty of his lobby displays and believes that this form of exploitation is productive of better results than anything that can be purchased for the same amount of money. The display for "Silk Husbands and Calico" appearing above is an illustration of what can be secured at small expense.

Prologue Number Suggested by Title Frame

The outstanding feature of the prologue staged by Francis Mangan, production manager for Phil Gleichman at the Broadway-Strand theatre, Detroit, Mich., is that it was suggested by the title frame of "Midsummer Madness," the picture for which it was prepared.

A stage setting was built which was the exact duplicate of the frame of the title. Four Roman columns in the foreground served as the setting in which Budworth Frasier, tenor and soloist for the prologue, was placed. By a careful arrangement of lights only the chest and head of the singer were visible to the audience.

The vocal number for the prologue was "I Hear You Calling Me," after which the character of Cupid appeared directly over the singer's head, levelling a dart at him.

At the conclusion of the number there are no curtains drawn. Instead the title of the picture is projected directly into the scene which is covered with scrim. The scrim is drawn away after the screen has invisibly dropped into place.

Bakersfield's Exploitation for "Passion"

California Theatre Does Big Things For and With Negri Vehicle

THE exploitation campaign for "Passion," staged by the new California theatre of Bakersfield, Cal., a city of some twenty thousand inhabitants, is especially interesting, since it is the first record of what may be expected of this feature once it gets outside the big cities. The California, controlled by Gore Brothers, Lesser and Ramish, reports that the picture broke all attendance records, backed as it was by big exploitation.

The advertising for "Passion" began two weeks before the first date of showing. Small teaser ads announcing "Passion is Coming" were first run and then a liberal amount of display advertising followed up each day. Interesting stories of Pola Negri's beauty and charm found their way into the woman's pages of the newspapers. For the first week no picture was published of Pola Negri. Stories concerning the reason for the star's great allurement excited much interest among the women, and a contest was conducted by one of the papers, offering a prize of two passes each day to the three best letters describing Pola Negri's peculiar charm. When her photographs were finally published in the newspapers everyone was doubly anxious to see what she "looked like."

A mailing list of 5,000 "live names" was secured by Miss Sylvia Grogg, publicity director of the California theatre, from the light and power company, and it was also arranged to have the envelopes run through the light company's addressograph, saving both time and expense. This, by the way, is one of the surest ways of getting a live mailing list, for it is a certainty that everyone who pays gas and light bills must be residents of a city.

Two weeks before "Passion" broke in Bakersfield, it received its western premier at the Ambassador theatre, Los Angeles. The week preceding the Bakersfield opening it commenced an indefinite engagement at the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles. This city is only five hour's from Bakersfield and the Los Angeles papers have a wide circulation there. On the strength of this an ad was carried in the Los Angeles Examiner announcing the opening day of "Passion" in Bakersfield. This created no end of comment in a small town, which was unused to seeing its amusements advertised in the columns of a city paper.

The importance of seeing "Passion" simultaneously with Los Angeles was dwelt upon in the Bakersfield papers, and on the day preceding the opening a full page spread capped the advertising campaign, which was the largest ever conducted for a picture in Bakersfield.

Showing the stage setting and characters appearing in the prologue number staged by the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre for the showing of "The Inside of the Cup"

As a result "Passion" broke all records for one entire week, being the only picture which ever ran for a full week in Bakersfield.

Acarefully selected program of music, a few moments of high-class short subjects, and an impressive prelude in the form of a Grecian dancing act, accompanied the showing of "Passion."

Hyman's "Inside the Cup' Prologue

Managing Director Hyman, of the Mark Strand Brooklyn theatre, again displayed his faculty for staging a prologue which was not only a big addition to the programme, but really conveyed the spirit of the feature's story, both in song, costume and setting.

For "The Inside of the Cup," Hyman employed the Strand Male Quartette, costumed in the chalices of choir boys, and a soprano for the obligato in the proper dress, in a dimly lit church interior. For a background the singers enjoyed a stained glass window, and the highlights were two candelabras right and left stage. Schubert's "Omnipotence" was the selection, carried by the quartette and the soprano. This group standing centerstage, before the church drop, which was flanked left and right by Gothic doors, was lit with a pale red from the left and a strong lemon spot from overhead. A big red lamp in back of the church drop threw out the stained glass window in a soft light. This number got a curtain and was not directly dovetailed into the opening of the feature, but in one of the final shots of "The Inside of the Cup," which showed a church interior with choir boys, the quartette and soprano sang "Omnipotence" from offstage.

Freak Exploitation Goes Over at Detroit

"The Inside of the Cup" Given Novelty Campaign by Broadway Strand Theatre

FREAK exploitation, when it is reasonably planned, can be very effective. As evidence of the assertion there comes to hand the campaign planned by Leslie F. Whelan, Paramount exploitation representative at Detroit, in connection with the showing of "The Inside of the Cup" at the Broadway Strand theatre, Detroit, Mich.

While the usual billing and posting was done on the picture, the exploitation man depended upon two freak stunts for the actual interest-getters. They were to be novelties, features that would force the attention of every pedestrian on the streets.

The first of these consisted in borrowing one of the huge buses that circle Detroit's streets. The windows were covered with a stage curtain which showed the whole comic family at the windows. The humorous drawings took in various features known to readers of the funny sheets and gave them a little added local color for five rows of seats.

On the outside of the bus were two posters. One read: "We are going to see 'The Inside of the Cup'" and the other finished: "At the Broadway-Strand, starting Sunday." This advance exploitation was invaluable to the theatre for it firmly established the new program in the mind of the public. The bus, circling the streets for several days, aroused a lot of interest and got over the message in a manner far more effective than paid advertising could have been.

The second stunt Whelan put over consisted in engaging the services of a young comic pedestrian who did a sandwich act a la the subway circuit. The young comedian wore all the ingredients of a tuxedo suit except the shirt, and then to make it gloriously funny by being inconsistent, wore a straw hat, soft collar and four in hand. If the unusual attracts attention he should have gotten a city-full and he did.

The man carried sandwich signs advertising "The Inside of the Cup" at the Broadway-Strand. He also carried a suitcase sandwiched in between the two signs of the sandwich advertisement. With this equipment to start him off he dodged street cars and automobiles, stopped motorists with all the majesty of the law and practically held up traffic for five minutes at Woodward and Gratiot Avenues as he walked leisurely in front of a street car, ignoring the constant clanging of the gong.

Stolte Makes Capital of a Catastrophe

"Heliotrope" Gets Novel Lobby Display at Des Moines

IT would hardly be possible for the average exhibitor to exploit "Heliotrope" in exactly the same fashion as was employed by A. G. Stolte, manager of the Des Moines theatre, Des Moines, Iowa, but under similar circumstances any showman might do well to use the same ingenuity in pulling valuable advertising out of a costly experience.

"Heliotrope," opened at the Des Moines on Sunday, after a good Saturday business the day before. The safe in the Des Moines theatre was well lined with box office crops and someone who saw the crowds in the theatre on those two days must have been aware of it. At any rate the safe was found in a bad state of repair the next morning, Monday. Small pieces of it were pried out of the woodwork of the office and a shattered door and desk were on the sidewalk in front of the box office by ten o'clock Monday morning and a curious crowd was waiting to see what the heavy object was that about twenty workmen were bringing down the stairs.

As soon as insurance inspectors and detectives had finished their examinations the wrecked safe was turned over to the public. It was placed facing the box-office on the curb side of the sidewalk and inside was placed a card asking the question, "Did Heliotrope Harry Blow This Safe?" Passersby almost without exception stooped down to look inside and walked on wondering what the answer was.

The newspapers had carried eight column screamers across the top of the front pages on three early morning extras, telling of the safe-cracking. By noon the papers had been supplied with advertising copy hinting that the cracksmen were known and asking the public to keep a sharp eye out for a man pictured in the cut. For this cut a pressbook mat of Heliotrope Harry which had not been used in the advance campaign was employed. With this ad stories were run stating that a notorious crook had recently been pardoned by the governor of a western state; that he was known to have been seen in the Des Moines theatre on Sunday, and that he was strongly suspected of implication in the job.

This stimulated great curiosity among those who had not seen the picture and caused favorable comment among the first day fans.

As a followup, the hint was dropped that the whole thing was a publicity stunt, framed up in the office of the Des Moines theatre to help put the picture over. The papers snapped up this suggestion and made it possible to get onto the front pages again with a denial of this rumor and the offer of a reward for information leading to the arrest of the real cracksmen. It was also pointed out that perfectly good safes and office furniture were not being splintered to make a press yarn.

As a result more people flocked to the front of the house to examine the wrecked safe to see just who was telling the truth and a goodly number of them were led to enter the theatre to see what kind of a picture it was that could kick up such a commotion.

As a result, the safeblowers really did the house a favor by taking its money.

Mangan's "Forbidden Fruit' Prologue Exceptional

Francis A. Mangan originated a novel ınd effective prologue for the recent showing of "Forbidden Fruit" at the Broadway-Strand theatre, Detroit. The stage setting for the prologue was of elab-orate design in as much as the greater part of it was made of glass with spouting fountains playing upon it in various hues of colored lights.

The prologue was in two acts, the first ct showing the old Cinderella Hearthen Place, with the character of Cinderella eated in the ashes. Until the fairy is rojected upon the scrim immediately ack of it; the fairy character beckons her o arise and prepare to follow her sisters o the grand ball, which she does. The econd act reveals the entrance to the rand ball room, with a staircase made ntirely of glass the length of the minia-ıre stage, and as there were eight steps ith a tread of eight inches and a riser f six inches to each, the result was mar-elous with the spraying water playing pon it. The lighting arrangement was nique for the reason that it was illumi-ated both from the rear of the glass as ell as the direct front and caused a be-ildering effect upon the audience. On ıe top of the center step there was posed .e form of a girl made to look like a cold lue statue with a fountain spouting water ·om the form held in her hand. To all ppearances this young lady was a statue ountain, but in reality was a girl in the esh and held her pose for a period of ur minutes. This scene opens as the ock strikes twelve, and Cinderalla run-ng from the ball room in her ragged othes and Prince Charming close upon r heels. It is at this period that the uet from Faust is sung with cuts and

Shafer Works Two New Stunts

Walter D. Shafer, manager of the Fox Washington theatre, Detroit, recently put over a double exploitation campaign using both the newspapers and a ballyhoo successfully for "The Road Demon" and "The Jockey."

In the newspapers Mr. Shafer asked readers to tell the name of the car Mix drove in the picture. Only a small cut of the car was used but out of more than 1,100 replies, received by mail, some 67 guessed the correct answer. It was a Stutz that had been driven by Earl Cooper and other racers and several of the automobile men knew it. In fact, of the earliest answers, the greater number was correct. It was only when tne big flood of mail came through that those who guessed made known their selections.

At that time Mr. Shafer did not himself know the name of the car, but he wired Charles Bird, of the Fox forces in Los Angeles, and Tuesday was given the correct name.

On the street a jockey, made up to resemble Clyde Cook, and with appropriate banners, rode through the down town district and the shopping center every morning and afternoon. Because of the jockey's costume and make-up he attracted considerable attention wherever he appeared.

In addition to this there was a big newspaper advertising campaign and, of course, business for Mix was far better than the usual and particularly large considering the general business conditions.

A cut showing Mr. Shafer's ballyhoo for "The Jockey" appears in at the top of the opposite page. The double campaign was productive of excellent box-office results in spite of adverse business conditions now existing in Detroit.

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

"The Supreme Passion" Shown to Trade

Robert W. Priest, president of The Film Market, Inc., entertained two groups at private showings of his big state rights picture, "The Supreme Passion" last week in the Simplex parlors. One group consisted of the trade paper reviewers, and the other consisted of theatrical and lay friends whose opinions Mr. Priest values very highly and whose enthusiasm and applause was pronounced.

Mr. Priest was complimented for the gripping entertaining quality of "The Supreme Passion," the final editing and arrangement of which was done under his personal supervision.

Gasoline Alley" Posters in Chicago

A unique exploitation campaign on "Gasoline Alley," the cartoon series which Capital Film Co. is issuing, was recorded recently when that company put out a series of posters which were sent to the various papers announcing the screen debut of the comic characters. Later on sheets were sent to 500 garages in Chicago, and a week later a check-back post card was sent to the same garages asking them if they had used the posters.

As a result of the campaign the city of Chicago is covered with posters of "Gasoline Alley."

Exploits Science Theme in Joan Serial

Oscar Oldknow, head of the Southern States Film Co., which is distributing "The Invisible Ray," a Joan fifteen episode serial, arranged some excellent exploitation to arouse public interest in the picture. Realizing the scientific importance of the serial he did some research work on his own account and aroused discussion on the power of invisible rays of light by writing to professor of physics in Georgia Technical University. The reply of the professor was reported in the daily press.

Houdini Picture Corp. Is Organized

The Houdini Pictures Corporation of New York, recently opened its offices. The new company is incorporated at $500,000 and is to produce four feature pictures a year. Releasing arrangements have not as yet been arranged, it is stated.

To Novelize Serial Story

"Hope Diamond Mystery" to Be Published by Howells Sales Co.

ARRANGEMENTS have been made by the Howells Sales Company to have the story of "The Hope Diamond Mystery," the stupendous fifteen-episode serial which they are distributing on the state rights market, printed in book form and distributed throughout the United States and the rest of the world.

A working agreement has been effected with the International Copyright Bureau, who so successfully distributed the book edition of "The Auction of Souls" to bring out the novelized version of "The Hope Diamond Mystery."

Two editions of the book will be brought out. The first one will be the regular cloth-bound novel which will retail at the regular book store price. This edition will be on sale in all of the book stores of the country and will be distributed and sold by the publishing house of Moffat, Yard & Co.

The second edition, which will be the largest, will be an attractive paper cover book, beautifully printed on heavy book paper with four illustrations in color and twelve in black and white. This book will be sold to the exhibitor by the states rights buyer who will obtain his copies from the Howells Sales Company publicity and exploitation department at fifty cents per copy. The exhibitor can then resell them to his patrons at whatever price he sees fit.

The novelized version of the serial will be written by H. L. Gates, a well known writer, author of the novelized version of "The Auction of Souls," and who also wrote the forty-thousand word story which was syndicated in Sunday newspapers throughout the country with a total reading circulation of 20,000,000.

The novelized version of the serial will be published coincident with the release of the picture.

This is said to be an entirely new angle of the tie-up between the popularity of the book and a picture. In the past pictures which have been adapted from novels have attempted to tie-up with book stores. By the plan which has been inaugurated by the Howells Sales Company the book will be tied up directly with the picture and the distribution placed in the hands of the exhibitor and in such a manner that he will receive all of the benefit.

New Salient Film Started

Director Davis Begins Production of New Muriel Ostriche Feature

PRESIDENT GOOSMANN of Salient Films, Inc., announces that production on the second of the series of pictures starring Miss Muriel Ostriche has begun under the direction of J. Charles Davis, 2nd, and states that the working title is "The Call of the Open." The company expects to leave in about three weeks to make the exteriors in the South.

The Erbograph Studio has been engaged for this production and will be used until Salient moves into their permanent quarters at the Claremont Studio, which they have leased for the period of one year beginning April 1st.

In line with the policy announced some time ago, Director Davis is building an organization of artists and technical men who will be identified with all of Salien's productions. The latest addition to the company is Harold Foshay, whose excellent work in "The shadow" resulted in his being signed up on a year's contract by Salient. Mr. Foshay was for a long time connected with the Vitagraph Company, and has done some excellent work for many of the other producing companies. His work in the Edgar Lewis production "Other Men's Shoes" came in for particularly favorable criticism.

The purchase of an original story, "For the Love of Pete," by Elizabeth Ethel Donoher, author of "The Black Panther's Cub," "The Gypsy Trail," and other popular cinema successes, is also announced as well as the engagement of Miss Margaret I. McDonald to write the continuity for it. Work on this picture, which will be the third of the series, will be started immediately upon the completion of the picture now being filmed.

The same staff that produced "The Shadow" are in charge of the work on "The Call of the Open." Assisting Mr. Davis is Jack W. Brown, while the camera work is in the hands of Paul H. Allen. The present picture is a comedy drama, the scenes of which are laid in New York and in and around a small Southern town.

In addition to handling features, serials and comedies, the Exhibitors Film and Service Co. has obtained the franchise for New York State north and west of Westchester County for the distribution of the Synchronized Scenario Music Score. Film Sales Corporation to state right exchanges throughout the United States and Canada, asking for information on what theatres in the respective territories are booking releases handled by them and distributed to them by C. B. C., how many consecutive days the exhibitors are running the pictures, and how audiences in the various theatres receive and react to them. Thus information is requested in reference both to C. B. C. features, "Dangerous Love" and "The Victim," and to the shortest releases, "Hallroom Boys Comedies," "Screen Snapshots." and "Star Ranch Westerns.' '

The letters claims C. B. C. mark the expression of a new and wider application of the word success to state right distribution on the part of Joe Brandt and Jack Cohn, and of a belief that signs that are usually taken for those of success in state right marketing, are not always infallible. In short, it is their belief that large and frequent sales of pictures to exchanges should not be considered the be-all and end-all of independent distribution, and that interest of the distributing concern should not be permitted to rest there.

According to them, while selling a picture to as many and as important territorial buyers throughout the country as possible is of paramount importance—there are many other contributing factors that should not be lost sight of.

"The aim of state right distributing is to sell to the territorial buyer, of course," says Jack Cohn. "But, the main point is not to sell him only once, but to make him a steady customer. Almost anyone who is a good salesman can sell a person something—once. But of what avail is that one sale if the customer is displeased or dissatisfied, and if he does not come back again and bring others with him? You get receipts, but you are not establishing a steady clientele—and it is the steady clientle that pays in the end. Any tradesman will tell you that—and this state right distribution is a trade, and should be considered as such if it is to be a profitable one.

"Let us suppose that we have sold an important territorial buyer a series of pictures, such as 'Hallroom Boys' Comedies,' 'Screen Snapshots' or 'Star Ranch Westerns'—each of which is released twice a month. That sale is something to be glad of. But, let us suppose further—that this exchange cannot find a market in its territory for these releases, that exhibitors won't book them because the patrons at their theatres don't like them. Selling films is like forging a chain—the exchange, the exhibitor and especially the public are all important links in it. Now, suppose the exchangeman cannot add to his own link those two other very important bits—the public hasn't liked the picture, the exhibitor won't take it again, and there is the exchangeman with a white elephant on his hands, and a natural disinclination to deal again with the company from whom he has receive it."

Mr. Cohn and Mr. Brandt believe that the answer lies in keeping a finger on the pulse of the entire territory of every state right exchange handling their company's releases.

Young Popular in Texas

Theatres Reap Big Harvest After Appearances of Equity Favorite

WHEN Clara Kimball Young appeared in person in Houston and swept the town off its feet, there was good reason why the Queen theatre should do a record-smashing business on "For the Soul of Rafael," her third Equity release. The crowds that lined the streets for blocks in an attempt to gain entrance to the theatre, came to see the Equity star in person, as well as the picture she appears in.

When Miss Young left Houston for San Antonio the Queen theatre did not think that the crowds would still come to the theatre merely to see the picture, without seeing the star in the flesh. Yet this happened all week. A report from the Peacock Productions of Dallas, who are distributing the new Young series in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, contains statistical evidence to the effect that the Queen theatre broke every house record on its run "For the Soul of Rafael," announces Equity.

In San Antonio the Empire theatre gives a similar account of business throughout the half-week run of "Midchannel," the fourth Young production. Miss Young appeared the opening night, after which she immediately left for Dallas. For the next days of the run the Young fans of San Antonio had to satisfy themselves with Miss Young's appearance on the screen, as the star in person was on her way to Dallas. But a personal appearance was not necessary to fill the Empire.

At the Old Mill in Dallas, where Miss Young made her last stop history repeated itself. Even "The Eyes of Youth," which made box office history in Dallas more than a year ago, had to take second place after "Midchannel" invaded the Old Mill, states Equity.

All of the theatres here mentioned expressed the unanimous regret that they could not hold the Young productions over for double the original run. As this was impossible, owing to previous booking contracts, the exhibitors had to reconcile themselves with a promise of a return engagement. Texas is still a-flurry with the success of the Equity star. Newspaper accounts continue to devote columns to her recent visit, and to the friendship established between herself and the municipalities she honored.

M. Fink, manager of the Peacock Productions, has written to Equity to the effect that the number of inquiries for book dates that he is receiving daily, bring tidings of the heaviest business on the Young productions ever done in the Southwest.

Plymouth Has New Pictur

"Every Woman's Problem" Stars Mrs. Wallace Reid; Early Release

AN announcement of interest to state right exchange men and exhibitors was issued this week by Nat Levine to the effect that the Plymouth Pictures, Inc., of which he is president, has acquired world rights to "Every Woman's Problem," a five-reel feature starring Dorothy Davenport, who in private life is Mrs. Wallace Reid. Final cutting and editing of "Every Woman's Problem" was completed last week under the supervision of M. G. Cohn and J. F. Matteford. According to the Plymouth statement, it is planned to launch the new feature on the independent market immediately.

Associated with Mr. Levine and Plymouth Pictures, Inc., in the marketing of "Every Woman's Problem" is A. W. Sobler, formerly director of exploitation service for the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; associate advertising manager of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation and a publicist of wide experience. Sobler is now preparing an elaborate advertising campaign designed to reach not only the trade but also the general public and one phase of which includes the production of several noteworthhy innovations in the way of exhibitor accessories.

"Several unusual features incorporated in 'Every Woman's Problem,'" states the Plymouth announcement, "distinguish the offering from the average screen attraction and justifies the prediction that it will be hailed by independent exchange men and exhibitors as a picture of exceptional merit."

In discussing the box-office prospects of "Every Woman's Problem," Mr. Levine placed special stress upon the exploitation possibilities afforded by the timely theme of the story. The Plymouth official also called attention to the undoubted drawing power of the picture's title and the public's interest in the star who, as the wife of one of filmdom's most popular celebrities, is expected to command considerable attention, particularly in view of her long absence from the silver sheet.

"Every Man's Price" is King's Best

"Every Man's Price," which was staged as an offering for state right exchanges by Burton King, is said by officials of the J. W. Film Corporation to be the best production of this director's career. They also consider it one of the strongest vehicles in which the beautiful young star, Grace Darling, has ever appeared.

Walsh-Fielding Release Method Undecided

Due to an error the caption under the picture showing scenes from "Chances Women Take," the Walsh-Fielding production, which appeared in the Motion Picture News of March 5th, it was stated that the picture would be a state right release. Distribution arrangements have not as yet been decided upon, it is stated.

Pacific Film Extending Its Plant on Coast

The producing studio of the Pacific Film Company at Culver City is to be materially increased in size, and work was commenced this week on the construction of a new stage with property rooms adjoining which will have a floor space of 100x130 feet. Adjoining this new building will be another new one for offices of the company and dressing rooms for the players.

The buildings are to be of Mission type of architecture and contain all modern conveniences and improvements to make possible production at most economical figures.

The improvement of the Pacific Film company's plant will not in any way interfere with the producers' activities.

The George Ovey Company making one-reel comedies, began work on the fourth production simultaneously with the building operations. The previously completed subjects are "The Dead Language," a new type of bootlegging comedy. Second subject named "In and Out" and "A Mummy Night Mare."

Nigh Endorses Tilford Service

Lauds Studio's Economy and Efficiency Operation

DIRECTOR WILLIAM NIGH, who is producing his latest picture starring the child actress, Maurine Powers, under the working title, "Why Girls Leave Home," at the Selznick studios in Fort Lee, N. J., is the first prominent motion picture director to avail himself of the service afforded independent producers by the Tilford Cinema studios, which supplies every requirement for efficient motion picture production, except the direction, camera-work, players and story.

Mr. Nigh has given the Tilford Service his enthusiastic indorsement, and states that in efficiency and economy of operation, it is superior to any system, which he has used during his long experience as a motion picture director.

The Tilford Cinema studios, which were recently organized, with Walter Ford Tilford, as director, and Thomas Wilson Switzler, as general manager, consists of men expert in the design and preparation of motion picture settings.

All the details and costs of labor, materials, properties, technical supervision and settings, are handled by the Tilford experts for a definite, fixed sum settled in advance. This figure is based on the scenario, and the producer is thus able to estimate accurately his costs for direction, artists and camera work.

Mr. Nigh, who expects to finish the picture a week or ten days ahead of his original schedule gives full credit to the efficiency of the Tilford Service for this definite economy.

"I am greatly gratified at the distinct saving of time and annoyance afforded the director by the Tilford Service," said Mr. Nigh. "Their proposition to handle all the technical details of the production for a definite fixed sum, while unquestionably of the greatest aid to the producer in estimating his total cost, is really only half their service.

"Their efficient methods relieve the director of all responsibility, except to indicate the time he requires a certain set or property to be ready and this enables him to concentrate fully on the development of his story and permits him to give complete attention to all the countless little details, which are essential for artistic production.

"The time actually saved the producer by the Tilford Service, of course, cannot be accurately estimated in advance but it represents a definite financial economy, which to my mind is one of the biggest advantages their service offers the producer.

"They work smoothly and without friction. In fact you would not know that they were around the studio, except that when you are ready for the next set you find that it has been prepared and put up, complete in every detail, and all that you have to do is to put your players into it.

"Personally I expect to finish 'Why Girls Leave Home,' from a week to ten days sooner than I originally calculated, and as the cast is of high quality including, besides the little star, Maurine Powers, such well known artists, as Anna Q. Nilsson, Julia Swayne Gordon, Corinne Barker, Claude King, Coyt Albertson, Dan Mason and others, you can readily see that this saving alone will be very considerable.

"Personally, I cannot recommend the Tilford Cinema studios too highly to any independent producer, who wants efficient and economical technical service."

Song Tie-Up for "Annabel Lee"

Music Publishers to Co-Operate With Joan Film

A TIE-UP that will, it is said, embrace practically every department, music and 5-10-25-cent store in the country has been arranged between the Joan Film Sales Company and the Jerome H. Remick Co., music publishers of New York, in connection with the new Joan state right release, "Annabel Lee." This five-reel production is based on Edgar Allen Poe's classic poem and deals with the love of a humble fisher-boy of the New England coast and a wealthy, aristocratic girl, "Annabel Lee." Jack O'Brien supports the male lead and Lorraine Harding takes the feminine role.

The Joan company learned of the release of the popular song, "Beautiful Annabel Lee," at the same time that it plans to release "Annabel Lee" to the state right market. The popular song, "Beautiful Annabel Lee," from all advance indications, will be one of the hits of the year. The lyric is written by Alfred Bryan and Artie Mehlinger, and the music was composed by George W. Meyer.

The tie-up includes every angle of exploitation connected with the distribution of the song. The first step will consist of notifying the state right distributors of the Joan feature of the tie-up. The exchanges will then approach their exhibitors and explain the value of this timely co-operation, and produce the press book on "Annabel Lee," which describes all ways and means of local co-operation. At the same time, the Remick Company will instruct all music dealers and department stores of the release of "Annabel Lee" and the profitable tie-up it offers with the sale of their song.

The channels of exploitation for the exhibitor include music stores, department stores, talking machine dealers, and piano companies. The Remick Company releases its songs through the largest national retail store chains of the country. The Kresge popular-priced chain, numbering two hundred and thirty, the Woolworth circuit, and practically every prominent national retail round of stores are distributors of the Remick song. In addition, every music store will advertise the fact that the song, "Beautiful Annabel Lee," dedicated to the Joan picture, "Annabel Lee," is for sale on record form, for talking machine and player pianos.

The department stores will carry cards in their display windows to the effect that the picture on which the song, "Beautiful Annabel Lee," is based is being shown at the local theatre. In the circular announcements of the various music stores, sent to their mailing lists, mention will be made of the showing of "Annabel Lee."

The exhibitor will return the co-operation of the music industry by announcing in his heralds, advertising, etc., the fact that the song, based on the picture, "Annabel Lee," can be secured from department stores and is for sale on records and rolls. If possible, the exhibitor will be asked to have boys sell copies of the song after the showing of the picture. The theatre owner working this tie-up will also run a silde to the effect that "Beautiful Annabel Lee," the latest song hit, dedicated by Mehlinger and Meyer to the picture of that name, can be secured in song, record or roll from any music store of the nighborhood.

New Franklyn Farnum to be Ready Soon

The next Franklyn Farnum picture, "The Last Chance," which the Canyon Pictures Corporation will release is now in the hands of the editorial staff and work is progressing.

It is expected by Joseph M. Goldstein and Jack Weinberg, heads of the Canyon, that two more weeks of constant work will be needed. Colonel Selig, under whose direction "The Last Chance" was produced, considers it to be among the best productions that have ever come from the Selig studios in Los Angeles.

"The Last Chance" is the fifth of the series and will shortly be followed by the sixth and last picture, the name of which has as yet not been decided.

Caroline Gentry Edits "Hearts Aflame"

"Hearts Aflame," the special six-reel production which the Clark-Cornelius Corporation will release on the territorial plan was edited and titled by Miss Caroline Centry. Miss Centry's work is familiar to all in the motion picture business. For several years she was responsible for many of the titles that appeared in the Paramount pictures. For sometime she specialized in educational and industrial subjects.

Lester Cuneo Starting Third Picture

Lester Cuneo, the Capital Film Company star, has started on his third picture at the Doubleday Studio. It is as yet untitled, but is understood to be a western story of rapidity of action, and logical in every way. Assisting Cuneo is Francelia Billington, and several other stars of prominence.

The picture will be directed by Robert Kelly, and it is understood he will be assisted by Bob Murray, and will contain art titles from the brush of Ferdinand Phinney Earle. It was this trio that made "The Ranger and the Law" such an outstanding success in its field. Kelly was formerly production manager and director-in-chief of the Vitagraph Company. He directed "Ne'er Do Well" for Selig, and assisted in the direction of pictures for Fox.

Cuneo's third picture will probably be ready for screening the latter part of March or early in April.

James Leong Producing Chinese Feature

George M. Yohalem has finished for Tod Browning the continuity for the story entitled, "Fanny Herself," and is now working with Charles Furthman on the script of "Lotus Blossom" for the James B. Leong Productions, Inc. This company is backed by Chinese merchants.

The original story was written by James B. Leong, a Chinese, who is familiar with his own country.

Several Sales Made on Sameth Production

On the J. J. Sameth's latest production, "Hearts o' the Range," distributed by the Forward Film Distributors, Inc., five territories were sold in as many days. A. S. Steinberg of Pittsburgh, without seeing the film, purchased it for Pennsylvania and West Virginia. The Trenton Film Company, of Kansas City, upon the recommendation of Mr. Sameth purchased "Hearts O' The Range" for Western Missouri and Kansas. The W. I. Film Service of Indianapolis, took the Sameth production for Indiana.

Guinan Western Screened

"I Am the Woman," First Kremer Western, Shown in New York

A PRIVATE screening of "I Am the Woman," the first release of the series of eight five-reel Western dramas, in which Victor Kremer is featuring Texas Guinan, was given early this week to newspapermen, exhibitors and state right buyers.

Francis Ford, who directed the picture, also appears in the same, and his character work in the role of "Sloe Gin" Charlie, the Secret Service agent who unravels the mystery of the bank robbery, around which the story is built, allows him to appear at his best.

"One feature of the production as a whole stands out," states Kremer, "that is the casting of the characters. Each one has been selected for his or her particular ability to portray the role assigned. Usually in productions of the kind it is a case of the star standing out almost to the exclusion of nearly everybody else, but in this particular instance each player has been given free rein to get the most out of the part assigned without any hindrance from Miss Guinan. In one or two scenes a minor character, with a "bit" of good business, dominates while the star remains in the background. In this fashion the most is gotten out of the story and the finished result is that the spectator is not surfeited with the ever-present predominance of the star as tiresome in most stellar features."

The second release, "The Girl Sheriff," is now in the process of cutting, and should be ready within the next week, while the third, "The Wild Flower of the Range," is well under way.

Praise for Movie Chats

Kinema-Franklin News, Theatre Publication, Eulogizes Subjects

CHARLES URBAN, president of the Kineto Co. of America, Inc., is in receipt of the first issue of the Kinema-Franklin News, published by the Kinema and Franklin theatres in Oakland, Cal. Mr. Urban was immensely pleased with the exhibitor's estimate of his Movie Chats. The editor of the Kinema-Franklin News, published by the theatres for the benefit of the patrons, says of the Movie Chats:

"No clever magazine editor ever crammed more interesting subject matter into a shorter space of time than Charles Urban, whose Urban's Movie Chats are world-famous wherever picture machines are operated.

"Urban has that happy faculty of picking subjects which are not only of high educational value, but which are so genuinely interesting in themselves that old and young, rich and poor delight in the "sugar coated pill" method of becoming well informed on a multitude of subjects.

"His Chats, incidentally, are now an exclusive Kinema-Franklin feature, and already they are winning the indorsement of club women and mothers who are anxious that their children should learn from the screen things which would be dry or uninteresting on the printed page."

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

"The Kid" Scoring Everywhere

"THE KID," Charlie Chaplin's six-reels of joy, distributed through Associated First National Pictures, Inc., is declared to be not only breaking box office and attending records in every part of the country, but according to reports from exhibitors and exchanges, it is violating practically every booking tradition ever established in the trade, going in day and date into competing houses and holding up just as strong in all of them as it could have if booked exclusively into one.

Eighteen first run houses in Boston and the environments ran the comedy for the solid week beginning February 14th, and every house reports biggest receipts and the largest attendance in its history, declares a statement from First National.

Five theatres in Providence, R. I., put it in the following week and it repeated its record of being the biggest box office attraction and the greatest patron puller ever booked by the theatres, according to the statement issued.

Milwaukee, Wis., reports the peculiar situation of the overflow from "The Kid" causing record-breaking business at another theatre, where the current attraction was pulling close to capacity houses on its own appeal.

In Boston the theatres running "The Kid" for the full week were Gordon's Olympic, Washington Street Olympic and Scollay Square Olympic of the Gordon circuit; The Orpheum and Columbia of the Orpheum circuit; the Shawmut, Modern, Beacon and Park of the Shawmut circuit and the Boston, Star, Bowdoins, Fenway, Exeter, St. James, Dorchester, Magnet, Strand and Hamilton.

It was the first time in the history of the Orpheum that a feature picture has ever been kept in the Orpheum for a full week.

"This fact and also that it was run in the Columbia at the same time, speaks for itself in regard to the Orpheum Company's opinion of the production," said Victor Morris, manager of the Orpheum.

"We broke all records in each of the three houses in which we showed 'The Kid,'" is the report of James J. McGuiness, general manager of Gordon's Theatres.

Jacob Lourie, manager of the Shawmut Theatre Company reports:

"The record our four houses made with 'The Kid' is shown by the fact that we have already booked it for another solid week at the Shawmut, beginning March 7th."

The five Providence theatres showing "The Kid" simultaneously during the week of Feb. 21st, are the Emery, Fay's, Strand, Modern and Rialto. The first two are combination vaudeville and picture houses, while the other three are devoted exclusively to the silent drama. All reported record-breaking business.

"Connie" Talmadge, in a scene from "Mamma's Affair," her latest First National picture

In Milwaukee, the Rialto, the new Saxe House, seating 850 was opened with "The Kid" as the attraction on February 12th. The business done was overflow from the first performance and it is still running. The theatre reports:

"The Rialto opened Saturday noon, February 12th, with 'The Kid' and has been playing to capacity business since. Milwaukee is wild over it."

The following day the Strand, another Saxe house, opened a week's run on "The Old Swimmin' Hole," the Charles Ray production, and began doing capacity business from the start. Overflow crowds from "The Kid" sought admission in such large numbers that the Strand smashed boxoffice and attendance records for the week.

Elmer Ramsey, manager of the Central Theatre, Fairbury, Ill., after smashing all existing house records on a two-day showing of "The Kid," reported:

"It's a riot. Best picture from the box office standard we have ever run."

Microscopic Studies in Pictograph

The Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph No. 479 presents remarkable microscopic studies of the spider, housefly and butterfly. These have been arranged by Arthur Carpenter, a young scientist. In the same release with the microscopic studies is a comedy cartoon by Milt Gross, entitled "Othello Sap's Wonderful Invention."

Raver Importing More Italian Films

HARRY RAVER has resumed importation of foreign productions on a larger scale than ever before. It will be remembered that in 1911 this importer opened an American agency for the exploitation and sale of the films of the Itala company, of Turin. One hundred and six Itala productions were released in this country through Mr. Raver since that time, ranging from one reel comedies, featuring "Foolshead," to the d'Annunzio masterpiece, "Cabiria," the latter production being the first motion picture shown in America at a two-dollar box office scale.

"The Warrior," featuring "Maciste," of "Cabiria" fame, also enjoyed a Broadway run but was sold outright to the McClure Syndicate at the close of the Criterion theatre engagement.

During the war production in Italy was reduced to unimportant pictures, but since the cessation of hostilities the principal studios have been very active, and Harry Raver has already received a number of splendid productions, introducing several new and promising stars. Prominent among these is Pina Menichelli, whom d'Annunzio declares the most beautiful girl in Italy. She has four productions in Mr. Raver's list. Italia Manzini, the famous "Sophonisba" of "Cabiria," who has many American admirers, is seen in three films. A series of "Foolshead" comedies will also be offered, together with two super-productions scheduled to arrive in America in two weeks, an announcement of which will follow later.

Assistant Directors Elect Officers

The annual election of officers of Assistant Directors' Association was held February 18th, when the following were elected for the ensuing year: Scott R. Beal, president; Allen M. Watt, secretary-treasurer, and a board of governors of five—Dave Allen, Wm. Crinley, L. A. Howland, Fred C. Tyler and Roy H. Marshall.

A social session was held following the business session at which W. S. Smith, general manager, West Coast Vitagraph studio was guest of honor and addressed the members of the association on the subject of "Organization, Self Help and Loyalty."

Gets Double Showing in Pittsburgh

"The Simp," a Mermaid Comery starring Lloyd Hamilton and released through Educational, had the distinction of playing a full week at both the million-dollar Grand and Rowland and Clark's Regent theatres in Pittsburgh last week. At the Grand the feature was "Hush," and at the Regent "The Rookies Return," entirely different kind of pictures.

"Cleanest Picture Ever Shown" They Say

Photoplay goers of Easton, Pa., hailed "Once to Every Woman," the Universal-Jewel production starring Dorothy Phillips, as the cleanest picture ever shown in that city, it is reported by C. W. Buss, manager of the Strand theatre there. He added that his patrons also voiced the opinion that the Dorothy Phillips was the best seen there since "The Birth of a Nation."

Puts Over Chicago to Coast Interview

HUNT STROMBERG, publicity director for Thomas H. Ince, has achieved something unique in the annals of publicitydom. It happened this wise: Hunt, while in Chicago, took Theodore Bell of the Herald-Examiner to view "Lying Lips" at Barbee's Loop Theatre. After the showing the newspaperman expressed a desire to interview the star of the production, Florence Vidor.

"That's easy," said Stromberg. "We'll locate her on the long-distance and get a novelty interview."

Accordingly, the wires extending between the Windy City and Hollywood out on the Coast became the channels of some lively exchanges in the preliminary work of getting all the factors set for the long-distance phone conversation. When all was ready, Mr. Bell and Miss Vidor took up the receivers and engaged in a rapid fire conversation for the highly expensive term of three minutes.

The stunt — and here's where Hunt Stromberg shines—was good for three columns top o' page in the Chicago daily.

Rothacker Makes Film for Catholic Drive

A Rothacker-made motion picture is playing an important part in the Wisconsin United Catholic Land drive for $5,000,000 for church institutions. The picture, "Charity at Home," is two reels in length. The film shows the various church institutions to which the money raised will go. The film is being exhibited all over the three Wisconsin dioceses.

Special Exploitation for "Mother Eternal"

Ivan Abramson's new feature, "Mother Eternal," starring Vivian Martin, is to receive special exploitation; the start in that direction having been made with a contract for special drawings by William Bengough, who has already completed the 24 sheet, which is being lithographed by the Fine Arts Lithographs Co.

Mr. Bengough has now in work the six-sheet, two three-sheets and two one-sheets, after which he will illustrate a press book in colors for this feature.

The additional advertising for "Mother Eternal," among other things, will consist of two kinds of 10s, sepia and hand-colored 11 x 14s, hand-colored 22 x 28s, 30 x 40 and 40 x 60 oil paintings, 35 to 40 sorts of cuts and mats and a variety of handsome colored slides. But a particular feature is to be an exploitation guide 100 per cent. effective. This last is now being written by one of the leading showmen in America.

Star Lays Cornerstone by Wire

Bebe Daniels Presses Key Slipping Stone Into Position

DALLAS, Texas, commanded the attention of both the theatre world and the general public on March 1st, when the cornerstone of the new Palace Theatre was laid by telegraph. Complete arrangements for the ceremony were made by the Southern Enterprises in cooperation with the Dallas Journal, the Los Angeles Record, the United Press and Miss Bebe Daniels, Realart star.

It was particularly desired that Miss Daniels should officiate at the cornerstone ceremony, since she is a Dallas-reared star. But her contract with Realart, in Los Angeles required her presence in that city at the time fixed for the laying of the cornerstone.

The problem was presented to the Dallas Journal and it arranged with the United Press and the Los Angeles Record to provide facilities by which Miss Daniels could remain in the California city and yet actually supply the physical energy necessary to put the cornerstone in place at the chosen moment.

So, early Tuesday morning, March 1, Miss Daniels drove down from her home in Beverly Hills to the down-town business district of Los Angeles to the office of the Los Angeles Record, where the United Press Bureau is located.

Bebe Daniels

At 8:28, Pacific Coast time, the telegraph operator on duty relinquished his instrument, Miss Daniels taking the key. Promptly at 8:30 a. m., Pacific Coast time, she pressed the key which broke a contact in Dallas. This in turn caused the theatre cornerstone to slide into position, and at the same time rang a bell at the theatre site. This notified everyone within hearing that the feat of laying a cornerstone by telegraph had been accomplished for the first time.

The arrangements for the mechanical part of the ceremony were handled by the Southwestern Telephone Company. The telephone company arranged for the wire that carried the flash from the United Press Bureau, in the Journal office, to the theatre site. An expert with an electrical company constructed the device, enabling the Realart star in Los Angeles to lay the cornerstone in Dallas.

The ceremony took place at 10:30, Dallas time, which, owing to the time division is 8:30 in Los Angeles. Judge Felix D. Robertson, acting for Mayor Frank Wozencraft, was invited to handle the trowel and seal the cornerstone. The Reverend Graham Frank, of the Central Christian Church, pronounced the benediction.

Representing the Southern Enterprises at the ceremony were Herschel Stuart, director of theatres; L. F. Stuart, who will manage the new playhouse; W. R. Lynch, manager of construction department; and William H. Branch, press representative.

When completed the Palace Theatre will be Dallas' largest photoplay house, boasting of a seating capacity of 3,000 and erected at a cost of $1,000,000. It will be located at Elm and St. Paul streets.

Originally conceived by E. H. Hulsey, it is being built by the Southern Enterprises of Texas and will be the finest theatre of its kind in the Southwest. According to the builders it should be ready for occupancy about July 4.

Frank Lloyd Finishes Feature

THE Goldwyn directors have been making rapid progress on their new photoplays here at the Goldwyn studios. Frank Lloyd has completed the photography on Charles Kenyon's first original scenario, "The Invisible Power," hitherto known under its working title of "The Alibi." Mr. Lloyd is getting ready for his next production, "The Grim Comedian," an original scenario by Rita Weiman, who is now here. The continuity was prepared by Bess Meredith.

Helene Chadwick, Richard Tucker and Theodore von Eltz have been added to the cast to be seen in Rupert Hughes' picturization of his own novel, "The Old Nest." It will be a Reginald Barker production and the cast already contains many names notable in the film world.

Director Wallace Worsley will this week complete the photography on Leroy Scott's first story written directly for the screen, "The Night Rose." The author is just recovering from a week's illness with the grippe and is again on the set with Director Worsley.

Will Rogers, Director Clarence G. Badger and the members of their company are in Jackson, California, taking exteriors. It was in Jackson that the exteriors for Rogers' picture, "Boys Will Be Boys," from Irvin S. Cobb's story, were photographed. Elmer L. Rice, author of Rogers' new picture, returned this week from New York where he went for the premiere of his spoken drama, "Wake Up, Jonathan," in which Mrs. Fiske is appearing at Henry Miller's theatre. Meredith P. Snyder, mayor of Los Angeles, stated in a recent newspaper interview that Will Rogers was his favorite motion picture actor.

Tom Moore's next picture will be "Beating the Game," an original scenario by Charles Kenyon, who is also writing the continuity. Victor Schertzinger, who directed Tom Moore in "Mr. Barnes of New York," and "Made in Heaven." photography on which was recently completed, will again direct the genial Irish star. Moore and his bride, Renee Adoree, are now in Honolulu on their honeymoon but expect to return in time to start work on "Beating the Game" on St. Patrick's day.

Director E. Mason Hopper and "The Bridal Path" company are still at Santa Barbara taking exteriors. They expect to return by the end of the week.

Joseph Ashurst Jackson, formerly of the New York World, now studio publicity manager for Goldwyn, was married in Los Angeles on February 19th to Miss Marjorie Manning, screen beauty and former model for Harrison Fisher and Clarence Underwood. Miss Manning had been absent from the screen for a year owing to illness.

Shirley Mason to Star in "The Lamplighter"

William Fox announces the release in the near future of "The Lamplighter," starring Shirley Mason. The film was made from a story by Maria Susanna Cummins, and has been directed by Howard M. Mitchell.

"Passion" Wins in Boston

Plays to Big Audiences at Tremont at the Regular Stage Play Prices

BOSTON has taken to "Passion," the Associated First National Pictures release, starring the continental actress, Pola Negri, in the same fashion that it appealed to New Yorkers when it established a world's record at the Capitol Theatre. Bostonians, however, are paying nearly double the price of admission as prevailed during the run at the world's largest theatre.

The production opened for its premier in Boston on Feb. 21st at the Tremont Theatre, which has had during the season some of the biggest successes of the "speakie" stage as attractions. The scale of admissions for "Passion" was maintained at the same figure as prevails at the theatre for the "speakie" production—50 cents to $1 for matinees and 50 cents to $1.50 for the evenings.

Manager David E. Dow, of the theatre, received a number of resentful protests when it was announced that the theatre would be given over to "Passion" for three weeks, based upon the theory that no motion picture could compensate patrons of the theatre for being deprived of their regular entertainment expected at the playhouse. The Boston Globe referred to this fact the day after "Passion" opened in this way:

"The Tremont Theatre has been the scene of some of the best plays of the season, and it came as a disappointment to many local theatregoers when Manager David E. Dow announced that for three weeks the attraction at his theatre would be a motion picture "Passion" by name.

"But at the close of the stirring film, as the candle which represented the life of the beautiful countess flickered and died, there was not a person in the audience who did not rejoice that the picture had come to Boston in such a favorable setting at the Tremont. And although there were many patrons who have spoken in the highest praise of the type of play which has been seen this winter at the house, there was none last night but admitted that "Passion" is a worthy successor to the legitimate plays which have been seen there."

A Strong "Feminine" Story

Louis B. Mayer's "Playthings of Destiny" Should Interest Women

A PROBLEM of interest to all women is contained in the theme of "Playthings of Destiny," the sensational dramatic vehicle in which Louis B. Mayer is presenting Anita Stewart for First National release.

The story has to do with the case of Julie Laneau, whose joyful honeymoon is shattered by a woman who pretends to be her husband's lawful wife. Believing that Geoffrey Arnold has tricked her, Julie accepts the proposal of marriage from Hubert Randolph, a forester whom she does not love, but whose name will save her child from social ostracism.

The feminine picture-goer will find much to excite her sympathies and admiration in "Playthings of Destiny." The problems in the picture are sufficiently emphasized to make them effective, but careful attention has been given in the direction, to prevent their becoming heavy or boresome, or their overcoming the action and effects which are their proper setting.

One of the main attractions of the play is the performance of the star, Anita Stewart, and the excellent work of her supporting cast, which includes Herbert Rawlinson, Walter McGrail, Richard Headrick, William V. Mong and Grace Morse. Edwin Carewe directed the picture and Robert B. Kurrle was in charge of the photography. Anthony Paul Kelly prepared the scenario from an original story by Jane Murfin and Larry Trimble.

THROUGH its president, Nathan Hirsh, the Aywon Film Corporation announces that a special six-reel production based on the "East is West" theme is now being assembled and made ready for release.

According to Mr. Hirsh's statement the picture is a big one in all that the word implies. In it will be presented a number of unusually capable players assisted by a very large cast. Numberless massive sets are shown.

Within the next week further details relative to the feature will be given out through the columns of the trade press.

Unusual Photography in "The Smart Sex"

Beautiful photography with spectacular lighting effect are said to be features of "The Smart Sex," the society drama starring Eva Novak, now nearing completion at Universal City.

Fred Leroy Granville, who directed the production, began his motion picture career as a cinematographer and L. E. Lancaster, who turned the camera, was at one time the chief of all photographers at Universal City. These two experts paid especial attention to the photography of "The Smart Sex," and got many rare lighting effects which will enhance the beauty of the picture, Universal announces.

Joe Horwitz Productions Buy "Dollars and Destiny"

JOE HORWITZ, of "Mickey" fame, head of the Joe Horwitz Productions, formerly of Detroit, Mich., has organized to operate nationally, with headquarters on the fifth floor of the Columbia Theatre Building, 47th Street and Seventh Avenue, and announces the purchase, for the United States and Canada, of "Dollars and Destiny," a new five-reel production starring Paul Cappalleni.

Mr. Horwitz states that the Joe Horwitz Productions will deal only in screen productions of the very highest grade, and that "Dollars and Destiny" is a powerful and dramatic production, selected as his first offering after long and careful survey of the productions open for this market.

Mr. Horwitz will have associated with him, as general manager, Charles A. Meade, who is well known throughout the industry, having been associated for many years with Pathe, Vitagraph, and more recently, with C. B. Price Co., Inc.

The new company will be in full operation, Monday, February 28th, 1921.

Ford Library for Theatres

40 Subjects to Be Available for Exhibitors as Well as Schools

ABOUT six months ago Fitzpatrick & McElroy, sole distributors of the products of the Ford Motion Picture Laboratories, announced they would open a non-theatrical department with pictures which were made especially for school-room use. This group of pictures was called the Ford Educational Library. Professors of the universities and colleges of the United States have been engaged to prepare these pictures which were planned to be used in connection with the work of the schools. The subjects covered are History, Regional Geography, Industrial Geography, Civics, and Agriculture. A list of forty subjects has been prepared which could be furnished to the schools and colleges of the country.

The Ford Educational Library from the releasing of the first subject was met with an open-armed reception in the non-theatrical field, it is said. But the exhibitors also saw the Ford Educational Library films, and they were just as enthusiastic about them as the school officials, is the report. They did not see why they could not have the Ford Educational Library for use in the theatres as well as the Ford Educational Weekly.

Fitzpatrick & McElroy decided to try out their suggestion. They put the Ford Educational Library in some theatres, and they proved popular. These forty subjects will, therefore, be given to the motion picture theatres as well as to the non-theatrical field. They will be placed on the regular Ford Educational Weekly program under the name of the Ford Educational Library. These films will be given to the motion picture theatres first—in other words, they will not be available for schools and churches until six months after the regular theatrical release date.

The first release of the Ford Educational Library is entitled "Iron and Steel," and was released to the theatres on February 27.

Kremer for Better Stories

Producer to Make Westerns That Will Not Insult Intelligence

THAT the motion picture story of the future will be a vast improvement on the product offered to date seems assured, according to Victor Kremer, President of the Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., who for a year or more has been lending his endeavors toward the end of bringing about a change in this direction.

"That we are about to undergo an upheaval for the better in the matter of scenarios," said Mr. Kremer, "seems about to become a fact for from the reports of the Inspirational Motion Picture Society of America, which was recently launched in my home town, San Diego. That scenarios of an entirely new character, such as will prove of inspirational and uplifting worth, will replace the reels of rot that at present are forced upon the public is certain.

"The writers of motion picture stories must improve the moral tone of their themes and better the intellectual qualities of their plots, situations and propositions as a whole. They must advance into cleaner, higher and more wholesome 'locations.'

"For some time the public has shown that it is tired of the old-time 'blood and thunder' melodrama on the screen as it tired of it on the stage. I do not mean that they do not want actionable red-blooded stories, but they must be of a calibre that is educational and uplifting and not debasing and maudlin.

Harold Lloyd

in

"Now or Never"

Reel for reel no greater comedy has ever been made!

And that goes without exception!

"Now or Never" is the tenth Harold Lloyd multiple reel comedy; it is his first three reel picture. Out of the ten there has not been one that was not strictly first class. Ten great pictures without a "flop." Has that record been equaled or even approached?

In "Now or Never" Lloyd reaches even greater heights as a comedian and Roach as a director. They have created a comedy masterpiece that will shine by any comparison.

It is our firm belief that in this first Associated Exhibitors Harold Lloyd Comedy, exhibitors are offered a production that they may confidently offer as second to none that has ever been made, and immeasurably superior to all except one or two that popular acclaim has placed among the immortals.

The Associated Exhibitors, Inc., is proud to offer "Now or Never" to exhibitors.

GOLDWYN announces the acquisition of the motion picture rights to "A Poor Relation," the famous old comedy-drama by Edward E. Kidder, in which the late Sol Smith Russell achieved his most popular and lasting success. He used the play for years up until his death. The play will serve as a starring vehicle for Will Rogers.

Rogers delights in depicting the very human, humorous, native-to-the-soil types which Mr. Russell portrayed on the speaking stage and "A Poor Relation" should make an excellent vehicle for him, declare Goldwyn officials. The old inventor, Noah Vale, is a characterization that lends itself to Mr. Rogers' easy, homey and natural style of acting, they say.

Herbert Rawlinson to Lead in "Wealth"

Herbert Rawlinson has been signed to play the leading male role opposite Ethel Clayton in "Wealth," which is to be a William D. Taylor production for Paramount, the story being by Cosmo Hamilton.

The supporting cast will include also Larry Steers, J. M. Dumont, Claire McDowel, George Periolat, Jean Acker, Richard Wayne and Peggy Prevost.

The theme of "Wealth," previously titled "The Almighty Dollar," is that money is a curse when it takes away the incentive for work. It tells of an only son whose millionare mother holds the purse strings—providing for his every desire but limiting his independence. A marriage with a young artist, played by Miss Clayton, starts a dramatic sequence in which the wife, accustomed to the joy of work, battles against an antagonistic who prefers to see her son worthless—and dependent on her—rather than let him work for a living which perhaps might make him independent.

Madge Tyrone Recovering from Accident

Madge Tyrone, staff writer at the Louis B. Mayer Los Angeles studios, has so far recovered from her recent automobile accident that she has been removed from the Clara Barton Hospital and is a convalescent at home. Among Miss Tyrone's recent scenario successes are: "The Woman in His House," now playing simultaneously at the Ambassador and Mission Theatres, Los Angeles, "Old Dad" and "Habit," all featuring Mildred Harris, and "The Invisible Fear" in which Anita Stewart is starred.

Louis B. Mayer Signs Lewis Stone

Louis B. Mayer announces that he has secured Lewis Stone to play the leading male part in "Muffled Drums," a John M. Stahl Production which Mr. Mayer will present through First National. Mr. Stone is probably best known to the picture-going public through his portrayal of the dual role in "The River's End."

"Foolish Wives" Ready Soon

WORD comes from Universal City, the West Coast studios of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, that "Foolish Wives," the new big Erick Von Stroheim picture of Monte Carlo, and the costliest and biggest picture ever produced by Universal, is nearing completion. Universal officials say this picture already has cost three-quarters of a million dollars and that its final cost will easily reach seven figures.

The picture has been in production for eight months and at various times has necessitated the employment of hundreds of "extras," carpenters, mechanicians and electricians besides an extraordinary number of other workmen. More than 150,000 feet of film have been "shot" by von Stroheim. Mr. Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, who with Mr. R. H. Cochrane, vice-president, has been in Los Angeles for several weeks, supervising the completion of the big photoplay, asserts that the director has obtained the most accurate reproduction of the famous Riviera resort, its scenery, its people and its customs, ever put in moving pictures.

Von Stroheim, whose "Blind Husbands" and "The Devil's Pass Key" made him noted for faithful reproduction of foreign settings and manners, has spared no expense in duplicating Monte Carlo in California. The huge production expense of the picture is largely due to the immense sets constructed for von Stroheim.

Frank Mayo, Universal star, playing the leading role in "Colorado," adapted from Augustus Thomas' stage play of the same title

One of the most elaborate sets is a group of buildings put up at Universal City in exact reproduction of the famous Plaza at Monte Carlo. The set is 400 feet long and 280 feet wide. It includes, besides the buildings, two circular parks, hundreds of palms and semi-tropical plants, 5,400 square feet of concrete sidewalks and many hundred square feet of oiled pavements.

One of the buildings and the most imposing, is the structure representing the Plaza side of the Casino, the famous gambling place. This has been reproduced in exact size with its towers and statuary, and even with its circular flower bed near the main entrance.

All the details of architecture and landscape gardening were supervised by Victor Andre, a sculptor of Nice, France. Even the Suicide Gardens, the iron fences, the fountains and the lamp-posts have been accurately reproduced.

To get the other side of the Casino, which over-looks the Mediterranean, von Stroheim caused the construction of other sets at Point Lobus, Monterey Bay, many miles from Universal City. There were built one large and two smaller sets, the former being the rear view of the Casino, rising on a cliff 100 feet above the Bay. Altogether, this set is 600 feet long.

Von Stroheim himself takes the leading role in "Foolish Wives," playing the part of Count Sergius Aprazin, an unscrupulous Russian nobleman and adventurer. Supporting him is an all-star cast, including Rudolph Christmas, Marguerite Armstrong, Maude George, Mae Busch, Cesare Gravina, Dale Fuller and Malveen Polo, the daughter of Eddie Polo, Universal's leading serial star. Christians died from pneumonia several weeks ago. It is said he had completed all his scenes necessary to the picture.

"Black Beauty" Scores Again

Vitagraph Reports It Success at B'klyn Strand Theatre

FOLLOWING its success at the Strand theatre, New York, "Black Beauty," Vitagraph's special production based on the famous story by Anna Sewell, cross the river and duplicated the success at the Brooklyn Strand, according to a statement from Vitagraph headquarters. The widespread interest in Miss Sewell's classic was manifested in the unusual number of family parties, including the children, who visited the theatre during the week of the run.

The management of the Strand theatre in Brooklyn, did not find it necessary to go to extremes to attract large audiences declares a statement from the Vitagraph headquarters. The only unusual means that it employed was to send a personal letter with a booklet of the play to the school teachers. "Black Beauty" was presented with a well-balanced bill, which included Larry Semon in "The Sportsman," also released by Vitagraph, and an interesting prologue for "Black Beauty."

Reports from the Brooklyn Strand up to the middle of the week were enthusiastic. In many cases, school teachers took entire classes of children to the special after-school matinees, declares Vitagraph.

That adults can be just as enthusiastic as children when the proper attraction is presented is proved by a letter received by Vitagraph this week from Charles W. Picquet of the Carolina theatre, Pinehurst, N. C. Mr. Picquet stated that he has run nearly all the big productions of all the producers that are really worthy of the name of "big" but had yet to run one that met with such universal approval and commendation as did "Black Beauty."

"If exhibitors are wide awake for pictures that will add prestige to their theatres as well as dollars to their pockets, they will certainly avail themselves of this great opportunity," Mr. Picquet wrote, "for 'Black Beauty' will not only draw the better class of people to the theatres but it will satisfy them thoroughly after they come.

"It is one of a few special productions on which an exhibitor can raise his admission price with the absolute assurance that his patrons will consider it well worth the added price. 'Black Beauty' is a credit to the industry.

"Here is a little personal story that may interest you," Mr. Picquet concludes, in proving the interest of adult audiences. "Among our guests here is a well known banker who seldom goes to the 'movies' when he is at home because so few of them he considers worth the time spent in seeing them. He came to see 'Black Beauty' and at the matinee next day he was back with four others whom he brought. Over at Southern Pines the second night he was there with an automobile load of friends, and he told me he enjoyed it more the third time than the first.

A. C. Edwards, manager of the big Palace theatre at New Haven, reports record interest and business on "Black Beauty," and proved that this special was most responsive to original exploitation. In New Haven Mr. Edwards' handling of this picture attracted the attention and comment of teachers of all grades, and even the professors of Yale University, declares the Vitagraph statement.

Meighan to Appear for Charitable Purposes

Breaking his rule against personal appearances at theatres, Thomas Meighan, Paramount star, who arrived Saturday in New York from Los Angeles, will be the principal attraction Thursday at the Liberty Theatre, Youngstown, O., on the invitation of C. W. Deiber, the manager.

Hearing that Mr. Meighan was coming East, Mr. Deiber wired him offering $1,000 if he would appear in person at the Liberty for the evening performance Thursday. Mr. Meighan accepted on the condition that he would give $500 to the Youngstown Orphan Asylum and $500 to the Actors' Fund.

The Paramount star will leave for Youngstown Wednesday and will return Friday to begin work on his next Paramount picture, "The Conquest of Canaan," Booth Tarkington's story.

Since then the following pictures have been produced and released: "Food for Scandal," Wanda Hawley; "You Never Can Tell," Bebe Daniels; "The New York Idea," Alice Brady; "Blackbirds," Justine Johnstone; "Her First Elopement," Wanda Hawley; "Something Different," Constance Binney; "Ducks and Drakes," Bebe Daniels; "Eyes of the Heart," Mary Miles Minter; "Her Beloved Villain," Wanda Hawley; "Oh Lady, Lady," Bebe Daniels; "The Flaything of Broadway," Justine Johnstone; "The Snob," Wanda Hawley; "All Souls' Eve," Mary Miles Minter; "She Couldn't Help It," Bebe Daniels; "The Outside Woman," Wanda Hawley, and "Out of the Chorus," Alice Brady.

Hodkinson Service Defined

Statement Issued Explaining the Character of Hodkinson 100% Plan

IN years gone by the various producer-distributor organizations sold their product on a 100% basis,—that is the exhibitor booked their service wthout screen examination and without knowing in advance what he was going to get. He gave the producer-distributor "so many days" each week and let the producers take care of the pictures to be filled in. Therefore, the Hodkinson 100% plan is not considered, in the accepted sense of the word, a new thing. While the old "Program System" had much to recommend it, the fact remained that it could not last under producer control because the makers of the pictures did not feel any responsibility towards the exhibitor and used him for a good thing, declares W. W. Hodkinson. That gave the "Program System" a bad name declares the Hodkinson statement, and it has come to mean an inferior grade of product.

"The one hundred per cent. Hodkinson plan as it exists today has much to recommend it for it helps to solve one of the exhibitor's greatest problems,—the obtaining of an assured supply of quality product," continues the statement from the Hodkinson headquarters.

"The exhibitor needs 52 features a year,—or 104 features,—or 365 features,—depending on how often he changes his program. He now has to go out to the different exchanges and pick his pictures. He cannot be sure of getting just what he wants; they were all after the good ones! And that's where Hodkinson comes in. The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation can assure him of from twenty-four to thirty splendid productions a year,—and he knows that on his Hodkinson days he will be giving his patrons the very best pictures it is possible to obtain."

Paramount Premier Abroad

"What Every Woman Knows" to Be Shown in London About April 1st

FROM his office at the Lasky studio in Hollywood, Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announced this week that William DeMille's Paramount production of Sir James M. Barrie's play, "What Every Woman Knows," will have its English premiere at the Palace theatre, London, about April 1st. At the opening performance of the engagement, which in all probability will be an extended one. Barrie himself will be present, along with many other notable figures in British literary and theatrical circles.

Mr. Lasky spoke most enthusiastically of "What Every Woman Knows," at the production of which he was an interested spectator while it was being filmed by Mr. DeMille at the Lasky studio and which he saw for the first time in its finished form at the home office in New York shortly before his return to California. "This picture," he said, "represents the finest interpretation of a play that has ever been made and is virtually a literal translation of Barrie to the screen."

For these reasons, Mr. Lasky said, and as a compliment to the distinguished author, it was decided to give this special showing of the film in England in advance of its general release in this country and closely following its New York premiere, despite the hitherto iron-bound conventions governing the block booking of American-made pictures in Great Britain.

When "What Every Woman Knows" was shown at the Paramount home office, it made a profound impression upon all present, particularly upon those who saw the Barrie play when it was presented, twelve years ago, on the stage of the Empire theatre in New York. Mr. DeMille, they declared, not only had caught the spirit of Barrie but had thoroughly absorbed it, so that the production is nothing more nor less than a faithful reproduction in celluloid of the playwright's original work and the atmosphere with which it was surrounded by the stagecraft of Charles Frohman. Lois Wilson and Conrad Nagel play the leading roles.

Fox Makes An Experiment

Films "Oliver Twist" in American Costumes and Atmosphere of Today

WILLIAM FOX is now engaged in a producing experiment. He has taken Charles Dickens' "Oliver Twist" and has lifted it completely out of its English atmosphere, brought it up to date, dressed its characters up in American clothes, transplanted its action to an American city, and while following the incidents of the Dickens story exactly as they were written, is presenting it as a story of today, in surroundings and situations familiar to us all, without sacrificing in any way the dramatic and powerful appeal of the English masterpiece, it is declared.

A recent pre-release of the film, which is known as "Oliver Twist, Jr.," proves beyond doubt, according to Fox officials, that the Dickens tale has not suffered in being moved across the sea. William Fox will use the new departure in presentation to introduce Harold Goodwin as a new star under his banner. The film story was made by F. McGrew Willis and directed by Millard Webb. Much interest in the new production is being manifested in film circles, and the Fox people, after hearing the comments at the pre-release showing, contend that it will prove a winner.

Special Shown Aboard Ship

"The Four Horsemen" is Shown to Passengers of Adriatic at Sea

PASSENGERS aboard the White Star liner Adriatic had opportunity Saturday evening, February 19, to witness the marine premiere of Metro's picture presentation of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." Arrangements for the mid-Atlantic premiere were in the hands of Mr. John Macrae of the firm of E. P. Dutton and Company, the American publishers of Blasco Ibanez's books. Mr. Macrae is traveling to Europe on the Adriatic to attend a conference with Blasco Ibanez; and consented to take a second print to Europe.

Before he sailed for Europe Mr. Macrae announced that "The Four Horsemen" has now passed its 161st edition and that the demand for it is still extraordinarily heavy throughout the United States. It is estimated that the legion of readers of this remarkable book in the United States alone totals more than ten million persons.

Plans for the New York premiere of "The Four Horsemen," which is a Rex Ingram Production from a screen adaptation by June Mathis, are being rapidly completed. It will open at the Lyric theatre on March 6th under the personal supervision of Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld.

Hodkinson Tells Advantages of His Policy

In a recent letter received at the Home Office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation from its executive head who is sojourning on the West Coast, the following paragraph is taken:

"Right here in Los Angeles in the centre of the producing activities it has been brought home to me more forcefully than at any other time how much better we are equipped to meet conditions as they are today. Where other companies are maintaining huge studio organizations with staggering overheads we are getting a better grade of product from as many as eight independent producing units, each working on its own capital and all competing with each other to furnish us with the best product. You can readily see what tremendous advantages we can offer the exhibitor who ties in with us. Make him realize this and sell him on the idea of depending on Hodkinson service for twenty-four weeks of the year,—and we will do the rest."

Earle Williams Will Star in Melodrama

Earle Williams' next Vitagraph feature will be "The Secret of the Silver Car," from the novel by Wyndham Martyn, well known British author. The new story is a melodrama with an international atmosphere, carrying several surprising twists amid much rapid action.

Kathryn Adams, well known leading woman, has been cast to appear opposite the star. Production has already commenced under the direction of David Smith.

Special Press Book for Chinatown Picture

To emphasize the showmanship possibilities of "A Tale of Two Worlds," the Gouverneur Morris story Goldwyn has prepared one of the largest and most practical exhibitor's service books they have ever issued. It is sixteen pages, with an additional eight-page insert containing special press material. The book is printed on 100 pound coated stock and has a cover in red, yellow, black and grey that is stunning enough to adorn a frame in the lobby of any palace of the photoplay.

Two scenes from "See My Lawyer," an Al Christie super-special to be released by Robertson-Cole

T. Roy Barnes in R-C Special

Al Christie's "See My Lawyer" Due for Release

ROBERTSON-COLE announces the release, in the near future, of "See My Lowyer," a production directed by Al Christie and starring T. Roy Barnes. It is described to be one of the Christy comedy-dramas of the "So Long Letty" type.

T. Roy Barnes has long been a favorite on the legitimate stage. He is probably best remembered in the leading role of "See My Lawyer" which Max Marcin's comedy was produced on Broadway by A. H. Woods not long ago. In adapting the play to the screen Al Christie added a little "pep" and Barnes, appreciating the fact that the camera gave him a wider scope outdid himself, declares Robertson-Cole.

In the supporting cast Mr. Barnes has with him such popular screen artists as Grace Darmond, Lloyd Whitlock, Jean Acker, J. P. Lockney, Tom McGuire and Bert Woodruff. Miss Darmond co-starred as one of the famous quartet of funmakers in "So Long Letty," in which T. Roy Barnes appeared also.

Lloyd Whitlock is practically established as a star in his own right. He has a leading part in "One Man in a Million," with George Beban. J. P. Lockney has appeared in a dozen pictures turned out of Hollywood within the last year.

The story of "See My Lawyer" runs through a maze of funny episodes. Robert Garner has become acquainted with a certain Trueman, an inventor, who assures him he can make artificial rubber. Robert has launched The Artificial Rubber Company, sending thousands of circulars through the mail, advertising stock.

Money pours in from all sides. Robert, believing himself on the brink of fortune, proposes to his sweetheart and the wedding day is set. The Rubber Trust becomes interested and asks a demonstration with an idea of buying.

On the day set for the demonstration Robert discovers that Trueman is a fakir and his rubber invention a joke. His friend, Billy Noble, who is an attorney, advises Robert to sham insanity to escape a jail sentence. The scheme works until the postal authorities get after him for using the mails to defraud. It is either jail or an asylum for Robert.

The Rubber Trust bribes Trueman, the inventor, to give them his formula. It turns out that the concoction makes an indestructible paving block instead of rubber, so a fortune is realized anyway. The situations are remarkable and Barnes, in his "crazy" scenes, is the funniest ever.

Robertson-Cole claims "See My Lawyer" is a photographic masterpiece.

There are said to be many big and gorgeous sets, both exterior and interior. The story is worked out in a perfectly logical manner with the entire cast working hard all the time to product dramatic and humorous effects.

Burr Lauds Educational Service

Tells How He Came to Release Via Educational

IN reviewing his first years' experiences as a producer of short subjects, C. C. Burr, president of the Master Films, Inc., whose "Torchy Comedies" have achieved nation wide popularity, was liberal in his praise for the Educational Film Corporation through which organization he distributes.

"A little more than a year ago," said Mr. Burr, "I made a rather exhaustive and illuminating inquiry into the problem of Short Subject distribution. Like many others I had, in my experience, paid but scant attention to this particular phase of distribution. I erroneously believed that it represented only a very minor part of the big problem.

"It was a foregone conclusion that with the Sewell Ford stories in my possession and with Johnny Hines, together with an especially able cast and director, I had created a sterling combination.

"Everyone assumed that I would at once seek out a long established, fully organized and nationally known organization as my distributers. The prestige, my friends said, is what you want but they did not really understand. I did not want prestige as much as I wanted real representation and the sustained, sincere sales efforts I knew my productions merited. I also knew that rare indeed was the organization that could give me prestige and whose sales force would really sell short subjects.

"While still in a state closely approximating dilemma as to the best course to steer, my first 'Torchy' was completed and given a prominent position on the program of the Strand Theatre, New York City. It was seen by Mr. Earl Hammons, who was then in the very midst of the work of extending Educational Service throughout the country and he sought me to interest me in his then novel idea. My attention was caught when he told me that it was his determination to specialize in the distribution of Short Subjects to the exclusion of all else. Together, Mr. Hammons and I examined the plan most minutely, and I was mightly glad to discover that his views and mine coincided.

"I was sold not only on the benefits such an affiliation would bring me then, but also, what it would mean to me in the future. No difficulty was experienced in reaching an early and wholly equitable distributing arrangement whereby Education Films became the sole distributers of the Torchy Comedies for an extended period. And I am mighty glad I did."

Scene from Pathe's new serial picture, "The Avenging Arrow"

Pathe Serial Due March 13

First Episode of "The Avenging Arrow" With Ruth Roland is Set

BELIEVING "The Avenging Arrow," the new Western Pathe serial starring Ruth Roland, to be in a class by itself and that it will set the highest standard yet attempted in the serial field, Pathe Exchange, Inc., has scheduled the first episode, "The Vow of Mystery," as the principal offering to head the releases for the week of March 13. The serial is an adaptation of Arthur Preston Rankin's magazine story, "The Honeymoon Quest," put in serial form by Ben R. Cohen and produced under the personal supervision of Robert Brunton. W. S. Van Dyke and William Bowman were the directors.

"Colorful settings replete with thrills make this new starring vehicle stand out head and shoulders above the average serial, teling the adventures of a girl born and raised in Southern California," declares a statement from the Pathe headquarters. "In fact, it has been commented on by studio experts as perhaps the most elaborate and artistic production ever attempted with a serial story and is considered by the Pathe sales organization as one having the greatest promise for popular success of any serial production that company has offered for exhibitors' approval.

"Miss Roland has an unusually fine opportunity to display her marked emotional ability, not frequently supplied the serial heroine, and, in the cut-back scenes, in which she impersonates her ancestors, there is the occasion for displaying her poise and beauty to advantage. The star's supporting cast includes Eddie Hearn, Virginia Ainsworth, S. E. Jennings, Otto Lederer and William Steele in the principal roles."

Mary Pickford in Boy Role

To Play "Little Lord Fauntleroy" of Frances Burnett's Famed Story

MARY FICKFORD'S next film offering, says Bennie Zeidman, her new production manager, will be "Little Lord Fauntleroy," the literary classic written by Frances Hodgson Burnett.

"We believe," said Zeidman, "that 'Little Lord Fauntleroy' will be Miss Pickford's best picture. Certainly greater opportunity for the display of her genius is offered in this vehicle than in any story she has ever undertaken. For the first time since she appeared in 'Stella Maris,' Miss Pickford will be seen in a dual role. In addition to playing Little Lord Fauntleroy, she will also assume the role of the boy's mother, and no two characterizations could possibly be so vastly different or so sharply contrasted as these. The public will have the opportunity of seeing Miss Pickford as a mature woman and also as a child, all in the same picture."

Another circumstance that will make this feature particularly interesting, Zeidman pointed out, is the fact that for the first time in her career Miss Pickford will be seen as a boy throughout the entire picture. There have been instances where she has disguised herself in male attire in other productions, but never before has she ever undertaken to portray a boy throughout a whole play. The little curly-haired Fauntleroy part offers an opportunity for characterization that it has been Miss Pickford's life-long ambition to accomplish.

Bernard McConville, who won fame through his screen adaptations of such remarkable plays as "The Connecticut Yankee," "The Old Swimmin' Hole" and many others, has been engaged to prepare the script of Fauntleroy for Miss Pickford.

"Kent Week" Great Succes

New York Exchange Hopes to Surpass Its Record of September

ENTHUSIASM among New York and New Jersey exhibitors over Paramount's "Kent Week," which runs from March 27 to April 2, is declared to have so far exceeded expectations that Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's New York exchange has the positive assurance of beating the great record established Paramount Week, last September, when over two hundred houses played an entire week of Paramount pictures.

When Manager H. H. Buxbaum and his associates of Paramount's New York exchange planned for this special week, in conjunction with every other Famous Players-Lasky exchange throughout the country, it was determined that the largest film exchange in the world should carry off first honors in this country-wide drive and beat all previous records. When it is stated that over two hundred exhibitors played all-Faramount programs last autumn on Paramount Week, it will be seen that the New York exchange set some mark to shoot at. In order to separate the idea from the minds of exhibitors that the annual Paramount Week had been changed from September March, Mr. Buxbaum decided call the coming drive "Kent Week in honor of Paramount's new ge eral manager of distribution, Sy ney R. Kent.

For the exploitation campaig among New York and New Jers exhibitors special painted car were made to insert in each pan of the wainscotting in the Ne York exchange, with different rea ing matter on each relating to Ke Week. One hundred red card each with a border of dollar mark were printed, reading "KEN WEEK"—Ask Any Paramou Man." These were hung at tacked in every possible place the office. Mounted copies of t special full-page newspaper a with explanatory reading matter c each, were also used in the office the accessories and shipping depar ments and the halls. Mr. Buxbau got out a circular letter to e hibitors calling attention to Ke Week and the exploitation depar ment also sent a circular letter 900 houses in the territory. Thou ands of Kent Week stickers we used to paste on the backs.

Max Linder Scores a Hi

His "Seven Years Bad Luck" Well Received by Public and Reviewers

CHICAGO is the first of the large cities to report on "Seven Years' Bad Luck," with Max Linder, and both the word which came to Robertson-Cole from the State-Lake Theatre, where it played, and the reviews which were given it by the newspapers, indicate that the picture has started what will be a national triumph, declares a statement from the Robertson-Cole headquarters. Mae Tinee, writer in the Chicago Tribune, is quoted as follows:

"The most polished of the comedians, in this "Seven Years' Bad Luck" written by himself, he proves to be also both adroit and amusing. As I remember, the comedies I saw him in a number of years ago did not impress me especially. This one, which has some unique comedy situations and some really clever acting, did."

Rob Reel, of the Chicago Evening American, also gives "Seven Years' Bad Luck" a warm appreciation. He writes: "Max Linder, at the State-Lake in 'Seven Years' Bad Luck,' is clever, versatile and altogether delightful. An American title-writer has infused a vast amount of native 'pep' into the picture, and Max creates that ineffable atmosphere which we call 'Parisian.' Thelma Percy and Alta Allen support him. Miss Allen is particularly lovely."

Reports to Robertson-Cole from the State-Lake Theatre, which gave the picture its premier in Chicago, are to the effect that it enjoyed a remarkable business, and the public was especially enthusiastic in greeting Mr. Linder's return to the screen.

"Seven Years' Bad Luck" now being booked by Robertso Cole throughout the various terr tories all over the country, and r markable exhibitor interest is b ing shown in the production, it stated. An extensive and car fully worked out exploitation an publicity campaign has been pr pared by Robertson-Cole.

Mary and "Doug" t Go to Mexico for Rest

AS soon as Mary Pickford completes her scenes for her fourth United Artists Production, scheduled as an early spring release, she will go to Mexico City with Douglas Fairbanks, where they will celebrate their first wedding anniversary and also enjoy a short vacation.

All plans are now complete for "Honeymoon Number Two," as Miss Pickford calls it, and it is expected that the famous couple will be away from the call of the director and the glare of lights for a month.

During their absence, preparations on the script for "Little Lord Fauntleroy" will be carried forward by Bernard McConville, and the work of making "The Three Musketeers" ready for the camera will be conducted by Edward Knoblock, noted British dramatist, to whom has been allotted the task of converting the Dumas' classic into celluloid.

Robert Edeson in "Mob" of Young Feature

What is said to be one of the greatest novelties in motion picture circles in recent years is the picturization of mob scenes in which stars of the legitimate stage participate. When admirers of Clara Kimball Young see her latest picture, "Straight from Paris," they will unconsciously be witnessing one of the greatest "mob" casts ever seen in one production, for no less personages than Mr. and Mrs. Robert Edeson, Lionel Bellmore, Bertram Grassby, Mr. and Mrs. William P. Carleton, Roy Atwell, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Grattan, Edward M. Kimball and Clara Kimball Young played the role of "star mobists."

During the production period last week of Sada Cowan's thrilling story, "Straight from Paris," at the Garson Studios, Los Angeles, it was found that in one of the largest scenes, a vision scene of the French Revolution, a thousand extras were needed for the mob. Miss Young invited Mr. and Mrs. Robert Edeson and their friends to witness the "taking" of the big scenes of the picture, and Mr. Edeson accepted the invitation on the condition that Miss Young would allow them to appear en masse in the mob scenes.

Interesting Theme in Re-Edited Talmadge

In what Franklyn E. Backer claims to be one of the best acting parts ever played by an emotional actress, Norma Talmadge is the central figure in a drama founded upon prenatal influence which deals with a question that has caused no end of interesting discussion in the medical profession and is said to take a very definite stand against some of the most noted physicians of modern times. According to this re-edited Norma Talmadge feature, which is the work of Hopp Hadley, evil hapits can be inherited both as a tendency as far as the mind is concerned and as a bodily weaknesses.

In the case of "A Daughter's Strange Inheritance," the Horizon Pictures, the moral nature is awakened and the beautiful young unfortunate triumphs over her fault by the appeal to her soul.

Says Wallace Reid Is Popular in Manila

That Wallace Reid is Americanizing Manila is the report brought to this country by Luis J. Palmett, owner of numerous motion picture theatres in Manila, who is completing a tour of the United States for the purpose of familiarizing himself with motion picture production and presentation methods.

"You know," said Mr. Palmett, while visiting the Lasky studio, Hollywood, "Reid is the most popular star appearing in pictures in Manila. When one of his pictures plays at a local theatre, the crowd lines up for blocks to get a glimpse of its idol.

"Boys and girls alike are Wallace Reid crazy. You may not believe it, but the boys at Manila college have adopted Wally as their fashion plate."

Four Metro Features in March

FOUR dramatic photoplays—"Extravagance," starring May Allison; "The Little Fool," an all-star special from the novel by Jack London; "A Message from Mars," starring Bert Lytell. and "Puppets of Fate," presenting Viola Dana in the stellar role—constitute Metro's releases for March.

The releasing company considers the offerings remarkable especially in point of excellence of story material. Every one of the four photoplays is the work originally of authors of national or international prominence.

May Allison's picture, "Extravagance," ready for booking March 7, has been adapted from "More Stately Mansions," by Ben Ames Williams. The second release, "The Little Fool," is the screen version of Jack London's novel of a woman's indecision, "The Little Lady of the Big House." The play, "A Message from Mars," by Richard Ganthoney, is one of the classics of the generation. It was a stage vehicle for years of Charles Hawtrey, the eminent English actor. Viola Dana's story, "Puppets of Fate," was written for her especially by Donn Byrne.

"Extravagance," starring May Allison, will be the first one to see the light of the exhibitor's day, the release date being March 7. The scenario is by Edward Lowe, Jr. Philip E. Rosen directed, Rudolph Bergquist was the camera man, and Sidney Ullman was art director.

May Allison as she looked on her wedding day in the Metro picture, "Extravagance"

"The Little Fool," to be released on March 14, is a C. E. Shurtleff all-star production, with all the virility and brilliance that characterize the original novel. The all-star cast is as follows: Milton Sills, Ora Carew, Nigel Barrie, Byron Munson, Marjorie Prevost, Helen Howard and Iva Forrester. Philip E. Rosen directed, with Director of Productions Bayard Veiller supervising. Edward Lowe, Jr., did the adaptation, Allan Siegl photographed and A. F. Mantz directed the art work.

Bert Lytell plays the stellar role in "A Message from Mars" to be released on March 21. This Maxwell Karger production is from the stage play by Richard Ganthoney, in which Sir Charles Hawtrey won renown. An uncanny tale of the regeneration of the most selfish man by a Martian visitant, it combines reality and romance in sufficient measure to satisfy all picture goers, and to insure as great a success on the screen as it received on the stage.

Arthur Zellner and Arthur Maude did the scenario, Arthur Martinelli photographed the picture and M. P. Staulcup designed and executed the art interiors. Bert Lytell's supporting cast includes Raye Dean, Maud Milton, Alphonz Ethier, Gordon Ash, Leonard Mudie, Mary Louise Beaton, Frank Currier and George Spink.

The fourth release, "Puppets of Fate," starring Viola Dana, is scheduled for March 28. This is a genuinely dramatic piece of work from the pen of Donn Byrne, well known as a novelist and writer of short stories. The story has to do with an Italian couple who keep a puppet show in Italy.

For her supporting cast, Viola Dana has Francis McDonald, Jackie Saunders, Fred Kelsey, Thomas Ricketts and Edward Kennedy. The adaptation is by Ruth Ann Baldwin and Molly Parro; direction by Dallas M. Fitzgerald. John Arnold photographed, and Sidney Ullman was art director.

Original Stories for Goldwyn

Works of Prominent Authors Available for Filming

THAT the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is adhering to its announced policy of producing original stories by America's foremost authors, is revealed by an analysis of the list of new subjects selected for production immediately following those now in preparation at the Culver City studios.

Out of the nineteen stories named, eleven are original screen material furnished by members of the Goldwyn Eminent Authors group now located at the studios, and by other noted writers who have been engaged to contribute to the Goldwyn program, including Rita Weiman, Katherine Newlin Burt and Alice Duer Miller. Two original photoplays have recently been completed, Gouverneur Morris' "A Tale of Two Worlds," Gertrude Atherton's "Don't Neglect Your Wife," and Rupert Hughes' "Dangerous Curve Ahead," is also nearing completion, making fourteen originals either completed or in prospect.

It is also announced that a number of the authors will remain at the studios during the production of their works so that they may cooperate with the directors. During the past few months, with Rupert Hughes, Gertrude Atherton, Gouverneur Morris and Mary Roberts Rinehart all located at the studios, this co-operation has brought excellent results and is being encouraged by Goldwyn.

Rupert Hughes has written two more stories directly for the screen, "From the Ground Up" and "The Wall Flower"; Leroy Scott has written two, "The Night Rose" and "The Mother"; Charles Kenyon has written two, "The Alibi" and "Beating the Game," the latter

Wallace Beery as "Long Jo" in the Goldwyn picture, "A Tale of Two Worlds," a Frank Lloyd production written by Gouverneur Morris for Tom Moore; Elmer L. Rice has written an original for Will Rogers, "The Arizona Romeo"; Rita Weiman, a new member of the Eminent Authors, has contributed one original thus far, "The Grim Comedian"; Mary Roberts Rinehart is working on "Jane"; and Gouverneur Morris has contributed "The Ace of Hearts" and "Until Death Do Us Part." All of these titles are subject to change, announces Goldwyn.

Katherine Newlin Burt, already represented on the Goldwyn list by two photoplays made from her novels, "The Branding Iron" and "Snowblind," is writing an original scenario. Alice Duer Miller is also going to do an original for Goldwyn.

These successful writers are turning their imaginative faculties upon motion picture writing as a new art—a new form of expression. They have rapidly mastered the guiding principles of screen storytelling and are inventing new technical means looking to the betterment of motion pictures. They have proved Goldwyn's contention that stories written directly for the screen, in picture form rather than in word form (either spoken or written), conceived with the limitations and possibilities of the camera in mind, make greater photoplays than do adaptations of stories conceived in other artistic forms.

Ballin Announces Two Forthcoming Pictures

Instead of a single production to follow "East Lynne" Hugo Ballin announces two. The first is a story written directly for the screen entitled "Ave Maria." Following this will come a picturization of Charlotte Bronte's novel, "Jane Eyre," both of which, like "East Lynne," will be distributed by Hodkinson. Mabel Ballin will of course play the principal feminine role in the new picture and will create for the first time on the screen the complex and fascinating character of "Jane Eyre."

Certain preliminary scenes in the latter have already been photographed and the production will be completed when the weather permits, immediately following "Ave Maria."

This is a story of the present day, its locales ranging from a steel manufacturing town in Pennsylvania to the catacombs of Rome.

Important Tie-Up for Frederick Picture

An important tie-up for "The Mistress of Shenstone" has been made through Grosset and Dunlap, publishers. This firm has printed a special edition of "The Mistress of Shenstone," with a picture of Pauline Frederick on the jacket-cover. Wherever books are sold, Grosses and Dunlap publications may be obtained. From the exhibitor's angle, Robertson-Cole recommends that he notify book stores, drug stores, etc., where books are sold, that he is going to play "The Mistress of Shenstone" on certain dates, remind such stores that "The Mistress of Shenstone" is included in the Grosset & Dunlap publications and suggest that they give a window display on this publication before and during the screening of the picture.

Life of Lumberlands in Holman Day Picture

"Caught in the Rapids" is the third of the Holman Day Series depicting outdoor life in its most dramatic form, scheduled for release by Pathe, March 13. This play shows a page out of the life of the logman. A fine background is provided, showing life in the lumberlands of the Northwest, and how logs are transported from the lumber camps to the mills. The picture contains not only strong melodrama, but also all the thrills of a Pathe serial. One of the most thrilling moments ever screened, which was filmed with great difficulty, is a dash over falls and down the rapids in a canoe.

Currier Is 27 Times Movie Father

Frank Currier, in enacting the part of the Rev. Marlowe in the George D. Baker production, "Without Limit," and S.-L. Picture to be released by Metro, proves himself one of the most consistent fathers on the screen today. This is the veteran character actor's twenty-seventh paternal role, discounting his fatherhood in real life.

Universal Starts Serial

Eileen Sedgwick to Star in "The Terror Trail"; Edward Kull Directs

PRODUCTION has started at Universal City on "The Terror Trail," a new serial in which Eileen Sedgwick will play a hazardous starring role under the direction of Edward Kull.

In no serial production in which she has heretofore been featured has the Universal serial star been required to do the dangerous feats which have been outlined for her in "The Terror Trail." Universal promises that the new serial will surpass even Miss Sedgwick's last chaptered thriller. "The Diamond Queen," in suspense and thrill.

The story of "The Terror Trail" was written by John W. Gray and Edward Kull, with the supervisory collaboration of William Lord Wright, chief of the serial and short reel feature department at Universal City.

In scope the narrative is cosmopolitan, touching every country on the globe. In theme it concerns a girl who, single handed, undertakes a patriotic service to her country by solving a great international mystery and frustrating the plan of crooked diplomatic agents.

George Larkin, widely known as a leading man, had been selected to play opposite the star, and will head an all-star supporting cast of unusual appeal.

Al Smith, whose principal dramatic work has been in "villainous" roles, and Barney Furey, are two other popular players who have been selected for the opening episodes.

Kathleen Norris Is Signed

Goldwyn Engages Prominent Novelist to Write Original Stories

GOLDWYN announces that Kathleen Norris, the prominent novelist, has been signed to write original scenarios for that firm and also to contribute her other work for picturization. Mrs. Norris left on Saturday last for Europe for a short time, but immediately upon her return will proceed to the Goldwyn studios at Culver City, Calif., to study the technique of motion picture writing on the ground and probably to aid personally in the preparation of the continuity and in the directing and photographing of her first scenario.

The acquisition of Mrs. Norris adds another name to the long list of prominent authors who have contracted to write for Goldwyn, the most recent, in addition to the Eminent Authors group headed by Rex Beach, being Katherine Newlin Burt, Alice Duer Miller, Anzia Yezierska and Rita Weiman.

Several of Mrs. Norris' novels have been picturized and have met with conspicuous success. In her writings she has presented the woman's point of view on the various problems of life, and done so in a particularly authentic fashion. Goldwyn believes that her dramatic, story-telling instinct, coupled with her realistic portraiture of life will result in photoplays that will have a strong appeal and will aid in bringing motion pictures into closer touch with actuality.

Geo. Fitzmaurice Unit Back from South

George Fitzmaurice, director, and the cast for "Experience," George V. Hobart's popular play which he is producing for Paramount, have returned from Savannah, Ga., and St. Augustine, Fla., where exterior scenes for the picture were taken and are now at work on the interiors at Paramount's new Long Island studio.

Penrhyn Stanlaws Wil Direct Betty Compson

AMONG the interesting announcements made this week in Hollywood by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is one to the effect that Penrhyn Stanlaws, the noted artist, who has been studying the production of motion pictures for the past year at the Eastern and West Coast Paramount studios, has signed a five-year contract to direct Paramount pictures and that he has been chosen to direct Betty Compson in her first Paramount starring picture.

The title of this picture is "At the End of the World," and it is to be an adaptation of the European stage success of the same name by Ernest Klein.

Simultaneous Runs for Chester Two-Reeler

Educational Film Exchanges Inc., claim that a new record for two-reel comedies was set in Philadelphia last week when three leading theatres played "Beat It," latest of the Chester Series, for a solid week simultaneously. These houses were the Stanton, Victoria and Palace.

At the same time the Arcadia was playing "Hey Rube," a Christie Comedy featuring Bobby Vernon for the second week, while "Torchy Mixes In," starring Johnny Hines, was being shown at the Capitol; and "Rest In Peace," one of the single-reel Gayety Series, also released by Educational, was being shown at the Regent.

Paramount in Effective Tie-Up on Hart Film

As the result of a plan initiated by Gordon H. Place of the advertising department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the Columbia Graphophone Company has agreed, through its stores in every part of the country, to arrange special window displays on its three records of "Darling Nellie Gray," the song which features "The Testing Block" any time the picture was shown in the vicinity of one of these stores. The tie-up has registered with record-breaking results at the box-office, declares Paramount.

"U. P. Trail" Commended by Train Master

In a letter addressed to the employees of the U.P.R.R., W. C. Shelver, the division train master of that road recommends "The U.P. Trail," released by the W. W. Hodkinson organization and based on Zane Grey's story, "as very interesting to the railroad people particularly on account of its being so closely interwoven with the early history of the U.P.R.R." The letter advises that "not one of the employees should miss this production."

Fugitive Slacker Seen in Fox News No. 42

WHAT is styled the first big news reel beat of 1921, showing Grover Cleveland Bergdoll—the fugitive millionaire draft dodger, in Germany, has been achieved by Fox News. Released in the issue of Vol. 2, No. 42. In the opinion of Fox officials, it ranks in news interest with the famous pictures of D'Annunzio's entry into Fiume, the pictures of the Thanksgiving Day riot on Fifth avenue, and the signing of the articles for the Carpentier-Dempsey fight—three of the outstanding Fox News exclusives of 1920.

The Bergdoll pictures were taken in the village of Eberbach, Baden, where the young Philadelphia slacker is living in luxury, and where an attempt to kidnap him was made recently by U. S. Secret Service men. Chief credit for the enterprise which made the pictures possible must go to Capt. Paul Muller, Fox News staff cameraman stationed at Berlin.

Moore Changes Rule on Priscilla Dean Film

Tom Moore, manager of the Rialto and Garden theatres in Washington, D. C., and one of the best known exhibitors in America, has just broken one of the oldest precedents of his Washington houses. He has booked a picture for a week's run in the Garden theatre which has just completed a week's run at the Rialto.

The picture is "Outside the Law," the Tod Browning Universal Jewel production starring Priscilla Dean. During its recent run at the Rialto it was an unusual success. This so impressed the exhibitor he re-booked the picture. Not having an early open date at the Rialto, he made arrangements to show the picture at the Garden.

Special Audience See "Without Limit"

Praise nearly as superlative as the title of "Without Limit" was accorded this George D. Baker production, for S-L Pictures, at a special showing arranged by Metro, its distributors, at the New York Theatre roof Wednesday morning, February 16, states an announcement from Metro.

Personages prominent in the motion picture industry, including producers, directors of big theatres, screen and dramatic publication editors, members of the cast of the picture and the like witnessed the story which, a few months ago, in fiction form, appeared in the Saturday Evening Post.

The production was made by S-L (Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin) Pictures for distribution through Metro. Mr. Baker adapted and directed the story, Andre Barlatier photographed the action and special art settings were the creation of M. P. Staulcup. Anna Q. Nilsson heads the notable cast.

Pathe to Hold Sales Campaign

March to Be Named "Brunet Optimism Month"

A STATEMENT from the Pathe headquarters in New York announces that the month of March will be designated as "Brunet Optimism Month" and that the four weeks embraced in that month will be devoted to a sales competition which will open March 1 and close at midnight of March 31. The statement issued by the Pathe headquarters in connection with the sales campaign follows:

"Prizes ranging from $100 for salesmen of the winning branches, to $800 to the successful staff, will be awarded. In every instance where a tie might result the capital prize will be awarded to each of the contestants thus tying.

"The Associated exhibitors sales force will be included in the competition inasmuch as they will be selling virtually all Pathe product. Each Associated salesman in the winning branches of each of the four divisions will be included in the list of $100 prize winners. These prizes will be equallly borne by Associated and Pathe.

'In each instance where there is an assistant branch manager, he will receive a prize of $100 equal to that of the cashier and branch booker. The branch manager receives $500. This, of course, is exclusive of the $100 prize which goes to every salesman of each winning team.

"A special prize of $100 will be awarded in each of the four divisions, to the salesman showing the greatest percentage of increase in new business written on a basis of his record for the previous two months. This prize obviously might not go to a salesman connected with the winning branch.

'Brunet Month contest will be staged under different conditions than any previous Pathe competition, in that seventy per cent credit will be accorded on account of new business written and thirty per cent credit on account of collections.

"The collections are to be based on the average of each branch for the months of January and February. The new business written will be figured against a set national expectancy or quota.

"The thirty-two Pathe branches are divided into four divisions for the period of the contest, Eastern, Western, Central and Southern.

"The Eastern division is comprised of the following offices: Albany, New York, Boston, Pittsburg, Philadelphia, Washington, Newark and Buffalo.

"In the Southern divisions are: Atlanta, Dallas, Oklahoma City, Cincinnati, New Orleans, Kansas City, Charlotte, Memphis and St. Louis.

"The ensuing offices make up the Central Division: Chicago, Minneapolis, Cleveland, Omaha, Indianapolis, Detroit, Des Moines and Milwaukee.

"These branches are included in the Western district: San Francisco, Los Angeles, Denver, Seattle, Salt Lake City, Spokane and Portland."

"Proud of Cast" Avers Doug

Popular Screen Players Appear in "The Nut"

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS says he is particularly proud of the cast he succeeded in getting together for his next United Artists production, "The Nut," which will be released March 13th. That's what he told Hiram Abrams, President of United Artists who recently visited the West Coast studio where he saw a great deal of the production, and is now predicting that it will be a bigger hit than the last Fairbanks production, "The Mark of Zorro."

The leading feminine role has been given to Marguerite de La Motte, whose most recent triumph was scored with the ever-active "Doug" in "The Mark of Zorro" which was recently proclaimed by the National Board of Reviews as one of the master productions of 1920.

William Lowery, who plays the part of the gambler in "The Nut," has "villained" his way to fame in several Fairbanks' features. He had the distinction of playing with Doug in the latter's first photoplay, "The Lamb," produced by D. W. Griffith. Lowery has had a very wide experience on both the spoken and silent stage. As a legitimate actor he appeared with such notable players as Robert Mantel, Richard Mansfield and Nance O'Neil. For the past thirteen years he has been working in pictures and in addition to doing some very remarkable character work, has been starred and has also directed. Some of the best work of his screen career was in support of Douglas Fairbanks in "Double Trouble," "Reggie Mixes In," and "The Man from Painted Post."

Morris Hughes, appearing in Doug's latest offering, came to the Fairbanks' fold from the Essanay studio in Chicago. In addition to his part in "The Nut," he appeared also with the athletic Doug in "The Mollycoddle."

A deal of feminine beauty is added to the new production by the presence in the cast of not only Miss La Motte but also of Barbara La Marr, comparatively a newcomer to the silversheet. Miss La Marr first won recognition as a scenario writer, not as an actress. She sold eight stories to the Fox Company, and some of them are now in production. Her first screen appearance was with Anita Stewart in "Harriett and The Piper." Because of her excellent work in "The Nut" she is scheduled to appear again with Fairbanks in "The Three Musketeers," announced as his next production.

Gerald Pring, noted actor and stage director, is also numbered among the Fairbanks players.

Pantheon To Star Beauty

Anetha Getwell, "Legion Girl," Is Signed; Charles Miller to Direct

ANETHA GETWELL, the "American Legion Girl" and the winner of the beauty competition held last year by some of the leading motion picture magazines, in which there were more than 50,000 entries, has been signed on a long term contract by Pantheon Pictures Corporation, according to an announcement made at the offices of that company in the Singer building, New York, early this week, and will be starred in a forthcoming production, which will shortly be begun at the studios which the company recently took over at Port Henry, N. Y.

Charles Miller, who directed "The Flame of the Yukon," with Dorothy Walton, which was produced at Port Henry, has been selected by President Paul Schoppell of Pantheon Pictures Corporation to direct Miss Getwell in her first picture for this company, which will also be its initial venture in the producing field.

While no statement regarding the selection of the vehicle in which Miss Getwell will be starred was forthcoming, it was said that it would be based on a story from the pen of one of America's best known writers, who has specialized in dramatic tales of the "far North."

George Dubois Procter, the well known scenarioist, is now at work preparing the continuity on this story, so that production may be begun without delay.

Miss Getwell, who won the name of the "American Legion Girl" through playing the stellar part in the pageant photoplay, made last Armistice Day by the American Legion to show the public just what that patriotic organization stands for and which was designed principally for exhibition in posts of the Legion throughout the country, has had a brief but decidedly promising screen career.

She has played parts in several productions and was featured in "Love's Redemption," directed by Eugene V. Brewster, which will shortly be released in the independent field.

Her engagement by Pantheon Pictures Corporation is said to be for a series of at least six pictures, in which she will have the principal roles.

"Gilded Lily" at Convention

Wholesale Grocers' Association Is Entertained by Paramount

AS the chief entertainment feature of the convention of the New York State Wholesale Grocers' Association, held recently at Hotel Astor, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation loaned a print of Robert Z. Leonard's recently completed production for Paramount, "The Gilded Lily," starring Mae Murray. The picture was given an enthusiastic reception, and several of those present have written since to the Paramount office, expressing their pleasure in being privileged to see it.

Among the letters received was one from R. L. Goldberg, the New York Evening Mail cartoonist, who was one of the guests of the evening. "Rube" wrote as follows: "I want to say that 'The Gilded Lily' is one of the finest pictures I have ever seen, and, if I know anything at all, it will give the exhibitors another opportunity to create new box-office records. This is not a testimonial, but just a few sincere words I have to get off my chest."

Byran L. Kennelly, First Vice-President of the Harriman National Bank, wrote: "I want to assure you that I have never enjoyed a picture so much in my life as I did 'The Gilded Lily.' It was so intensely natural and fascinating! I had expected to leave for my home at 10 o'clock. I remained until nearly midnight and could have stayed on for many hours more to see such a splendid picture."

One of the most enthusiastic letters came from George T. Wilson, President of the Pilgrims' Society of New York, Vice-President of the Harriman National Bank and formerly Vice-President of the Equitable Life, who wrote: "'The Gilded Lily' is a marvelous production—one of the best of all time. Everyone connected with the production is to be heartily congratulated."

The work of Miss Murray under the skillful direction of her husband, Mr. Leonard, is said to be a veritable revelation, while from a purely spectacular viewpoint the picture is declared to surpass even "On With the Dance," which has proved one of the most sensationally successful Paramount releases of several years.

"Great Redeemer" Still Playing to Capacity

Another of the series of pronouncements to the effect that Maurice Tourneur's production, "The Great Redeemer," was made by the critic of the Wilmington, N. C., Morning Star in reviewing this Metro super-special release after its presentation before capacity audiences last week at the Royal theatre.

"It is not stretching the truth," ran this part of the criticism devoted to an opinion, "to say that the picture registered a profound impression and it was declared by many to be the best photoplay they have witnessed this year."

H. H. Van Loan wrote the story of this Maurice Tourneur picture. It was directed by Clarence Brown, under the personal supervision of Mr. Tourneur himself. The all-star cast includes House Peters and Marjorie Daw.

2 Houses Play Mayer Film

Ambassador and Mission Theatre in Los Angeles Run Same Picture

PRECEDENT in the history of Los Angeles motion picture presentation is swept aside with the annoupncement by Manager Harry David of the Mission Theatre to the effect that beginning today his playhouse will present Louis B. Mayer's "The Woman in His House" for an extended engagement.

Never before in theatrical history in this city have two first class motion picture playhouses been given over to the presentation of one film production, states the Mayer organization. The Mayer special opened at the Ambassador Theatre on February 19th and so great has been the demand for a view of this picture that David immediately obtained consent from Manager Dave Bershon of the Associated First National exchange for the novel presentation idea.

"There is no logical reason why this new plan will not be a successful one," said Mr. David. "S. Barret McCormick of the Ambassador Theatre foresaw that a great number of people who had been anxiously awaiting the premiere of 'The Woman in His House' would not be able to obtain seats for his theatre, so he readily agreed to the Mission Theatre booking. With the new policy pursued by leading producers for 'better and few pictures,' it is quite likely that many big film productions will be simultaneously presented in two or even three theatres. This plan will allow eager film fans an opportunity to see their favorite productions in good time, and will also relieve them from traveling unnecessary distances to the theatre."

"The Woman in His House" was directed by John M. Stahl.

"The Devil" Scores Again

Picture Goes Over Big in Boston, Aided by Exploitation Campaign

ONE of the biggest weeks in the history of Gordon's Old South theatre in the Hub, Boston, was recorded through the capable exploitation of General Manager McGinnis of the Gordon theatres, declares a statement from the Pathe home-office in New York.

Mr. McGinnis took advantage of many channels of exploitation and publicity. Several days before the picture opened at the Old South, all of the Boston papers carried teaser advertising on "The Devil," showing which was culminated with smashing advertising in the Saturday evening and Sunday newspapers.

In the theatre lobby, Mr. McGinnis placed one of the special kaleidoscopic signs used for the first time in connection with a motion picture at the Strand theatre in New York. Cards announcing the showing were placed on the sign. Similar displays were stationed in two big stores near the theatre. Forty cut-out window cards showing Mr. Arliss in his character as "The Devil" were placed in conspicuous hotel lobbies, and store windows.

The front of the Old South theatre was dressed in red, maroon lamps replacing all the white incandescents. A limousine, wired and lighted so that the enclosed part of the card showed up brilliantly in red, toured the city, bearing one of the Old South ushers wearing a silk hat and black cape, similar to the costume of Mr. Arliss in the picture. One of the biggest "bets" of the entire campaign was the truly wonderful electric light display at the corner of Tremont and Park streets.

Harding's Cabinet Is Shown in Kinograms

Less than twelve hours after the announcement of President-elect Harding's cabinet, super kinograms dispatched as a part of its service for the first half of the week of February 27 motion picture views of all of the members. These were taken in many different sections of the country, and with other possibilities for these posts, were assembled at the New York laboratories for immediate dispatch. New pictures of Mr. Harding and Mr. Coolidge are also included.

Another item of official interest in the same reel is a luncheon given to Mrs. Marshall, wife of the retiring vice-president, by the ladies of the Senate.

One of the most remarkable records of horsemanship brought to the screen is promised in views of a thousand members of the Eighth Cavalry in their feats at Fort Bliss, Texas. This exhibition was given exclusively for Kinograms cameras.

Ambassador Theatre to Show Kinograms

The Ambassador, the splendid new Los Angeles theatre in the Ambassador hotel has selected the super Kinograms, which are being released through Educational exchanges, as its news weekly. The selection was personally made by S. Barret McCormick, its managing director, and formerly in the same post at the Circle theatre, Indianapolis.

The Ambassador is showing only feature pictures at their initial showing and for a single week. After their run there they are transferred to one of the other Los Angeles houses. Mr. McCormick has booked many of the Educational short subjects, including "In Dutch," one of the World Wandering series which was used the second week of the opening.

Charles Bryant Confers with Metro President

Charles Bryant, leading man with Nazimova in all but two of the Russian star's photoplays released through Metro, is in New York for a short vacation, and for conference with Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation.

It will be recalled that Mr. Bryant not only enacted the roles opposite Nazimova in several pictures but was responsible, either in collaboration with the star or entirely, for the adaptations to the screen of three of her special productions: "The Brat," "Stronger Than Death" and "Billions."

Teddy Sampson Now in Gayety Comedies

After having been loaned to play opposite Owen Moore in a feature picture made in New York, Teddy Sampson has returned to the Christie studios in Los Angeles and has begun work on the single-reel Gayety comedies which are released through Educational exchanges.

In the first of this series in which she will appear she will share honors with Thornton Edwards, Mary Wynn and Henry Murdock.

Lasky Studio Busier Than Ever

THE Lasky studio at the present time is as busy as it has ever been in its history, declares a statement from Paramount's office. This is a direct refutation of the melancholy utterances in some quarters regarding the dullness in the motion picture business.

The big event of last week was the starting of Gloria Swanson's first stellar picture for Paramount, Elinor Glyn's "The Great Moment," which was adapted for the screen by Monte M. Katterjohn. The first turn of the camera was made at Burlingame, the ultra-fashionable suburb of San Francisco, where a sequence of scenes representing an English home was taken at one of the Burlingame estates. These scenes completed, Director Sam Wood took the company back to Hollywood to film a number of colorful episodes in a European capital.

George Melford's company which went North recently on location for Canadian scenes for "The Money Master," ran into a heavy snowstorm which delayed work to some extent. A heavy gale blew all along the Coast, and penetrating to the interior held up the production for nearly three days. But with deep snow and a sure-enough Arctic atmosphere, the storm proved a genuine blessing in disguise and brought delight to the heart of the author, Sir Gilbert Parker, who accompanied the party.

Gloria Swanson at Work on Elinor Glyn's Story

Scenes along the Amazon River in Brazil occupied much of William De Mille's time during the week, his production being "The Lost Romance," the original story by Elward Knoblock, scenarized by Olga Printzlau. Most of the picture, however, is laid in beautiful homes and gardens in Southern California and in the mountains surrounding the town. Jack Holt, Conrad Nagel, Lois Wilson and other notable players have the important roles.

Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle was working on an island somewhere out in the Pacific Ocean under the direction of James Cruze on Frank Condon's story, "Crazy to Marry," which was adapted for Paramount pictures by Walter Woods.

Tom Forman completed work during the week on Thomas Meighan's star picture for Paramount, "White and Unmarried," adapted by Will M. Ritchey from John D. Swain's story in Munsey Magazine. One of the important scenes made in the final week represented a Parisian cafe modeled somewhat after the famed Cafe de la Mort in the French capital. Many extra people were used including a number made up to represent devils who served as waiters and orchestra. The latter dispensed sweet melodies from a huge cauldron beneath which flames crackled continuously.

William D. Taylor began work Monday upon Cosmo Hamilton's story, "The Almighty Dollar," in which Ethel Clayton is starring for Paramount. Julia Crawford Ivers has adapted the story to the screen with great skill, it is stated.

Cecil B. De Mille is still busily engaged in cutting his massive all-star production, "The Affairs of Anatol." It is understood that somewhere along about March 21st he will begin work on a new picture, but no details are as yet forthcoming.

It is announced by General Manager Charles Eyton that a new room is in course of construction at the Lasky studio for housing the electrical equipment which has been extensively augmented as a result of the increased production activities.

An Interesting Bruce Scenic

EDUCATIONAL FILM EXCHANGES, INC., is calling attention of its sales force this week to a single reel Robert C. Bruce Scenic which the company regards as one of the most remarkable pictures that it has ever released. It is uniquely titled "The Man Who Always Sat Down," and records the first motion picture camera flight ever made over the Matterhorn and Mont Blanc. During the making of the picture the lives of Bruce and his pilot were several times in grave danger, and the film record is said to illustrate this strikingly.

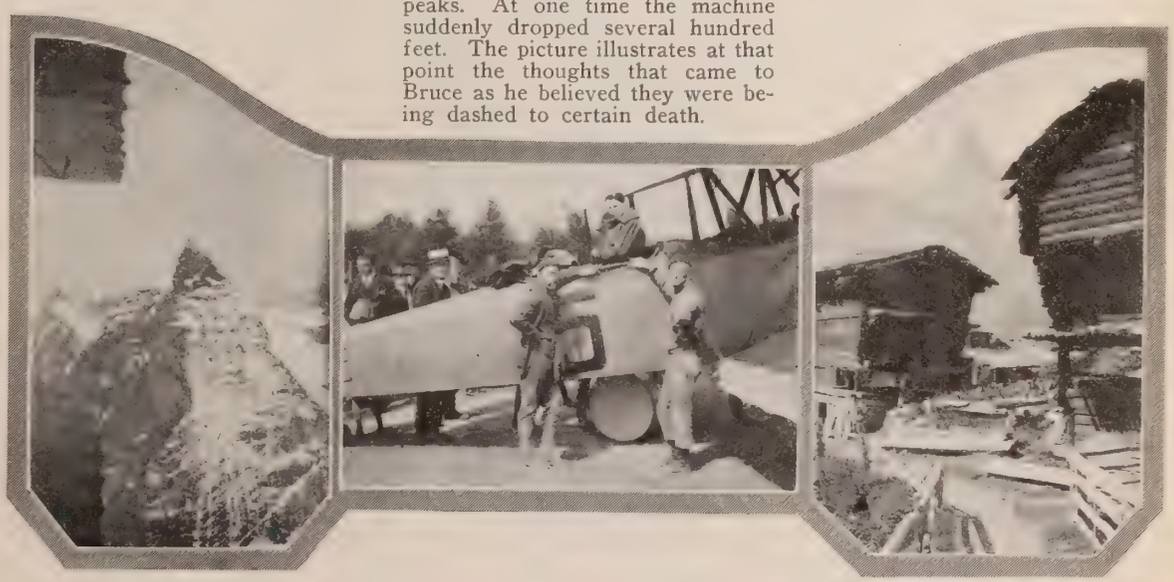
This picture will be released in April as the first of the seven Scenics Beautiful which Bruce made on his recent visit to Europe and which he has just finished cutting and titling. England, Scotland, France, Italy and Switzerland were the countries visited.

Views of Matterhorn and Mt. Blanc in New Subject

A remarkable play on nationalities marked the making of the picture for it was taken from a German airship (a Fokker) which was built for a Hollander and piloted by a Swiss who could speak only French, for an American who could speak only English. The pilot was Lieut. Max Cartier, one of the most daring aviators in Europe, and his skill was needed as the machine hit the air pockets about the two peaks. At one time the machine suddenly dropped several hundred feet. The picture illustrates at that point the thoughts that came to Bruce as he believed they were being dashed to certain death.

During the flight the machine circled and went over the top of the Matterhorn, which reaches 14,700 feet and Mont Blanc, which is 800 feet higher, and the mightiest peak in Europe. Splendid views not only in panorama but of the sides of the peak are found in the picture, include several in which the machine was driven straight at the snow clad mountains.

Although the picture will be released as the first of the Bruce European Scenics and not among the special list, Educational has asked its sales forces to call attention to the fact that though exhibitors will not have to pay an increased rental for this film, it is worthy of being featured as they have rarely exploited a single reel before.



Two of the remarkable scenes from the Bruce Scenic "The Man Who Always Sat Down," and the man who flew over the Matterhorn to take them. They will be released through Educational Exchanges

Mayer Selects Title for Stewart Picture

"Playthings of Destiny" has been chosen by Louis B. Mayer as the releasing title for the Anita Stewart picture which was completed some time ago under the working title of "The Tornado." The story is an original by Jane Murfin and Larry Trimble and Anthony Paul Kelly, playwright and screen author, journeyed from New York to California especially to prepare the scenario on the scene of production. Edwin Carewe directed the picture, which will be released as a Louis B. Mayer First National attraction.

Anita Stewart is supported by a brilliant cast, including Walter McGrail, Herbert Rawlinson, William V. Mong, Richard Headrick and Grace Morse. The photography is by Robert B. Kurrle.

Metro has Story for Gareth Hughes

Gareth Hughes soon will be seen in the first special production to be made under his new contract with Metro.

"Barber John's Boy," a swiftly moving tale from the pen of Ben Ames Williams, has been selected by Bayard Veiller, Metro's chief of productions, as the vehicle in which the brilliant young player will make his bow.

The story revolves about a boy whose father went to prison for twenty years for killing the doctor who, through carelessness, had caused the death of his wife. With his return to his home town, he is received with open arms by every one but his own son Mike. The son is ashamed of the fact that his father is a jail-bird, and feeling that he can never outlive the disgrace, makes up his mind to leave town and start life anew.

Anzia Yezierska Helps in Adapting Story

Goldwyn announces that Anzia Yezierska, author of "Hungry Hearts," is busily engaged at the Goldwyn studios on the Coast in aiding the translation of her work to the screen. The collection of stories which make up the book are being combined into a feature film.

"The Fat of the Land," one of the short stories in "Hungry Hearts," was selected by Edward J. O'Brien, the anthologist, as the best piece of imaginative work in short form which the year 1919 produced.

Sam Taylor on Harold Lloyd's Staff

The latest addition to the Hal Roach comedy forces on the West Coast, which recently completed the new three-reel Harold Lloyd comedy, "Now or Never," an Associated Exhibitors release through Pathe, is Sam Taylor, who wrote the scenario for "Now or Never," and served as "gag man" during its production. Mr. Taylor formerly titled comedies for the old Kalem company, and more recently wrote feature continuity for Harry Morey, Bessie Love and Alice Calhoun. Before joining the Roach forces he was a director of Century comedies on the Coast.

George Beban in Chicago

To Appear Personally at Riviera and Newly Opened Tivoli Theatre

GEORGE BEBAN, star of "One Man In a Million" which is being distributed by Robertson-Cole, reaches Chicago this week, and there will remain for a period of three weeks which is to be apportioned over three week-stands. The first of these will be at the Riviera Theatre and the second at the Tivoli Theatre, both of which houses are managed by Balaban and Katz.

The second of these houses is a new two-million-dollar theatre seating 4,500 people, which is Chicago's latest and finest house. Situated at Cottage Grove and 63rd streets, it is in the center of a thriving district and destined to become one of the most popular Chicago houses. The Tivoli Theatre was opened on February 16th, so that "One Man In a Million" will be one of its first attractions.

The exploitation expert who is doing the advance work for Mr. Beban's tour, which includes personal appearances at each theatre where "One Man In a Million" is showing, is now in Chicago making arrangements for a series of appearances by Mr. Beban.

In Milwaukee, the last city in which Mr. Beban appeared, his production was shown at the Merrill theatre. He was the guest of honor at a dinner given by the City Club, and was received by the mayor. On Tuesday of the week in which he appeared in Milwaukee he was given a luncheon by the Press Club.

"Walling" Film on Way

Vitagraph Starts Work on a New George Randolph Chester Story

WHAT is declared by Vitagraph to be a great showman's picture for 1921 is being started at Vitagraph's Coast studio. It is George Randolph Chester's "The Son of Wallingford." It has, first of all, a prominent author. For a dozen years Mr. Chester's series of "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" stories have been popular.

"The Son of Wallingford" is the latest of the series, written especially for the screen by the author. But it will appear in fiction form to finish simultaneously with release in Collier's Magazine, it is declared. Further, the author himself, George Randolph Chester, will personally direct the screen version, and has just arrived in California for the purpose. Mrs. George Randolph Chester, who collaborated with her husband in the writing of the new Wallingford story, will assist him in its presentation on the screen.

Mr. Chester has inaugurated one departure from the customary method of starting a picture. He is arranging for all his exteriors and locations before casting his picture and taking a scene. This will allow him to produce the picture without delay when he once is started.

A whole city must be turned over to the picture production for several days, declares the statement from Vitagraph headquarters. A whole inland lake afire from blazing crude oil is said to be another of the big scenes which will require much labor before and during the scene to make it the spectacle it is intended to be. There are also declared to be many thrilling incidents, notable among them being the one in which the hero and heroine are described to be trapped in a boat on the blazing lake of oil.

Frank Heath has come from New York as assistant director for Mr. Chester. Bert Ensminger of the Western Vitagraph studios, has been assigned to his staff also.

Irvin S. Cobb Signs Up with Irving Lesser

AMERICA'S great humorist, Irvin S. Cobb, has joined the movies. Word comes from Irving M. Lesser in Los Angeles that Mr. Cobb has annexed his signature to a contract calling for his editing and writing the titles for "Peck's Bad Boy," starring Jackie Coogan.

Mr. Cobb is now in Los Angeles en route up the Pacific Coast on his speaking tour. He plans to return to Los Angeles within two weeks and will immediately occupy a desk in the Lesser organization.

Irvin Cobb, while on his recent visit to the West, was the guest of many studios. Realizing the possibilities offered him in creating funny sayings to accompany the "Peck's Bad Boy" film, he signed the Lesser contract. Cobb is the latest of America's great authors to heed the call of the movies.

Will Rogers' Vehicles on "White List"

Goldwyn's popular star, Will Rogers, is declared by Goldwyn to be the first motion picture star to have all of his pictures recommended for showing in churches. All of his pictures appear upon the "white list" of the Methodist Episcopal church as suitable for projection in church auditoriums, it is stated. One of his last season's pictures, "Jes' Call Me Jim," from J. G. Holland's old novel, "Seven Oaks," has proved very popular for church use.

Others appearing on the "white list" are "Water, Water Everywhere," "The Strange Boarder," "Jubilo" and "Cupid, the Cowpuncher," etc.

Plunkett Books "Bill and Bob" Series

Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the Strand theatre, New York, and Moe Mark, recently witnessed a projection of "Trapping the Bobcat," which sets the pace for the rest of the "Adventures of Bill and Bob" series released by Pathe. It took them only a few minutes longer to book the picture, both for the Strand on Broadway and the Strand in Brooklyn. Then they "made it unanimous," by booking the entire series.

Fred McConnell Back in New York

Fred McConnell has arrived again in New York and is at present contemplating connections with one of the larger distributors for special work in the exploitation and publicity field. Mr. McConnell was former assistant to Fred Quimby in the organization of Associated Exhibitors. Last August he joined the Pathe sales forces and has since been engaged on some special work in connection with Pathe serial releases.

Demand for Single Reelers

Educational Reports Vanity and Gayety Series Pass Estimates

ALTHOUGH the two brands have been available to exhibitors less than three months, Education Film Exchanges, Inc., reports that the demand for Vanity and Gayety series of single reel comedies has far passed first estimates and that they have received bookings in first run theatres of importance that have set a new mark for pictures of the length. This demand has not interfered with the bookings of the two-reel comedies, of which Educational is now releasing four series, with two releases every other week.

Although the four series of two reelers were booked on practically every big circuit solid, Educational states that the same organizations almost without exception have also taken the single reelers and that those big chains are now showing its whole product. The single reelers have been especially welcome to the big houses in cases where they have unusually long features and are still unwilling to omit a comedy entirely from the bill. All exchanges have been directed to call the especial attention of exhibitors showing these longer pictures to the Vanity and Gayety series.

Among the theatres showing all of these single reelers are the Stanley houses in Philadelphia; the Jensen & Von Hergberg houses in the Pacific Northwest; the Parkway group in Baltimore; Tom Moore's houses in Washington; the Rowland and Clark chain in the Pittsburgh district; the Libson theatres in Cincinnati; the Ascher houses in Chicago; the Skouras theatres in St. Louis; the A. H. Blank theatres in Nebraska and Iowa; the Ruben and Finkelstein theatres in Minneapolis and Milwaukee; the Loew theatres in Cleveland and a number of others.

So important have these comedies come to be regarded that Educational has arranged to have special directors devote their entire time to these pictures and the players will give their entire time to them, appearing in no other pictures. Production is kept well ahead and with six companies working on them it is practical to give them unusual attention and at the same time to maintain the weekly release schedule, the two series alternating.

Assemble Fine Cast in Ethel Clayton Film

Paramount presents a strong supporting cast in the new Ethel Clayton vehicle, "Sham," adapted by Douglas Doty from the play by Elmer Harris and Geraldine Bonner.

Miss Clayton is said to have an exceedingly agreeable role as Katherine Van Riper. Others in the cast are Clyde Fillmore, the leading man, in the part of Tom Jaffrey; a triumvirate of character actors supreme, consisting of Theodore Roberts, Sylvia Ashton and Walter Hiers; Helen Dunbar, Arthur Carewe, Thomas Ricketts, Blanche Gray, Eunice Burnham and Carrie Clark Ward, all in fine parts.

This is Miss Clayton's first Western-made picture for Paramount since her return from abroad.

Kathleen Myers Opposite Lloyd Hamilton

Kathleen Myers, a young New York girl, has been selected as leading woman by Lloyd Hamilton for the comedy he is now producing for Educational. Miss Myers, who is a daughter of the manager of the Chrome Steel Works of New Jersey, has been on the screen but a short time, having gotten her first experience on a visit to Los Angeles. She has played opposite Chester Conklin in two pictures, with Neely Edwards in two and in one with Jimmie Aubrey.

"The Saphead" at Capitol

New York Dailies Speak Well of William Crane and Buster Keaton

METRO'S "The Saphead," produced by Winchell Smith, topped the bill of the Capitol theatre during the week of February 13, and scored a pronounced success in keeping with the fact that this picture of Wall Street romance costars two actors beloved by the public, William H. Crane, for many years one of the most famous of American comedians, and Buster Keaton, the sombre farceur of the screen.

The consensus of opinion among photoplay critics is that "The Saphead" is exceptional entertainment. The reviewer for the Telegram writes in part as follows:

"Mr. Crane is as delightful on the screen as he was on the speaking stage. He is ably seconded by Buster Keaton, who appears as the Saphead. . . . Mr. Keaton makes his departure from the slapstick comedy in which he first gained recognition. He has a subtlety of method that makes him an eligible candidate for the more human field of straight comedy. . . . It is a story that has all the elements that go to make up interesting entertainment, enough of plot, suspense, humor and characterization to make it well worth seeing."

Boyle in the News remarks: "Buster Keaton's the whole play. So I wouldn't advise you to go to see it unless you like to chuckle through five reels of nonsense such as always follows in the wake of that young man."

Grace Wynden Vail in the American describes "The Saphead" as "entertaining throughout and lusciously humorous."

The Times reviewed "The Saphead" as "one of the gayest comedies of the season—for this Keaton gravity is a bubbling source of merriment." Mr. Crane's acting "is marked by the ability that made him such a prominent figure for so many years on the stage." Of Buster Keaton:

"Keaton is a natural screen comedian, a pantomimist, as all true screen actors are . . . definitely and subtly expressive, revealing many shades of subjective tragedy that are ridiculously comic from the outside point of view."

Pinehurst General Office
Pinehurst, N. C.
CAROLINA THEATRE
Feb. 13th, 1921

Vitagraph Branch Office,
Washington, D. C.
Gentlemen:

I cannot refrain from congratulating you on the splendid production you have made of the famous old story of "Black Beauty."

I have run nearly all of the big productions of all the producers that are really worthy of the name of "big," but I have yet to run one that met with such universal approval and commendation as did "Black Beauty." Vitagraph certainly has done this beautifully.

If exhibitors are wide awake for pictures that will add prestige to their theatres as well as dollars to their pockets, they will certainly avail themselves of this great opportunity, for "Black Beauty" will not only draw the better class of people to the theatres, but it will satisfy them thoroughly after they come.

It is one of a few special productions on which an exhibitor can raise his admission price with the absolute assurance that his patrons will consider it well worth the added price. "Black Beauty" is a credit to the industry.

Here is a little personal story that may interest you. Among our guests here is a well known banker who seldom goes to the "movies" when he is at home because so few of them he considers worth the time spent in seeing them. He came to see "Black Beauty." At the matinee the next day he was back with four others whom he brought. Over at Southern Pines, the second night, he was there with an automobile load of friends, and he told me he enjoyed it more the third time than the first.

That's some recommendation for "Black Beauty."

Very truly yours,
(Signed) CHAS. W. PICQUET.

We want Six Men

One of the oldest-established companies in the producing field requires the immediate services of six first-class men to act as FOREIGN REPRESENTATIVES.

Exchange Managers Should Apply for These Positions

The six men we want are, today, probably Managers or Assistant Managers in large and reputable film exchanges. They must, at least, have had some sound film training. We do not want dabblers—we want only steady, reliable men who know the business thoroughly and want to get on in it.

Accounting Experience an Advantage but not a First Necessity

The six men we want must understand figures. They do not need to be trained accountants, but they must be able to make intelligent use of financial statements.

Should Speak at Least One Foreign Language—French or Spanish Preferred

The most can be got out of these six positions in the foreign field by those applicants who have a good working knowledge of either French or Spanish and who are willing to perfect themselves in that language.

We Want Old Heads On Young Shoulders

We are willing to accept young men for these six jobs, but would prefer men over 25—either married or single. We want live wires, but we don't want them of such high pressure that they'll short-circuit and burn out.

They Must Know How To Handle Men

Proven ability to handle men and get results without friction will be a big asset for the men who are going to fill these six good jobs. If you can point to something you have done in this line, so much the better.

Each and Every One of These Six Foreign Positions Has a Quick and a Big Future

The foreign market of this company is ready to give the six men who land these positions real and quick futures. They will have to work hard, but they will have their rewards in good salaries and in futures which will be bounded solely by their own ability and integrity of purpose. These jobs are not for four-flushers or quarter-horses, but permanent connections for energetic, purposeful men who want to develop big, solid, worth-while places for themselves.

"The Devil" Heavily Booked

Indefinite Runs for Picture Are Arranged in Several Large Cities

WITH three pre-release showings, breaking three house records in New York City, Buffalo and Lawrence, Mass., the Associated Exhibitors' release, "The Devil," featuring George Arliss, has set the highest record in the history of Pathe Exchange for bookings in advance of release.

Statistics taken from the contract records ten days before its release date, February 6th, show that practically every important first run center in the country has been closed and that in several instances indefinite runs in large cities have been planned for the picture.

It is the emphatic desire of the Associated Exhibitors and of the Pathe Exchange to make it clear to every exhibitor in the country that "The Devil" will not be 'road-showed.' As an organization founded by exhibitors for the purpose of serving exhibitors, it has been firmly decided that the men who operate theatres week in and week out, taking the fair pictures with the best, must be given full opportunity to get the best pictures and under the same selling conditions that they are given the average picture.

Among the important bookings to date are the Keith & Proctor circuit, the Mark Strand Houses, the B. S. Moss houses, the Stanley Circuit in Philadelphia, the Capitol at Springfield, Mass.; the Walnut Theatre at Cincinnati; the Liberty at Youngstown, O.; the Metropolitan at Cleveland, O.; the Missouri Theatre at St. Louis; the Liberty at Kansas City; the Rialto at Newark, N. J.; the Capitol at Oswego, N. Y.; the lyric at Lima, O.; the Rialto at Stamford, Conn.; the Royal at Hot Springs, Ark.; the Strand at Canton, O.; the Orpheum at Akron, O.; the Lafayette, New York City; the Rialto at Lawrence, Mass.; the Stadium and Roebling at Brooklyn, N. Y. and the New Stanley at Philadelphia.

Veteran Support for Roland

Pathe Announces Cast of "Avenging Arrow," Set for March 13th

THE announcement of the complete cast assembled to support Ruth Roland in "The Avenging Arrow," which Pathe has set for release on March 13, reveals the names of players who have never before appeared with this star, but whose prominence in important pictures of the past has familiarized them to exhibitors and fans alike.

The Pathe star's leading man is Edward Hearn, who attracted the attention of serial devotees by his successful interpretation of the juvenile lead with Jack Dempsey in Pathe's "Daredevil Jack." Mr. Hearn entered the screencraft five years ago after an experience of some time in stock and repertoire stage companies. His first film engagement was with Hobart Bosworth in "The White Scar."

Virginia Ainsworth and Vera Sisson have the two principal feminine roles of the support. Miss Ainsworth, who began her screen career with the Selig Company in Chicago, has the heavy character in "The Avenging Arrow," in which she appears as Luisa Traganza, the evil genius of a family sworn to hatred of the house of Delgado, whose daughter Anita, the role played by Ruth Roland, becomes the object of mystifying attacks.

The character role is entrusted to Vera Sisson. As White Faun, the Indian Girl who becomes entangled in the plots against the Delgrados, Miss Sisson is making a reappearance after a long absence from the screen. She is best remembered as leading lady for J. Warren Kerrigan. She then played leads for Biograph and three years ago retired from studio work.

The other prominent parts in "The Avenging Arrow" present Otto Lederer as Don Jose Delgado; S. E. Jennings as Joaquin Ruiz, William Steele as Don Carlos Martinez, Chief Big Tree as Modoc, Frank Lacteen as Pablo and Robert Chandler as the Hermit. Mr. Lederer was for a long time associated with the old Vitagraph western company, both as a player and director.

WILLIAM J. SCULLY, director of Joan's new state-right feature, "Annabel Lee," was signally honored this week at a reception tendered to him by the New England Camera Chapter at the Copley Plaza, Boston. The occasion was the completion of his latest picture "Annabel Lee," a five-reel production, starring Lorraine Harding and Jack O'Brien, and adapted from the poem of the same name by Edgar Allen Poe.

Many tributes were paid the young director by those present, most of whom were associated with Scully at one time or other in his eventful screen career. Joe Mitchell Chapple, for whom "Annabel Lee" was produced, was the toastmaster of the occasion. Mr. Chapple gave a brief and impressive review of Scully's history. Scully's rapid rise to the forefront of filmdom, from an unknown amateur theatrical producer to prominence in the cinema sphere, Chapple declared, dates back six years ago, when David Wark Griffith was first impressed with Scully's possibilities.

Live Notes from the Studios

CONDUCTED BY LILLIAN R. GALE

ABOUT DIRECTORS

Tom Terriss, for the past three years, principal director of the Vitagraph Company, and responsible for many of their greatest productions, has severed connection with Vitagraph and become affiliated with the International Film Company. He will start work shortly on a special production.

Mr. Terriss, while with Vitagraph, was responsible for the initial popularity of Alice Joyce, and among others of his successes with this star can be pointed out "The Lion and the Mouse," "The Third Degree" and the Rex Beach adaptation "Vengeance of Durand." Shortly after the latter production Mr. Terriss contracted with Vitagraph to produce only specials bearing his name as trademark, and in this manner were presented "Trumpet Island," and the widely exploited "Dead Men Tell No Tales." Both of these were acknowledged immense box office attractions. Mr. Terriss's last special production for Vitagraph, and shortly to be released, the David Belasco success, "The Heart of Maryland," is said to be conceded by the company as the finest picture known by them since its inception into the business. Pre-release news regarding what story Mr. Terriss will first direct for International indicates that he has his eye upon a very remarkable one that was published in the Cosmopolitan and one in which he has great confidence.

The camera work on "The Sky Ranger," latest George B. Seitz serial, is completed. So ends the thirteenth serial with which Mr. Seitz has been intimately connected, either in the capacity of author, director, producer or star. In it he has combined the three named duties with characteristic Seitz energy and finesse. He has no compunction, either, about this being his thirteenth serial. Instead of its being a jinx, on the contrary, he feels it is the best, and necessarily the most successful, of the long line ahead.

Followers of Mr. Seitz agree that each of his serials has outshone the previous one and no one person in serialdom has made more innovations for the delight of the thrill seekers who breathlessly follow their idolized star through perilous predicaments from week to week than George Brackett Seitz.

Co-starred with the author-producer in "The Sky Ranger" is June Caprice, who will make her bow to serialdom thereby. There is a cast that sounds like a Seitz super-serial, including such well known players as Peggy Shanor, Harry Semels, Frank Redman, Joe Cuny, Charles Revada and Thomas Goodwin.

Pauline Starke as she will appear in "Salvation Nell"

Frank Leon Smith, author of "The Sky Ranger," chose the elastic world of science as the background for the romance, adventure and mystery, the three serial requisites, artistically combined and sprinkled throughout with a characteristic vein of Smith humor which always distinguishes a Smith-Seitz serial. The camera work, done by Edward Snyder, an ex-service man, is said to be of unusual merit, while the production has been enhanced by beautifully decorated art titles, which were executed by the well known landscape artist, Robert Amick.

Lem F. Kennedy has just completed the first of a series of independent productions, entitled "The New Minster," featuring Robert Kenyon and Muriel Kingston. Upon completion of the editing and titling of this initial production, Mr. Kennedy will begin preparations immediately upon his second feature. Mr. Kennedy will be assisted again by Walter R. Sheridan, who capably acted as assistant in the making of "The New Minister." In fact, the association is permanent. Williard Van der Veer, who was responsible for the photography, will continue to serve in a like capacity.

"What's Your Reputation Worth?" is the title supplanting the one originally announced as the first picture to be directed by Webster Campbell, starring Corinne Griffith, with Percy Marmont, the eminent English actor, in support. This is the second picture in which Mr. Marmont has worked opposite Miss Griffith, the other being "The Climbers," a film of several months ago.

Once upon a recent time a wise man said that "Some day films will run for a solid year on Broadway." "Over the Hills," the Fox production directed by Harry Millarde promises to fulfil the prophecy, the run being well into the sixth month, with no evidences of "last week" in sight.

In these days of scientific discoveries a great deal of credit is self-imposed upon those who claim to have "discovered" our celebrities. Recently George L. Sargent, whose four pictures for Vitagraph placed him in the topmost rank as a director, was being assured that the double exposure work in "The Broadway Bubble" was among the best of the year's output and that each of his pictures excelled its predecessor. "You are fast becoming a great celebrity as a director, Mr. Sargent," said a new acquaintance. "Thanks," answered the director. But I have yet to hear who claims the distinction of having 'discovered' me. If you ever happen to hear and want to get in solid let me know who it was, for whoever he was, he has something coming to him, and, in the words of Bert Williams, 'He's going to get somethin' that he don't expect.'" Which illustrates Mr. Sargent's ability to leave one wondering if it is more clever to be subtle than humorous or vice versa. Which reminds us of the title of his more recent offerings, "It Isn't Being Done This Season" and "False Colors."

E. H. Griffith will direct Alice Brady's next production for Realart and is already engaged in the initial stages of the work.

"'Outside the Law' has nothing to do with the Eighteenth Amendment," remarked Tod Browning, who wrote and directed that picture. "So far as that goes, there is a simple, infallible way to get high-powered liquor INSIDE the law." He chuckled. "Offer it to a policeman."

Browning is looking for a girl with youth, beauty and dramatic ability to play "Fanny Herself."

Carl Laemmle, Tod Browning's big chief, admits that his little daughter, Rosabella, wants a screen career, and that he generally lets her have what she wants.

Which may indicate . . . ?

James Neill, of the Goldwyn players, has been in motion pictures since the days of their beginning,

Carmel Myers, Universal star, whose marriage to I. N. Kornblum, the composer, has been announced and he has many amusing stories to tell. One of them has to do with a casting director in the early days, who was not familiar with stage celebrities.

Mr. Neill was acting in a picture at the studio and Francis Wilson and William H. Crane, who were friends of his, and were curious to see how pictures were made, came to visit him one day. A big ballroom scene was to be filmed the next day, and the director's mind was on it, so when Mr. Neill introduced his friends he said, to their amazement:

"Yes; they'll do. That is, if they have dress suits. Five dollars a day each, you know."

Joseph M. Schenck has purchased "Beauty or Brains," an original sociated First National picture, to John Emerson-Anita Loos story, for Constant Talmadge's next Asfollow "Wedding Bells." "Beauty or Brains" is a temporary title only, and will be changed during the process of the picture, which will be put into the works next Monday, with Victor Flemming as director. Mr. Flemming recently directed Constance Talmadge in "Mamma's Affair," adapted by Emerson-Loos from Rachel Barton Butler's play of the same name. Kenneth Harlan will play opposite Constance in "Beauty or Brains."

Salisbury Field's play, "Wedding Bells," Constance's Chet Withey production, is now being cut and assembled by Mr. Withey, ready for titling. "Wedding Bells" will follow the release of "Lessons in Love," which latter film has been scheduled for its initial showing at the New York Strand theatre some time in May. "Beauty or Brains" will follow "Wedding Bells."

ABOUT PLAYERS

When the trade press was introduced to Pauline Starke by Whitman Bennett at the "Last of the Free Lunches" (so-called) in the First Field Artillery Armory, New York, the representatives were not informed that "Salvation Nell" was Miss Starke's first picture in the east. The home of the promising screen debutante is in Los Angeles, where she has been playing exclusively in the west coast studios. Mr. Bennett first noticed the actress in "Soldiers of Fortune," more than a year and a half ago and has been waiting for an opportunity since, to cast her in one of his productions. The title role of "Salvation Nell" filled the bill, and as a result Miss Starke was lured to the east, for the making of the picture which will be released via First National upon its completion, in June.

Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., request that publication issue their denial that Dorothy Devore, featured player in Christie Comedies, has forsaken them to join another feature organization. The unauthentic news seems to have been printed in some of the publications usually purchased by motion picture followers, much to the chagrin of Educational officials. Miss Devore is regularly being featured in two reel Christie Comedies, the most recent of these being "Movie Mad" "Man vs. Woman" and "The Reckless Sex."

"Possibly the error was caused," say Educational, "because of the fact that Christie did loan Miss Devore to Charles Ray as his leading woman in "Forty Five Minutes from Broadway," but she immediately returned to Christie where she has remained ever since under long time contract, her entire attention being devoted to her work in the two reelers."

Helen Darling, a former Christie Comedy favorite, has been engaged for Universal comedies. For the present she will play supporting roles with Dorothy Wolbert, Universal's eccentric comedienne. Miss Darling was called to Universal at the suggestion of William Beaudine, their new comedy director, formerly affiliated with Christie comedies, and who was, therefore, well acquainted with the work of the young film player.

Miss Darling's engagement by Universal is another step in what Universal chooses to call its "drive" to make Universal short comedies second to none. Several new directors and two new comedy units have recently been added by the film company.

William Russell, the athletic Fox star, is a resourceful man. Being 8,000 feet up in the Sierras, making scenes for "Bare Knuckles," and 40 miles from a bathtub, he shed his impedimenta, took a dive into a snowdrift and called it a bath.

Tammany Young, who as a "film thug" needs no introduction was recently seen in the Robert G. Vignola production for Cosmopolitan, "Straight is the Way." Among his latest pictures are

Enid Bennett, starring in "Keeping Up With Lizzie," a Hodkinson release, directed by Lloyd Ingraham

"Making Good" and in the Metro production starring Bert Lytell, "The Man Who."

The envied role opposite Jack Barrymore in "The Lotus Eater," for which preliminary steps are already under way, will be played by Anna Q. Nillson, which is good news for everybody.

In the story of "The Man Who," in which Virginia Valli is playing opposite Bert Lytell, there is an incident of her walking barefoot down Fifth Avenue as the result of a bet. With the recent manifestations of wintry weather that have made New York snowbound, this fete is naturally impossible and, accordingly, Miss Valli, the star and the director have journeyed southward where this incident will be filmed in one of the Florida cities.

Before her work in "The Man Who," Virginia Valli created the part of Lady Alice Pipinworth in "Sentimental Tommy" for Famous Players and was recently seen in "The Silver Lining" supporting Jewel Carmen and in "The Plunger" opposite George Walsh.

Mary Alden says there are times when she wishes her hair would turn gray. It would save her a lot of time, if it would. For Miss Alden, who is one of the best character actresses on the screen, is always being offered mother parts in motion pictures and as she is a young woman, with never a gray hair in her head, it is rather difficult to make her hair look as it should to suggest middle-age. She does it by a liberal applying of aluminum.

Miss Alden is playing now in Rupert Hughes' "The Old Nest," which is being screened at the Goldwyn studio. In it she has a very appealing part as a mother.

Fay Tincher, featured player in two-reel Christie comedies, is this week making personal appearance at the new million dollar Missouri theatre, St. Louis, in connection with the showing of her comedies. After finishing this engagement she will appear in a number of the other Famous Players houses in Missouri.

Miss Tincher is on a two months' leave of absence from the studios in order to make this personal appearance tour, and although it is a separate enterprise, the agreement calls for one of the Christie comedies released by Educational to be shown during the same performance.

Carmel Myers, star in many Universal pictures, has been married for a year and a half to I. N. Kornblum, a musical comedy composer, it has just been made public.

A long period of secrecy was due to a romantic pact between Miss Myers and the composer at the time of their marriage. Kornblum was at that time working on "Blue Eyes," and the film star was playing in "The Magic Melody," a Broadway musical success.

Theirs was a boy and girl romance, they admit. They have known each other since they were four years old, both being natives of San Francisco, and both having gone to school and later studied music together.

When Miss Myers deserted motion pictures a year or so ago to enter musical comedy, Kornblum followed her to New York and asked her to return West as his bride. She was interested in her career and would not listen to him, so they now confess. He returned to California, but soon visited the East again, and this time won the little star's consent to an immediate but secret marriage.

Carmel's mother was the only one let in on the secret at first, but it later spread to several other members of the two families.

Less than a year ago, Miss Myers, as she chooses to be called, forsook the stage and returned to Universal City, to enter pictures again. Since that time she has been starred in four Universal successes, "In Folly's Trail," "The Gilded Dream," "Beautifully Trimmed," and "the Mad Marriage."

After the completion of "The Mad Marriage," Miss Myers and her mother came East in time to be present at Atlantic City for the first try-out of "Blue Eyes." The star had to return to Universal City before the Broadway premiere of the musical comedy, in order to start work on her current picture, "The Dangerous Moment," which now is nearing completion under the direction of Marcel de Sano.

The announcement of her marriage will make no change in her plan to remain under the Universal banner for many months to come. Her early appearance in a big picture, "The Heart of a Jewess," said to be a human interest story almost without equal, is promised by Mr. Carl Laemmle, head of the Universal Company.

Lewis S. Stone is by way of becoming a pianist and it is all because he is in the "silent drama." It sounds like a paradox but it happens also to be the truth. It all came about when Victor Schertzinger, who directed the Goldwyn picture, "The Concert," told Mr. Stone, who plays the part of the maestro, that a great deal of work would be necessary in order that he should have good "piano manners."

The fact that no sound would come from the piano would make no difference. Every movement of Mr. Stone's at the piano must give the impression that he really was playing the music. Mr. Stone agreed and then went Mr. Schertzinger one better by saying that he thought the best way to assure that was to play the piano, really, and not fake it. Mr. Schertzinger said he had no objections to that and Mr. Stone hied himself to a good music teacher.

He had the advantage of having sung a great deal and being able to read music and so he made rapid progress. When he came to the studio, he said he could play "Liebestraum" and proved it was no idle boast by doing it.

Gladys Gentry a New Screen Personality

Gladys Ballard, winsome Bluegrass girl, who won much notice during the war by her capable work as a lieutenant in the Woman's Motor Corps of the police reserves in New York, and whose piquant personality and charm has recently attracted much attention on the screen in Metro pictures, in future will be known as Gladys Gentry.

Miss Ballard, or Miss Gentry as she now wishes to be known, comes from Louisville, Kentucky. Her decision to take up a screen career led also to her determination to assume a stage name for the sake of euphony, as well as the perfectly proper desire to retain her priviate nomenclature for her friends and intimates. She is a niece of David R. Francis, former governor of Missouri and United States Ambassador to Russia.

New Vignola Production Unanimously Acclaimed

Such a unanimous acclamation as few feature motion pictures have received, was accorded Robert G. Vignola's special production for Cosmopolitan-Paramount, "Straight Is the Way," by the critics of the New York newspapers last week when it opened for an engagement at Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld's Rivoli theatre.

Without a single exception the critics gave unstinted praise to Mr. Vignola's latest production, praising the director for his brilliant success in transferring Ethel Watts Mumford's great short story to the screen, and ranking it with the best that the silversheet has had to offer in recent months. That the critics were right in their judgment of the pcture was attested by the box office receipts which reached an exceptional mark despite the fact that during the week of the showing New York was in the grip of one of the worst snow storms and traffic tie-ups of this year which caused a general slump throughout the entire theatrical district.

The New York Evening Post, considered an extremely conservative newspaper, said: "'Straight Ic the Way' is as diverting a piece about crooks and ladies as has come this way in a total eclipse or two . . . with a happy treatment that distinguishes it from the thousand and one of its class." The New York World which is another newspaper not gven to extravagant praise of the screen said: "This picture is an exceptionally interesting one of its kind . . . and those who sit back and enjoy a puzzuer will find nothing better in filmland."

The Story of the Walkerville Ontario's Newest Theatre

As Told by Elmer George Kiehler, One of Its Architects

OCCUPYING a lot, 70 feet in width and 110 feet deep, a very beautiful and impressive cinema and vaudeville palace has been erected as a monument to the people of Walkerville, by the Walkerville Theatre Company, of Walkerville, Ontario. Although the theatre occupies a fairly small sized lot, it has been so designed that the auditorium, itself, is rather deceiving as to its size. One would naturally believe, upon entering the auditorium, that the capacity was at least 50 per cent greater than the actual count. This has been accomplished by a well-studied series of arches and vaults.

The entire ceiling of the theatre is slightly vaulted. The auditorium is very impact, having a center bank of seats and two side banks with side aisles along the auditorium walls. There are twenty-four rows of seats on the main floor, which is a very fine depth and gives an unusual intimacy with the stage, which is the paramount requirement in a vaudeville house. The seating capacity of the first floor is 741 seats. The balcony is reached through two vomitories at the rear of the 18th row of seats, which enter a spacious cross aisle. The seating capacity of the balcony is 452, with an additional 32 seats in the state boxes. The operators' room is located at the rear and is of exceptional size. The equipment of this booth is complete in every detail.

The interior of the auditorium is most artistically treated and decorated to achieve an intimate effect, which is very necessary to the success of every auditorium. The sounding board is a perfect ellipse and the ornamentation is very cleverly executed by skilled artisans. The perforated sections over the state boxes, as shown in the accompanying photographs, are the speaking openings from the organ chambers. Unfortunately, the pastel tones which are blues, grays and golds, do not reproduce very satisfactory in photograph. The ceiling over the balcony is panelled and very highly decorated and enriched by ornamentation which has been colored in polychrome shades and glazed. From the center of the sounding board hangs a gorgeous lighting fixture with a concealed diffuser, the main bands and frame of the fixture being treated in old gold and polychrome tones and the balance is beautifully decorated parchment; the background for the ornamentation is amber. Fixtures of a similar character were installed over and under the balcony. Each fixture is equipped with diffusers which are used to illuminate the auditorium during the time pictures are being shown. The house is lighted by means of different colored lights which are separately controlled from the switch-board on the stage and arranged so that the lights can be dimmed and colors blended, giving a very pleasing glow instead of a sharp, glarry light. A Verde Antique marble base has been carried around the entire auditorium. The aisles are covered with linotile, of 4 x 4 red tiling and a black interliner.

Particular care was exercised by the architects in determining the sight lines and the acoustics, which are perfect. A great amount of study was given to the beautiful interior and its adjoining lounges, promenades and retiring rooms. The lobby, which leads to the main foyer, and the entrance to which is directly in the center of the building, has been very simply treated and decorated in soft, pastel shades. The walls are of white Italian

Projection Room at Blackstone Theatre is Outside Building

South Bend's New Playhouse Displays Many Other Unique Features

THE Blackstone, South Bend's newest and most magnificent theatre to be devoted to the showing of photoplays, opened to the public early in February. City officials and a few invited guests attended a preliminary opening previous to the general opening and were very well satisfied with the new structure.

Few theatres in the entire country are more elaborate or have so large a seating capacity and none can excel the Blackstone from the point of roomy comfort and the safety of the patrons.

The theatre was started 16 months ago and is located on the east side of one of the busiest blocks on Michigan street, just south of Jefferson boulevard. The playhouse cost over $500,000, is absolutely fire-proof and is equipped from cellar to dome with the most modern appliances of every description. Aside from the doors and window casings there has been no wood used in the construction work. With solid concrete floors and stairways, tile lobby and imported marble wainscoting, there is an air of solidity and permanence that is convincing.

The Blackstone has a seating capacity of 2,500 with the rows of seats gradually rising from the orchestra rail to the highest elevation in ascending circles, similar to the old Roman coliseum. There is no balcony, for the connecting steps and stairways make the entire auditorium one vast area of desirable locations. The main lobby entrance strikes about midway in the seat elevation and patrons may choose their locations either on the higher or lower levels.

As stated, there is no balcony, as the term is commonly used in connection with theatres, no section of seats across the back of the auditorium separated from the main floor, but on either side of the house are mezzanine balconies extending back from near the stage until they connect with the circling seats. This innovation in seating arrangement does away with the stage boxes and every seat is so situated that the picture being shown can be viewed without tiring the eyes. There is not a single post in the entire theatre and every seat has an unobstructed view of the screen.

The Blackstone was designed by Henry Newhouse, a Chicago architect, who has planned many theatres and has endeavored to combine in this structure all the most practical and advantageous features that go to make a safe, modern and beautiful edifice for the showing of the silent drama. The front of the theatre is impressive and artistic. Ten massive columns decorate the facade. Immense urns and balconies conceal the lighting system that makes the theatre brilliantly attractive. A handsome and elaborate electric sign adds to the illumination and a generous canopy extends over the sidewalk. Ralph Sollitt & Sons Construction Co. of Chicago had the contract for the erection of the building and by personal attention to the work has given the Blackstone corporation a magnificent and substantial structure.

The lobby measures 60 x 35 feet and is a combination of white marble, tile and bronze trimmings. The duplex box office, with room for two attendants and equipped with the latest rapid ticket-selling and change-making devices, occupies a marble and glass kiosk, situated in the corner of the main lobby, making it easy of access from all sides.

Entering and passing through the spacious lobby the patron is confronted by some exceptionally handsome leaded glass doors on the other side of which is an inner lobby or foyer 10 feet deep and 50 feet wide, with convenient stairways on each side leading to the upper seat levels. Beyond this, directly in the center of the house, is an opening 35 feet across. This is separated from the auditorium by a marble balustrade not high enough to interfere with patrons watching the picture if it is necessary for them to stand. This idea is unique in theatre construction and was arranged to avoid congestion and to facilitate rapid seating during rush hours. This inner foyer is handsomely furnished with mirrors, settees and lounging divans.

Beauty Is Striking

The beauty and spaciousness of the immense auditorium strikes one the moment the house is entered. There is an air of roominess, good ventilation and an absence of all suggestion of stuffiness, not only in the wide expansion from wall to wall but upward to the handsome art glass dome, 100 feet above the floor.

The interior walls are paneled with a brocade effect in brown and gold. Massive borders and mouldings, artistically colored in green and floral shades, huge girders and plaster relief designs take away all idea of emptiness. The organ lofts on either side are beautifully draped. These hangings and many of the interior furnishings were supplied by Mandel Brothers of Chicago. The velvet carpets harmonize with the roomy brown leather chairs. The furniture was supplied by Karpen Bros., Chicago.

There is ample room, more than t state law requires, between each row seats. They have been placed far enou apart to allow patrons passing with the seat occupants rising. The aisles broad, the steps of easy incline, and all lead to the sidewalk level exits, t house can be emptied in a remarkal short time. In addition every mod safety appliance that can be procured h been installed. Ten exits lead from va ous parts of the house. Substantial f escapes have been placed on both sides the building.

Overhead the ceiling centers in a lar oval dome made of the finest art glass artistic colors. A sky blue tint has be given to the rest of the ceiling. Hidd lights controlled by a dimming syst prevail throughout the entire hou four circuits being available in amb red, white and blue. These are controll by the most massive stage switchboa in the city, located on the stage and e cased in a steel fire-proof room. An el trician will be in constant attendance this board.

The Blackstone corporation has vested thousande of dollars in a ventil ing system that will change the wash air every two minutes, pumping and d tributing it evenly throughout the hou In winter the air will always be heat to the proper degree and in summ cooled by tons of ice to an extent th will make the theatre 25 degrees coo than outside.

Large Film Booth

The film booth is one of the largest and m complete operating rooms in the United Sta It is actually fire proof and located entir outside the theatre. Three of the latest Simp motion projecting machines have been instal and all of the equipment is in triplicate, avo ing any possibility of breakdown or del Special lenses will bring out the details of e screen feature and even though the throw over 155 feet, a clear and distinct picture, 18 feet in size, will be shown. A special Mins gold fibre screen has been installed and eve thing done to insure proper projection.

The stage is decorated with massive pill special lighting effects and elaborate hangi that enhance the beauty of the screen. Ei dressing rooms are available for the use the musicians or those who may take part. T stage has been arranged so that it can easily enlarged for concerts or musicales if desi The orchestra pit is of ample size to care the largest musical organization. Hood River, Oregon, Will Have 1000 Seat Theatre

A new motion picture theatre, with a seating capacity of 1,000, will be erected in Hood River, Oregon, by Art Kolstad, according to announcement just made in the Portland press. Mr. Kolstad now owns the Liberty, the largest present cinema in Hood River.

Erection of a half million dollar hotel within 10 minutes drive from Hood River on the Columbia river highway leading to Portland will bring enough tourists to Hood River to warrant the new theatre, it is said. Work on the new house will start in the early spring, Mr. Kolstad has announced.

Other News of New Theatres

Mr. H. H. Wellenbrink, present lessee of the Montclair theatre, will build a new modern fireproof theatre and office building on a plot 155 x 150 at corner of Bloomfield avenue and Seymour street, Montclair, N. J. The building will cost $400,000; seating capacity, 2,500; Reilley and Hall are the architects.

Blooming Grove, Texas.—Mr. Stewart has sold his motion picture theatre here to Mr. Bearman. The latter takes charge right. Some new improvements will take place.

Burkburnett, Texas.—Mr. A. R. Thomas, who manages the Pershing and Lyric theatres, this week purchased the Dreamland theatre here from Dr. Parmley. Mr. Jack Holman will be the house manager for the new Dreamland. The theatre will run first run photoplays, as Mr. Holman has proven his ability as a high class theatre manager.

Merkel, Texas.—Mr. Groene, of the Cozy theatres, announces the completion of plans to more than double the present size of the Cozy, which will include a larger stage with a basement room for a very modern steam heating plant and also ventilating plant. The main auditorium will be twice as large as its present size, including a steeper incline and also the installation of private family and party boxes. All new interior decorations will be installed. The theatre will be one of the best in the city. The very latest of equipment is installed and a very good picture is secured.

Cuero, Texas.—A movement is on foot here for the erection of a new $50,000 theatre building in this city at a future date. Outside capital is interested. The plan will be put through to give Cuero a first class theatre, where the best of attractions will be played and high class photoplays will be run.

Hot Springs, Ark.—Mr. V. Beal, of Judsonia, will at once assume the management of the Jackson theatre here in the next week. Mr. Beal bought the building a few months ago, but he could not get possession until the lease had expired. He will make some new changes in the building at once.

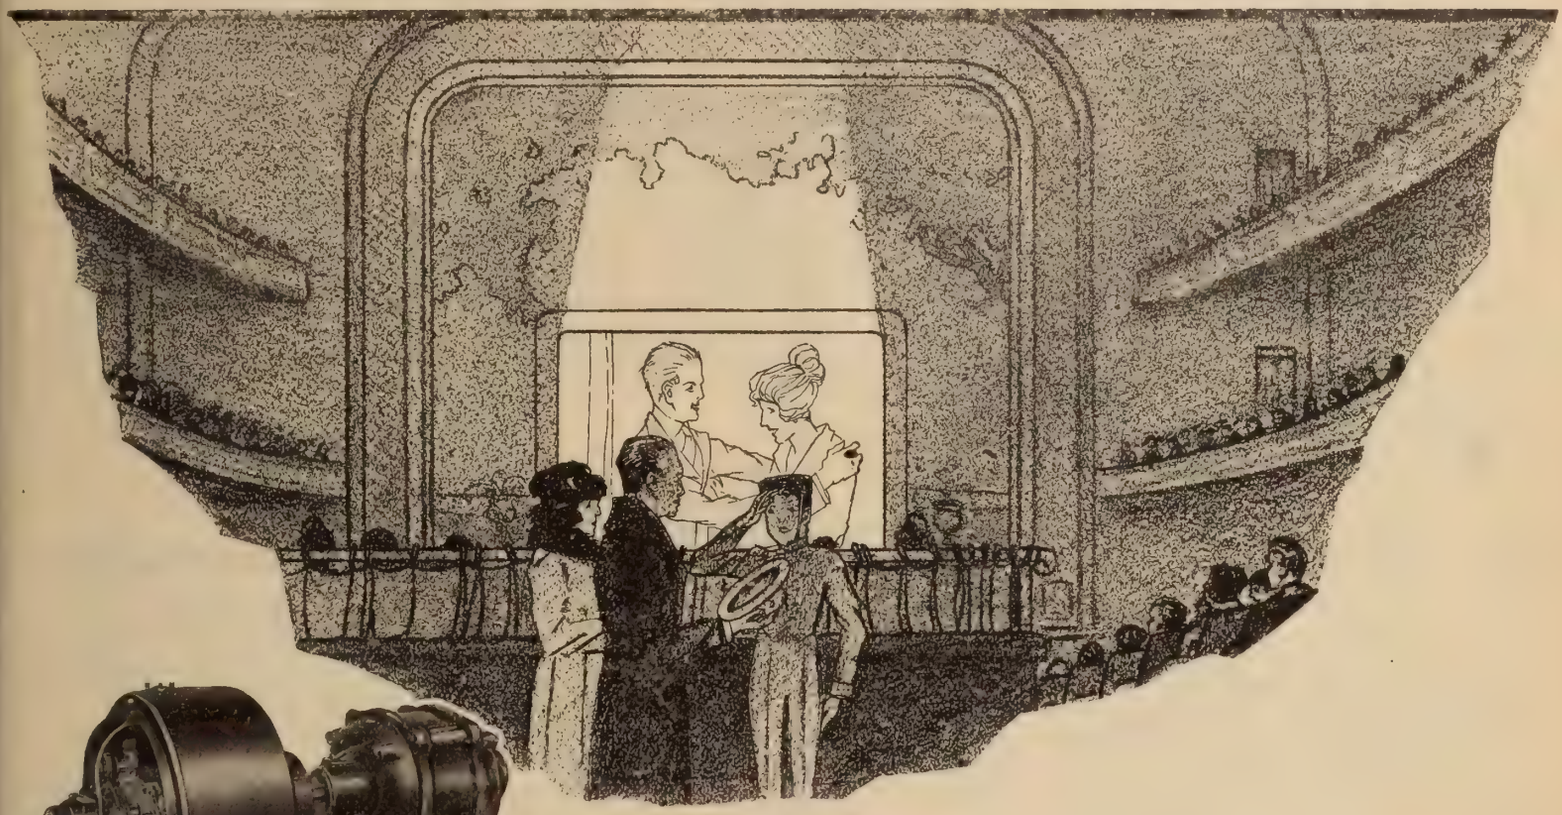
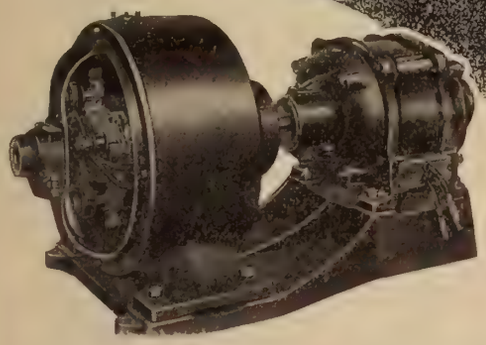
FRONT ELEVATION

A 650 Seat Brick Theatre

The three illustrations above were taken from the plans drawn up for the 650 seat Brick Theatre of Frank E. Holler of Shippensburg, Pa., by Archotect M. R. Rhodes of Chambersburg. The building is 62 ft. wide and 130 ft. deep. The auditorium seats 500 and the balcony 150. A stage 25 ft. deep and 54 ft. wide, with four dressing rooms in back, will take care of the occasional dramatic production. The design of the theatre front is unusual.

When you improve the projection of your pictures you are taking a big step toward making your theatre the best patronized one in town.





Protect Your Pictures Against Variations in Supply Voltage

Variations in voltage, so frequent on the average commercial lighting circuit, are a decided handicap to the motion picture exhibitor who prides himself on the flickerless, even illumination of his screen.

With a GE compensarc, normal fluctuations in supply voltage, are so taken care of that steady projection is assured.

The GE motor generator compensarc has a horizontal shaft which gives freedom from vibration and is consequently silent in operation.

Operating Advantages of GE Compensarcs

1. Steady, strong arc.
2. Easily operates two arcs at the same time for change-over.
3. Quiet arc strike and quick settle-down.
4. Self regulating arc voltage.
5. Current stays at set value.
6. Current easily raised and lowered.
7. Cannot be damaged by short circuit.
8. Fading made easy.
9. Not affected by changes in current conditions.
10. Quiet in operation.

Compensarcs are safe, easy to operate, efficient, economical and reliable—GE offices or distributors everywhere for prompt deliveries and service marble, rising from a Verde Antique base. The woodwork is of a dark walnut color. The ornamentation in the pilaster aps and in the shell over the ticket window has been high-lighted with gold leaf and polychrome shades and glazed down with Vandyke glaze. The floor in the lobby is a warm red 6 x 9 quarry tile. This lobby leads into the main foyer, the floor of which is the same material as the aisles of the auditorium. The architectural and decorative effect of the foyer is carefully linked with that of the auditorium. The lounge and the stairways to the mezzanine and the entire mezzanine is luxuriously carpeted with a thick velvet carpet and is one of the features of the theatre. The base of the entire mezzanine is painted in an imitation of Verde Antique marble. The walls are panelled and rise to a beautiful cornice, richly ornamented. From this cornice springs a vaulted ceiling which also is enriched and colored in pastel shades. No expense was spared in the furnishings throughout, as it was the owner's intention to make this a theatre which would be called one of the leading houses for many years to come.

The stage is large enough to accommodate road attractions and stock, and fully equipped with rigging lofts, fly galleries, steel gridiron, and has a dead front switchboard. A section of the stage floor has been made removable. The gridiron is so arranged that the scenery can be operated from both fly galleries or from either side of the stage at stage level. The series of dressing rooms, in addition to the actual property and musician rooms, electrical and carpenter shops have been provided.

The organ chambers are located over the boxes in front of the proscenium arch on either side of the auditorium. The arrangement makes it possible to procure the best effects, the thought foremost in mind, was that the organ shall be one of the outstanding features of the theatre. The speaking or solo pipes of the organ are installed on one side of the auditorium and the accompaniment on the opposite. The proscenium opening is 35 feet in width, being of such dimension to enable the producing of almost any type of performance.

Plans for this building were prepared in the Canadian offices of C. Howard Crane, Architect; Elmer George Kiehler, Associate; and Cyril E. Schley, whose main offices are in the Huron Building, Detroit, Michigan, who have had complete charge of the building construction, furnishings, decorations and entire equipment. The front is constructed of light Kittaning brick with Bedford limestone and art stone trimmings. A large marquise extends across the entire theatre entrance and is studded on the underside with lights. This building was erected with unusual rapidity and has been doing a phenomenal business from the start.

Woods to Have Chain of Theatres

As an additional move in his plan of organizing a chain of theatres throughout the country for indefinite runs of motion picture production at first class theatre prices, A. H. Woods, in conjunction with Robert McCormack, of Chicago, has purchased a plot of ground on Tremont Street, Boston, adjoining the Shubert theatre, for the erection of a new theatre. The plot is 100 x 140 feet and the theatre will seat 1800 people. Ground will be broken on May 1st.

To this same purpose will be devoted the new Apollo theatre in Chicago, which Mr. Woods built in conjunction with Mr. McCormack; a theatre in New York, on which Mr. Woods now has an option; a theatre in Philadelphia, and a theatre in Detroit. These five first-class playhouses in principal cities are to be ready within a year. The circuit will later be extended to include Cleveland, St. Louis, Pitts burgh, Baltimore and other cities, as th plan enlarges.

"What I plan to do," continued M Woods, "is to build a circuit of the fine and most up-to-date theatres in the prin cipal cities in the country, and let th public have these subjects in the styl they want and in luxurious surrounding The producer will have a fair and ope field. These houses will never be unde any control but our own, and they wi be open to anyone who can produce big motion picture production which th public will pay first class theatre price to see. There will be no interests behin the circuit holding interests in the produc tions and using the houses to present thei own offerings, irrespective of their pub lic appeal. Such a circuit will furnish th needed outlet to the best producers in th world, and they can stay indefinitely i these houses on sharing terms until th business falls below a fixed minimum which insures both the theatre and pro ducer against loss."

Hub Simplex Distributo Active

That the Boston Motion Picture Supply Company Simplex Distributors for Southern New England, hav succeeded in planting the Simplex Banner throughou their territory in spite of the recent financial and in dustrial depression which has prevailed in that sectio is amply illustrated in the list of installations that ha been received at the Simplex factory.

These installations have all been made within very few weeks and a perusal of them will show tha the demand for Simplex projection comes not onl from the exhibitor but from a well known piano manu facturer, a church, the State Capitol and a battleship

The Boston Motion Picture Supply Company, whic recently moved into larger and finer equipped head quarters, has been among the most active of the larg Simplex distributing organization and the success o its recent campaign for Simplex in Greater Boston i reflected in the fact that the "City of Beans" i now very nearly 100% Simplex.

Construction Notes from Everywhere

Fort Smith, Ark.—Mr. H. Kirkpatrick, who is the manager and the proprietor of the Princess and Lyric theatres and who has just recently leased the Joie theatre, which is now called the Palace, to the Lynch interests of Texas, announces the work on the airdome theatre to be constructed on South Ninth street, last summer, will commence next week. The theatre may be ready to open by the first day in September of this year. When the airdome was built, it was so constructed that any time the walls could extend upward and the theatre could then be converted out of the present structure very easily.

Sherman, Texas.—The new Travis here is doing a very good business with high class photoplays. An organ has been installed. Projection is very good with two late type projectors. This is a union house. Sherman has two unfair theatres on the list.

Waurika, Okla.—A deal was closed a few weeks ago for the sale of the new Empress theatre here by Ed. Crew to J. D. Wilson and J. A. Bristol. The new owners are now in charge of the management of same. The retiring owner has conducted a picture show here for more than a year and a little later branched out with the new Empress. Business is very good in the show business down this way, is the report.

Denison, Texas.—The Rialto Theatre here, which formerly run straight Pantages vaudeville and pictures, will from now on run only feature pictures. With the new $10,000 pipe organ, which is drawing business, the best of photoplays are run.

To Increase Capacity to 1200 Seats

Work has begun on the new Isis theatre, Dryades near Melpomene street, which when completed will have a seating capacity of 1200. A new pipe organ and typhoon cooling system will be installed. It will be completed within 60 to 90 days.

who has been touring the country ever since he was six years old at the head of his own organization. In addition to the orchestra two experienced organists have been engaged to supplement the work of the instrumentalists. There will always be music at the Blackstone and at no time will a silent picture be shown.

The policy of the Blackstone will be feature motion pictures and high grade organ recitals and orchestral concerts. It is the intention to give South Bend's theatre-going public the best and latest releases at one nominal price for all seats for adults, a lower price being made for children, but no distinction between locations on the higher levels and those near the screen.

A feature new to South Bend theatres will be the establishment of a children's nursery, with a competent attendant always in charge. This will be located in a large airy, well-lighted room in the basement and generously supplied with toys, swings, a sand pile and all the furnishings necessary for the care or amusement of children.

A handsomely furnished ladies' retiring room, fully equipped with mirrors, toilet accessories and willow furniture, will also be found to the right of the lobby, as well as a men's smoking and lounging room, reached by a separate stairway of easy descent. Seven uniformed ushers have charge of seating of patrons.

The house was erected by the Blackstone Theatre Corporation, the officers of which are C. E. Potts, president; Donald MacGregor, general manager; Frank C. Toepp, treasurer; J. B. Weber, John G. Yeagley, G. A. Farabaugh, directors. The acting manager is G. E. Berkson, of Chicago, who has had 18 years' experience in booking and exhibiting pictures, both in the larger cities and in smaller communities. He comes well qualified to furnish South Bend with the best that the studios afford.

Resident Architect Cahoon of Henry Newhouse, architects, has been on the job since the clearing of the ground. He has personally directed all of the construction.

After March 7th the Executive Offices of the United Theatre Equipment Corporation will be located at 25 West 45th Street, New York City.

Pipe Organ in New Bedford Theatre

Mr. Chas. Richelieu has recently installed a style 4 "New Era" organ in his new Richelieu theatre, Bedford, Pa. Mr. Richelieu made a very careful study of the organ question before placing his order. After a survey of the organ field he made a trip to the Marr & Colton factory at Warsaw, N. Y., and placed his order for this instrument. He has had the organ placed back of the screen and the effect is very satisfactory.

Libman-Spanjer Corp. in New Offices

The preliminary details incident to the formation of the corporation having been completed and production in the Newark factory having been placed on a satisfactory basis the Libman Spanjer Corp., manufacturers of Lobby Frames, has moved into its new offices in the Mecca Bldg., at 1600 Broadway, New York N. Y.

William F. Libman, president of the corporation, is well known throughout the industry. He first became identified with the manufacture and sale of lobby display frames while with the firm of Menger and Ring; later he was connected with the Stanley Frame Co., in the same line of work. After leaving Stanley Frame Co. Mr. Libman was in business for himself for several months and then associated himself with Wm. Spanjer of Newark, N. J.

Mr. Spanjer has long been connected with the making of fancy designs and letters for lobby frames and similar products. He has established plants in both Newark and Chicago. It is said that his plant at Newark is the largest in the world for turning out wooden letters and decorative figures.

The new office of the Libman-Spanjer Corporation will have a show-room where a complete line of lobby frames will be found on exhibition and the office itself will be offered to exhibitors, both local and out of town, for use as their headquarters while in New York City.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Projection Society Formed in Minnesota

We have received an interesting letter from a new association of projectionists in the State of Minnesota with the request that we give the notice of the formation of the Society as much space as possible. This we are pleased to do by printing the letter exactly as received, word for word. Any society or association that aims to increase the knowledge of those engaged in projection work is worthy of all the publicity that it is able to get. The letter follows:

The Progressives amongst the Projectionists of the city of Minneapolis, Minnesota, have formed a Society called, Minneapolis Projection Society, for the scientific research of everything concerning projection of Motion Pictures. The officers for the present year are, S. G. Cowan, Pres.; Wm. H. Moore, Vice Pres.; W. G. Smith, Treas., and S. S. Parrish, Rec. Sec. Three standing committees have been elected. The Research Com., whose duty is to procure everything possible concerning Motion Picture Projection, for study by the members of the Society, are R. W. Heazlett, Chairman; C. J. Hubbard, and W. J. Van. The Publicity Committee are, H. J. Evans, Chairman; J. D. Lyngholm, and Wm. H. Moore. The Grievance Com., the members of which we will announce later, whose duty it will be to endeavor to straighten out all mistakes, concerning equipment, film and etc., with whoever the grievance may be reported against. In reference to any film grievance, this committee will endeavor to reach the producer whenever possible instead of only going to the exchange as has always been the rule.

We are organized for the betterment of the Projection of Motion Pictures and have as our slogan, Progressive Projection. Our every effort will be to elevate the profession of Projectionist to the higher plane which it so well deserves, and we invite correspondence from everyone in or touching on this profession.

Hoping you will give us a little space in your next issue we remain,

Sincerely yours,

Questions and their Answers

94. In using A. C. current, why does a crater form on each of the carbons? and on D. C. the crater only forms on one carbon.

The crater is formed in the positive and in an A. C. circuit first one carbon is positive and then the other, so that craters are formed in both the carbons. In a D. C. circuit the current flows in one direction only so that a crater is formed in only one carbon.

95. Can a rectifier be used on currents of different cyclage. If not, why not? If so what must be done to the rectifier before changing it from one cyclage to another?

A rectifier may be used in a circuit of any cycle alternations, providing the proper amount of reactance is connected in the circuit.

96. What is meant by a soft carbon? What is meant by a hard carbon?

The hardness of a carbon depends upon the amount the material is baked. If the carbons are too hard a good crater will not be formed, while if they are too soft they will burn too freely and will not hold an adjustment.

97. For what reason is a core put into a carbon?

To steady the arc by producing an arc stream of lower resistance. Also used to color light.

Interesting Experiments with Carbons

A LETTER received a short time ago from R. Grierson, Engineer of Provincial Cinematograph Theatres, Limited, of London, included several excellent photographs of carbon set-ups on which Mr. Grierson has been making exhaustive tests. Although it is a difficult matter to reproduce the photographs in their normal clearness they are shown here in order to explain one point, viz.: the effect on the illumination of a lower carbon improperly placed.

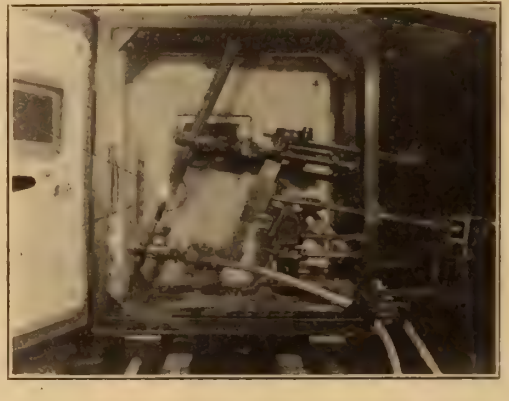

Fig. 1

Fig. 1 shows the carbon set in the lamphouse used for the test. The carbons used were ⅞" upper and 7/16" lower. They were set at an angle of 65°. After the arc was struck the following measurements were taken:

Crater angle, 55°.
Crater height, 21/32".

Fig. 2

98. On D. C. current, why is a soft carbon below less efficient in illumination than a hard carbon below?

Answered in 96.

99. When should a lamp house door never be opened?

The lamp house door should never be opened while the arc is in operation.

100. How many fire extinguishers should be used in connection with a booth and their proper location?

At least one extinguisher should be at hand in the booth at all times. Others however may be placed near by as an addition to safety in case of accident.

Fig. 3

Crater diameter, ¾".
Crater area, 25/64 sq. in.

But if the crater had been perfectly formed, that is, circular, with a diameter equal to the diameter given above the area would have been slightly more than 27/64 sq. in.

Fig. 4

With these figures as the basis the efficiency of the carbon set shown in Figs. 1 and 2 is found to be 89%.

But supposing that the carbon adjustment is not made with care so that the lower carbon obscures part of the light from the crater. This condition is illustrated in Figs. 3 and 4.

In Figs. 3 and 4 the size of the carbons and the crater angle are the same as in Figs. 1 and 2. But the area of the crater was found to be 17/32 sq. in. However, the lower carbon because of its setting covers up part of the crater.

Gentlemen:

In December I installed two of your latest Powers 6-B type E equipment, and have by this time given them a real examination and wish to state that I find them the most excellent machines I have had the pleasure of operating.

I have, during my course of manager, operated almost every type of motion picture machine, but up to the present time, I have never found a machine that fulfilled my every expectation until I installed these two latest Power's.

I will gladly recommend to any manager, when considering purchasing a new machine, to not to fail to give the

Yours truly,

This obscured portion was measured and found to be 1/7 of the entire crater area. Computing again the efficiency of the set-up by dividing the useful crater area by the circular crater area, it was determined that the efficiency was only 71.5%.

If these figures are used for no other purpose than to illustrate the rapid decrease in efficiency when care is not used in setting the carbons they are well worth printing here.

Lighting Company Made to Admit Fault

Some time ago we received a letter from R. S. Wenger of the Victory Theatre, Union City, asking us what we could do to help him out with his voltage trouble. The correspondence was about as follows:

I have been reading your question and answer for projection room. And we have been bothered for the last couple of months with current going down until carbons will hardly burn. Part of the time we have a fine light; sometimes it don't bother for several days. Other times it will come on and go off every 10 or 15 minutes. Have had the electric light company here several times. They claim it does not test off at anytime. There has been other complaints in town about uneven current.

We use 110 volts Ft. Wayne Compensarc and run on 60c ap. A. C. I myself am not very well versed on electricity, my operator is sure it is current. I had another operator to come and stay a few days, that has had 8 years experience. He seems to think it is the current. Could it be possible that the Compensarc could be the trouble? When it goes off the carbons will not burn hardly at all and when it comes on our light is sure perfect—picture as bright as any city house I ever was in.

We have a throw of 66 ft. nearly on a level. Use only one machine, Powers 6b. Never had any lens or other trouble with machine.

This is sure a riddle with me and can you tell us how to test Compensarc. The two operators examine it, they filed all points and seem to think it is all right.

Sometimes we have good light for matinee and off at night other days off matinee good at night sometime good for both other times off and on for both.

Enclosed stamps for reply.

Yours respectfully,
R. S. Wenger, Propr.
Victory Theatre, Union City, Indiana.

P. S.—We use Columbia A. C. ¾ carbons. Booth was rebuilt about one year ago and same size wire as on street comes into booth so as to carry any extra we would ever want to use.

Our reply to Mr. Wenger was to the effect that his trouble was undoubtedly due to poor voltage regulation on the power companies lines. It sounds as though one of the neighboring stores or shops had a power load that was used only occasionally but when it was, the drag on the lines was greater than the capacity of the power station could stand and as a result the voltage suffered.

We suggested to Mr. Wenger that instead of having the electricians from the company come up and make an occasional test, that he arrange with them to leave a voltmeter in the booth for a day or two, so that he could keep an eye on the variations himself.

A later letter from the same projectionist seems to lay the guilt entirely on the power company. Mr. Wengers letter reads:

Mr. E. L. Bragdon, Tech. Editor, Motion Picture News.

Dear Sid:—Your answer to my inquiry about my current trouble was received, and it was part cause of me getting the light company to acknowledge their fault.

I had had it tested by them, but they always gave about 112-113 reading. I watched it myself and it ran 108 to 109½ when we had poor light. They are doing some better now, but not good yet.

The current here comes from Greenville, O., 12 miles east or southeast. It is a large plant which supplies about 20 towns and villages some 30 miles away.

This letter will probably not interest you, but I am satisfied now it is current and that my equipment is O. K.

Reply: We are interested to learn that your trouble has been located. It is better to know where the trouble lies, even though there is little prospect of improving conditions. Unless the power company can be made to see the wisdom of giving better service to its customers it looks as if you would have to put up with poor voltage for some time.

To Prepare Data on Chemicalized Carbons

Mr. W. R. Mott of the National Carbon Co., of Cleveland, Ohio., is to deliver a paper at the coming Convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers on the subject of the Projection of Arc Images of Chemicalizer Carbons. The experiments will illustrate the movement of arc material from positive to negative, effect on arc core and shell colors, crater effects, etc. The practical application of white flame chemicals to projection will be discussed.

"Famous Players-Lasky" have the best exchange service that is, it is the best I receive. Then "Fox" seem to be starting a similar service.

I get good film from several other exchanges; but these are the best. Famous Player Film does not have any Co. Marks in it and that shows that the Exchange itself is sacrificing quite a bit in order to produce an unmarred screen.

Possibilities of Multiple Exposure Device Will Appeal to the Studio Cameraman

New Goertz Product Has Been Designed to Provide Wide Varieties of "Trick Stuff"

ANOTHER camera accessory designed to work in conjunction with other devices manufactured by the same concern has been placed on the market by the Goertz Optical Co. It is a Multiple Exposure attachment that combines within its dimensions almost any possibility that might be desired by the cameraman who is employed on trick photography or extensive double exposure work. The new device is slightly larger than the regular Double Exposure or Square closing but the back has been designed to fit into the mask box with other accessories from the same firm.

The illustrations at the bottom of the page explain the mechanism and method of operation. The back of the device is shown in the central figure. The long lever or rod is screwed into a pillar which has on its lower

Now going back to fig. 1, the long lever or rod is screwed into a pillar which has on its lower end a flange to which, by means of two small clampscrews, the two semicircular actuating levers can be clamped independently of each other. These two semicircular levers are connected by means of pivoted thumbscrews to two straight slotted pieces, which on the other end are mounted to pivots fastened to the sliding bars, which carry on the opposite sides the blades. If a clampscrew on one side of the pillar flange is released, the long lever will actuate only one side (1 blade) so the movement of the blades is made independent by means of this. The stroke of the movement can either be adjusted by setting the clampscrew on the pillar flange or by adjusting the pivoted thumbscrew in the slot of the straight slotted piece.

The square opening can be rotated by hand and can be brought in alignment with the camera aperture whenever necessary. The device itself can be rotated and clamped in position on the maskbox.

The device is provided with the following blades which are all symmetrical and can be attached to side of the sliding bars:

Two square closing blades, the same effect as our present Square Closing Device.

Two rhomboid shape blades, with straight sides on the opposite, which can be used for making the sliding door and curtain effect.

Two half-circle blades and one blade with the quarter aperture cut out and its opposite.

These blades are of sheet steel, but can also be made of celluloid, which in turn adds some more effects.

The blades with star, keyhole, heart, stereo which we have shown you belong, of course, to the set, and they play sometimes a very important factor, when it comes to serious double exposure work.

The operation of the device is very simple, and only little experience is necessary in setting the clampscrews and blades and one can set and reset the blades without consultir the ground glass and film when making a do ble exposure or special effect.

When designing this device we have spare no effort to make it a real handy and practic device, easy to be operated by any one, and w think we have succeeded with what we have offer at the present time.

Studio Improvements o West Coast

According to reports from the L. A. color of motion picture studios there is sufficient o timism in the air out in that section of t country to justify the addition of considerab quantities of up-to-the-minute electrical equi ment for studios. A letter just received fro H. F. O'Brien, a frequent contributor to thes columns and the head of the motion pictu division of the Westinghouse Electric Co pany in Los Angeles and vicinity, describes t apparatus in detail, and is accompanied by ph tographs taken by the Metro publicity offic especially for the NEWS.

Says Mr. O'Brien: "The electrical install tion in Metro's West Coast Studio is one of t largest on the Pacific Coast. The power supplied by the Southern California, Ediso Company, entering the studio sub-station 15,000 volts, 3 phase. In the large transfo mer room there is a step down again to 2,20 volts 3 phase, and also to 110 volts 3 phase fo use on the a. c. Cooper-Hewitt units on th stages, and 440 volt 3 phase for use on th power circuits supplying the power to sho garage, etc. The 2,200-volt, 3-phase circuits ar brought through the walls directly into th motor generator room and connect to the cop per bus bars shown behind the top of the a. motor starting panel. Double throw disconnect ing knife switches are mounted at the top o these panels, and there is, of course, one se of three switches for each 2,200-volt circui You will note that the wiring on this boar is exceptionally neat for this class of construc tion, as all the wiring except that require on the back of the switchboard itself is eithe run in conduits, or in a large enclosed stee box shown at the top of the panel.

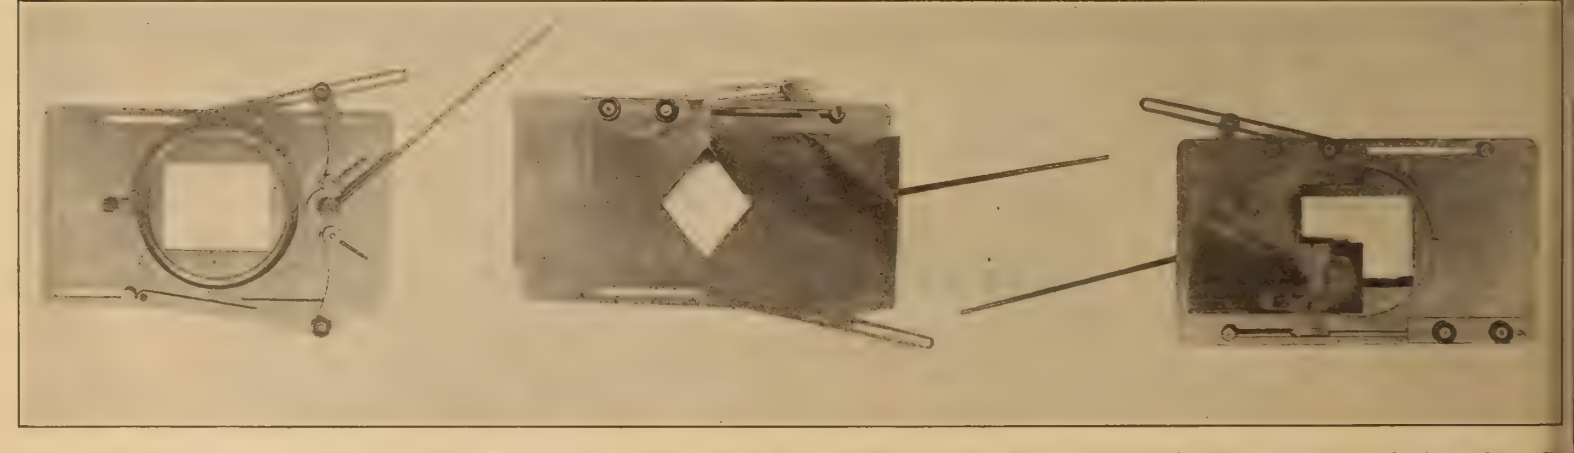

Fig. 1 shows the back of the device. The small wing nuts above and below the long rod are those which bring the separate masks into play. By loosening these nuts the masking can be controlled over any portion of the aperture. Fig. 2 shows the device set for complete diamond shape cut-off and Fig. 3 for another special shape

Left: The 2200 volt motor starting panels in the Metro Sub-station. This switchboard, which was built in the Los Angeles shops of the Westinghouse Co., is constructed of marble finished in Black Marine. The wiring in the rear of the board is unusually neat in arrangement. At the right are LeRoy Baker, Metro Engineer, and H. F. O'Brien, of the Westinghouse Co., watching the load on one of the feeder panels. Two separate 2200 volt buses are shown at the top of the switchboard.

"At the present time there are three motor generator sets installed in this sub-station, and it is unique in the point that because of the circumstances they were forced to install motor generator sets of different characteristics. The first set which they had purchased several years ago was a 150 k. w. 2-unit Fairbanks-Morse set, having a three-wire direct current generator with balancer coils. During the war when Metro moved some of its Eastern productions to the West Coast Studio they were suddenly called upon to supply a large addition to their direct current capacity so the Westinghouse Company assembled a large 300 k.w. 2-unit set. This set is driven by a 500 h. p., 3-phase 2,200-volt induction motor, 3-wire with a balancer set capable of taking care of 500 amperes unbalanced in the neutral.

"Another motor generator set is a Westinghouse 300 k. w. 3-unit synchronous motor generator set and represents the very latest type of equipment. It has been especially designed for studio service. This set has shown remarkable ability to carry heavy overload, and I have personally superintended the test of this installatio when it was made, and have seen it carry actuall 4,000 amperes for a period of 15 minutes, whic is quite remarkable for a 300 k. w. set normall rated at 300 amperes."

In referring to the switchboards, Mr O'Brien says, "The direct current switchboar as you can easily appreciate is a complicate affair because we had to provide for the par allel operation of these three different type of direct current generators all on a commo

oncerning the Executive Board of the Music-Picture Association

Editor's Note: It is proposed to organize an ensive executive board representing all in-ests involved in the new association of Mo-n Picture and Musical Men. Inquiries ught forth answers as follows:

Suggestions for the Executive Board from no Rapee: Mr. J. C. Freund, C. M. Tre-ine, Walter Kramer, Samuel Rothapfel, go Riesenfeld, Max Winkler.

Suggestions for the Executive Board from R. Voigt: Hugo Riesenfeld, Samuel Roth-el, John C. Freund, Alf Klingenberg.

Suggestions for the Executive Board from ss I. M. MacHenry, of the "Billboard": as. Isaacson, Hugo Riesenfeld, C. M. Tre-ine, Mrs. A. F. Oberndorfer, S. L. Rothapfel, x Winkler, Gus Sonneck, Joseph Weber, el Risinger, a representative from the motion ure film producers, a man to represent the atre managers in the South, West and rth, as all sections should be represented in er to spread the work over the entire ntry.

s to suggestions that might help in the for-tion of the association, that opens a large d. The constitution and by-laws should be written, at least, in my opinion, as to make ossible to interest the many allied fields and mit each one to co-operate in the fullest se of the word to make possible the big gs which the association can accomplish if functions properly. I would suggest that ile the dues be not made prohibitive, as to so will exclude many of the managers in the aller towns, and this would prevent to a ge extent just what we hope to put over, they should be large enough to provide sufficient money in the treasury to enable the association to have a fund with which to work in the spreading of the news of its work throughout the country. It would seem that many valuable suggestions will be forthcoming as soon as you have called the first meeting of the board. I assure you, you can count on The Billboard and myself to co-operate in the fullest extent possible.

Suggestions from John D. Sullo, Palace Theatre, Torrington, Conn.: On the Executive Board I would like to see names representing the different branches of the allied interests, namely: Production, Direction, Scenario, Distribution, Exhibitor, both small and big; Publisher, Composer, Cue Sheet Writer, Musician, Musical Director and Editor.

As to personnel I would suggest if possible representations from Famous Players, Associated Producers, Pathe, United Artists, Equity, Bray and Educational, which would take care of the interests of producer distributor; Albert Parker, one scenario writer, Samuel Rothapfel, one other big exhibitor and two small exhibitors, representative from Publishers' Association; John C. Breil, M. Winkler, E. Luz and Sam Berg, Mrs. Bendix, Joseph Weber, John C. Freund, Leonard Liebling Hugo Riesenfeld, Mrs. A. Oberndorder and Charles D. Isaacson.

Suggestions from Fred Stark, Raleigh, N. C.: Dr. Riesenfeld, S. Rothapfel, Erno Rapee, Buel Risinger, John Breil, Mr. Frommel, Gus Sonneck, Mrs. Oberndorfer, C. M. Tremaine, John E. Freund, Mr. Alcroft, Leonard Liebling, Albert Parker, Ernest Voigt, R. Warren, Mr. Marr, Herman Irion, Robert Watkins.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

Your kind letter bearing yesterday's date to hand. I appreciate your naming me as a member of the Executive Board of the now being formed association. I heartily accept because I am willing to devote as much time as I can in bettering all things concerned in the theatre and its music. Being associated with you in this undertaking will be a pleasure because I know that yours are result-getting efforts. I am for better music at all times, and I love to "fight" obstacles which must be eliminated in order to get better music.

I believe the association should endeavor to get all musicians in the country, playing or contemplating playing in picture theatres, to join. They will, I am sure, join with pleasure if they are made known of the benefits of being a member.

I think the Executive Board should consist of not only musicians, but also a publisher, exhibitor, manager, and a well-known projectionist. They are all important as the things to be accomplished need co-operation from all those connected with theatre and music. The number of persons, in the respective work I have mentioned, comprising the Executive Board, you, as chairman, to decide. All the doings of the association to be reported in your columns in the NEWS.

Mr. Winkler of Belwin, Inc., Mr. Luz, of Loew's, and Mr. S. H. Peyser, a Staten Island exhibitor and a strong advocate of good music in the theatres, I believe would be important members of the board. I also believe at least one woman should be on the board to help in the work. One who is a good musician and can devote time to the association will be of benefit to all concerned. The one capable of real work and earnest effort is, I believe, Mrs. S. Marx, 110 Lenox avenue, N. Y. C. I know her to be an exceptionally good musician, and one who would love to improve all things pertaining to the better music by devoting her time and knowledge to the duties assigned to her as a member of the board.

The things the association can accomplish are too numerous to mention. The work that is waiting to be done is sky-high. Some of the things are better cue sheets, better "special" picture music, help to those about to play in picture theatres, instructing managers on the best instrumentation of the orchestra in their respective theatres, and outlet by which the manager can obtain the musician he needs and vice versa, etc.

I accept your offer to be a board member on condition that you are the chairman. Without you it would be a continual cat-fight and nothing accomplished.

I shall be glad to be associated with you in anything you undertake. My experience, knowledge and time are at your disposal. I know it will be time well spent.

JOE ZIVELLI,
Empire Theatre, Staten Island.

Suggestions for the Executive Board from Mrs. Stoner: Dr. Floyd Muckey, 324 W. 103rd St., N. Y. C.; Mr. Gustave L Becker, Studio 110, Carnegie Hall, N Y. C.; Mrs. Effie Perfield, 58 West 40th St., N. Y. C.; Mrs. Nelle Eberhart, 92 S. Oxford St., Brooklyn; Mr. Alfred Mirovitch, 344 West End Ave., N. Y. C.; Mrs. Florence Turner Maley, The Saxonia, N. Y.; Mr. Westley Norda, 825 W. 178th St., N. Y. Bartola Company Opens New Office

Arrangements for the opening of a new office at 2022 Main Street, Dallas, Texas, in charge of Phil H. Pierce, who has been many years in the musical instrument and motion picture business, have been completed by Dan Barton, of the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, who personally visited the southern city for this purpose.

Mr. Pierce has an exceptionally wide acquaintance among exhibitors of the south where he has, for a number of years, acted as representative of various musical instrument companies. He is a skilled organ expert as well as a salesman and has in his employ, a crew of mechanics and demonstrators who have been associated with him for years.

The policy of the southern Bartola Organ interests will follow that of the Chicago headquarters, inasmuch as a school for players will be maintained free of charge to the student organists who will be placed with exhibitors without charge. This has been made a feature by Mr. Barton in his organization for the last seven years.

Mr. Pierce is well pleased with the outlook in the south, stating that the tightness of conditions, due to the cotton market, has not materially affected the motion picture business and he anticipated a big season.

Mr. Barton states that the reputation of his instrument evidently had preceded him, for while in Texas waiting for the demonstration instrument to arrive, to be installed in the new office, Mr. Phillips of the Phillips Egypt theatre of Fort Worth, happened in and after Mr. Pierce explained his new connection to Mr. Phillips, he bought a Bartola without even having seen or heard the instrument and insisted on getting the organ shipped for demonstration purposes and that another instrument be shipped to Texas for use in the Bartola office. Mr. Barton claims this to be a record sale.

WITMARK & SONS,
Gentlemen:

It is with great pleasure that I am able to inform you that I played "Till I'm Called By My Master Above" (Witmark & Sons, 1918) as the theme for that wonderful picture "Earthbound," Feb. 5th. Dear Mr. Isaacson:

It was with much interest that I read your article in last Thursday's Globe, "Some Ideas Disclosed by Movie Conference." For the past few months I have been an organist at the Main street, St. James and Savoy Theatres in Asbury Park, N. J., I did not hold all these jobs at one time, but rotated as occasions demand, these three theatres being under one management. The Main Street is now closed owing to construction of a stage and balcony and as I will be idle for a few weeks I would like you to keep my name before you, or rather put me in touch with some exhibitor as I am desirous of making a change. I am thoroughly in accord with the tone of your articles which treat of a discussion of presenting music of the better sort and getting away from the jazz on a pipe organ. I find that the majority of the people can remember a picture better when a classic theme runs through it, and other good music is used much more so than when nothing but popular dance music is played. I have insisted on using high class music though I have been criticized by patrons and management both for not catering more to popular demand which criticism convinces me more than ever that the average audience can be educated up to a decent standard if the organists hang together.

Against Women?

I am a flutist, experienced in orchestra work, having played in one movie theatre for about two and a half years, besides other engagements. In my efforts to secure a position in New York City I have noticed much discrimination against women musicians (although I have played through a few times in men's orchestras apparently giving satisfaction.)

May say that I studied with Mr. Barrere at the Institute of Musical Art, having had a scholarship there.

If the request is not impertinent, may I ask if you will kindly put me in touch with those parties who would consider women players in their orchestras?

VIOLET A. CONKLIN,

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

I take this opportunity of expressing my thanks for the chance to relate my views to such a selected audience as was present at the convention.

You can count me in as a hard co-worker in helping to bring about what you are aiming at.

MAX WINKLER.
Belwin, Inc., N. Y. C.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

Please allow me to congratulate you upon the success of the music conference held recently under your inspiration and guidance. I am sure that the whole moving picture industry will be greatly benefited thereby, as well as the music profession.

In regarding the synopsis in your issue of the 5th, regarding the conference, I particularly noticed a reply of S. M. Berg to a representative of the Society of Authors and Composers, which said in effect that there was more good music non-taxable than the Society controls. I merely wish to express myself as of the same opinion and register one sincere protest at the purpose of this society.

There is not a publisher in America today who does not know and recognize the fact that his greatest help in marketing his publications is and has been the theatre, and especially the vaudeville and moving picture houses. They all used to send copies of their publications to us, asking us to use them when ever possible and "push" them as much as possible as a "special favor" to them. I have spent about 13 years in picture theatres as an organist, and I have always helped their numbers whenever I could do so without taking on the appearance of "plugging." Some of those who now are in society, until recently advertised on the music sent us professionals that we nor any one else would have to pay the tax or fee for playing their music. I particularly have in mind Harry Von Tilzer, and several more like him who have just recently entered the Society.

Like most moving picture theatre musicians, I use wherever possible only music of those publishers who do not belong to this society. That means that I will drop all music sent me from those publishers of the society, and substitute on every occasion possible the music of other publishers. Of course, we musicians do not have to pay this tax, but we consider it absolutely unfair, and unjust, and a turning-on those who have been their best friends.

I am sure that if all theatre musicians took this stand the Society of Composers, etc., would not exist very long. If all theatres cut out their music and refused to be bluffed into paying the fees, they would have no reason for existing, and those publishers who have been in this thing would have a hard road traveling thereafter.

My house has paid them for one so I understand, but at the expiration of that time I shall advise them not to make any further payment.

HAROLD PRICE,
Greensburg, Pa.

Will you kindly advise the different publishing companies of New York City to forward to the Victoria Theatre a professional copy solo piano parts on all their issues from this date on, and if possible forward copies of the biggest hits published in the past three months. This is for the organist who plays during the relief of the regular orchestra and cannot use the orchestration organ part conveniently.

I would appreciate it very much if you would emphasize the necessity of having the piano solo professional copies of the latest comic opera hits which are now playing New York City.

Very truly yours,
A. L. SKINNER, Manager,
Victoria Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y.

bus and also to provide a double bus, so that it was possible to boost the voltage several points if it was desired to carry a large amount of direct current across the street onto one of the other lots.

"The switchboard as now designed will permit any one of the three sets to be operated either alone or in combination with any other est in the room. As a general rule, the 3-unit, 300 k. w. set is operated, and since the motor on this set is designed for 100 per cent. power factor at full load, it will oprate as a leading power factor of the studio connected load as well as improve the voltage regulation on the studio lot. If it is necessary to operate two or more sets, one of the other two unit equipments is operated in parallel with the 3-unit set, and in that case, of course, no balancer equipment is required, as the 3-unit set takes care of the total unbalance of the entire load. This is very conclusive evidence of the supriority of the 3-unit set for studio application.

"The direct current switchboard, you will note, is very complete and neat in appearance, being built up of black Marine finished marble, having all of the features of the Westinghouse 7-inch round face with black dials and white figures. This feature adds to the appearance of the board, and also makes it easier to read meters.

"All of the generator panels are provided with automatic carbon circuit breakers, and the generator breakers are electrically interlocked with the a. c. motor starting switches, so that should the a. c. power fail on any motor starting switches it would be impossible to motor this set from the direct current end. All of the d. c. and a. c. feeder panels are provided with ammeters, so that it is possible to tell at a glance, the load on each side of every 3-wire circuit. Automatic carbon circuit breakers are provided for each outgoing feeder circuit. One single voltmeter mounted on a swinging bracket at the extreme left of the switchboard is used for reading the direct current voltage of any one of the direct current generators or on the bus itself.

"The Devil's Confession"

(Circle Film Attractions—State Rights)

THIS is a very simply made rural drama, crude in spots both in direction and photography if compared to the highest class productions. It presents, however, a well planted story in which suspense is worked up to the climax by means which, if they are obvious and mechanical, are sufficient to keep the attention of an audience not too highly educated in movie construction.

The picture was made by Director John Lopez. In the cast are Mary Eberle, Frank Williams, the leading man; and Louise Lee, the leading lady. Harold Foshay, the heavy, is the most attractive member of the cast.

No attempt has been made for the so-called "points of appeal." There are no cabaret sets or country mansions. But Mr. Lopez has managed to get the atmosphere of rural life into his picture. Aiding in accomplishing this effect are some pretty exterior shots of country scenes. The story concerns the killing of a man on a country roadside. The hero finds him dying and is accused and convicted of the murder. Sentenced to die, we see his mother and sweetheart making personal appeals to the governor for a pardon. The villain finally confesses to the crime after his cap has been found near the scene of the crime. Then comes the rush of the condemned man's sister to the governor with the signed confession. She misses the train, and jumps on a horse. The saddle breaks and the horse runs away, so she jumps in an automobile. And she reaches the executive mansion just before midnight.

Criticism could easily be made of the tinting, or rather the lack of it, and the acting of "Dr. Hill" and the "Governor." Also of one or two inadequate interiors. There is some action in the picture, and an interesting old time country dance scene. Length 5 reels.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"South Sea Magic"

A SPLENDID Educational from every angle. The picture shows many beautiful views of the Samoan islands, takes in the surrounding shores and in tinted form pictures the tropical waves as they dash upon the sands, giving the scenes a sort of weird fascination.

For interest the natives are brought into view and in a compact form their modes and methods of life are pictured from the time they get up in the morning until sleep overtakes them in the still hours of the evening.

And there is no more interesting "class of native" in the world today than the South Sea Islander. His methods of making bread, his feasts, his dances and the wonderful canoes which aid him in procuring the fish upon which he lives, are all shown in picturesque manner.

For a thriller, the cameraman takes us out to sea in a large boat manned by able Samoan seamen, and in a series of tensely exciting moments pictures the methods of catching or hunting the shark.

The word hunting is used because the fishermen turn hunters when they reach their destination and after a few preliminaries, which consist of stirring up the water with a peculiar sort of implement, procure a strong rope which is shaped into a lasso and when Mr. Shark appears near the surface, the noose is slipped over his head and he is drawn up, not without a violent struggle, and into the boat.

Another interesting moment is when the young children appear in their native costumes and do a series of interesting dances. These scenes are only exceeded by the ones in which all the members of the tribe participate in the big feast or pow-wow.

A very good short subject and one that will fit into any program.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Hubby Behave"

(Vanity Comedy—Educational)

"HUBBY BEHAVE" is a pleasing comedy with just enough incident to carry it through and keep the "interest up" throughout.

Action is the byword and so closely do the actors follow it that the tempo is entirely too fast in many of the scenes.

This is probably due to the director who should have "slowed up" here and there in order to vary the situations.

The plot or whatever it may be called has been used many times, but has been polished with different settings, actors and a few new "gags."

The jealous wife, the scheming husband and his friends who like club life, the cops and the jail are all here with the usual explanations and happy ending.

Irene Dalton, an attractive young woman plays the leading feminine role with "an abundance" of action, while Earl Rodney keeps his end up in the same manner. The supporting cast is up to standard.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Big Bob"

(Jack Perrin—Two Reels—Universal)

THIS is just an ordinary western with the star in the role of a sheriff who is on the trail of a couple of bad men. The opening scenes show the star leaving his home and mother and following the trail in pursuit of the villains.

When he has about "caught up" with the bad men, they swing around and ride back to the hero's home. After a hard day's pursuit, Perrin reaches his little cabin to find that th bad men, in revenge, have killed his mother.

Vowing vengeance at her grave he sets ou after the murderers and in the usual roug and tumble fight kills the principal offender.

The scenes are mostly exteriors until th finish when the usual dance hall and countr hotel are "rung in."

In the cast is an alert dog who is always o the job when trouble is brewing.—FRANI LEONARD.

"The Trigger Trail"

(Jack Perrin-Universal—Two Reels)

THOSE who like excitement will find plenty of it in this two reeler, for the bad ma is extra bad and keeps the sheriff and his possi in hot water until he is landed in jail.

But the jail is not strong enough to hold him so he makes his escape by breaking through th roof. He then seizes a young child and rides off with it to the mountains where his enemie are defied.

In a strong scene he captures the hero, beats him and then lets him "run" for his life giving him the command, "Save yourself if you can."

Perrin avoids his shot, however, and when the villain is about to kill the father of the heroine, hero arrives just in time to save him

If your patrons like thrillers, here's one just as good as a serial.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Wedding Bells Out of Tune"

(Paramount—Mack Sennett Comedy—Two Reels)

COMPARED to former Sennett-produced laughmakers, this comedy is a sorry example. Its story is sufficiently interesting, but it will never be greeted with any great laughter.

Louise Fazenda is in the cast, but has no opportunity to be funny. In fact all the cast, the two newly-wed couples and the detective go through their uninspired action in a colorless way. There is no real humorous situation in the entire two reels, nor no very new gag. The story concerns a newly-married couple who are visited by a second very unwelcome couple. A detective is brought in, hired by one of the wives in order to secure evidence to obtain her divorce. Wife Number Two and husband Number One are forced to spend the night together in a Ferris Wheel compartment when the machinery stops while they are in mid-air. Of course, complications ensue which are straightened out when the wife discovers that her friend has hired a detective. This detective is made to bob in and out in all sorts of unexpected places in various disguises. The picture is perfectly clean. Mal St. Claire directed.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS"

(William De Mille-Paramount)

Fine Production, But Subject Matter Is Talky

ONE can usually bank upon William De Mille's productions. This director is possessed of enough dramatic instinct and artistic perceptions to make the most of any story intrusted to his care. In "What Every Woman Knows" he hasn't failed as far as realizing the values of Barrie's play, emphasizing the characterization and giving color to the quaint atmosphere and the playwright's customary charm. Yet with all his ability he has not been able to make the picture other than a composition of mechanical scenes which do not convince. He has not been able to develop his scenes with action and incident dominant and is forced to have recourse to a great deal of titling. In fact there is scarcely a scene which is not punctuated with a descriptive title or one which presents a flash of dialogue.

Barrie cannot be transferred to the screen in such a manner. And yet one cannot blame De Mille. It appears to us that the play does not possess those ingredients which make motion pictures. The subtleties of Barrie are just faintly suggested. To anyone who remembers Maude Adams in the offering—that person will probably feel disappointed. De Mille has done wonders in pointing the Barrie detail—the quaint customs and manners. He has not erred in this direction. As far as we are able to discern he has not erred in any direction. Had he incorporated his own version the Barrie champions would have cried out with loud protestations. "What Every Woman Knows" is not another "Admirable Crichton" or rather "Male and Female" as it was known on the screen.

While it contains the same rich characterization, the moving incident is not so substantial. With some of the extraneous matter eliminated and a reel taken away, the action would be more compressed and the abundance of titles would not be so evident. The theme revolves around the conceit of the average man, who, forging to the top, thinks he is entirely responsible for his success, whereas, in reality, it is his wife who furnishes the stimulus. Barrie plays one sex against the other. He presents a lack of charm as the cause of a husband losing interest in his wife. In this way the picture affords rich entertainment. It may make more than one woman confront her mirror and study her personality. There is not enough contrasting humor to give the feature the needed note of balance. It seems to dwell upon a melancholy key. The play itself is rich and pointed satire; the picture is neither satire nor drama. But it is quaint enough to generate charm and novelty. And it is very well acted by Lois Wilson. Conrad Nagel is hardly the type for the canny Scot.—Length, 7 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

An event of interest in motion picture entertainment is promised next ———— at the ———— theatre when the William De Mille production of James M. Barrie's celebrated play, "What Every Woman Knows," is the feature attraction, This was one of Maude Adams' greatest successes and the picture version by Mr. De Mille is said to be a most faithful adaptation—one rich with the customary Barrie charm. An excellent cast of players has been selected to interpret the picture—a cast that includes Lois Wilson, Conrad Nagel, Charles Ogle and Fred Huntley.

It is a story about Maggie Wylie, a quaint Scotch girl who believes herself without charm, but in reality is most charming, and possesses an unusual quantity of intelligence. Maggie, through a strange bargain made by her father, is married to John Shand, an ambitious politician, who, unknown to himself, only wins success because of clever touches his wife injects into his speeches when she types them. He is ready to throw her over for another woman, when, on the eve of his biggest speech, he finds himself helpless and calls upon Maggie for aid. Miss Wilson and Mr. Nagel have the leading roles. The picture is rich in incident, charm, romance and adventure. It also presents colorful characterization and is excellently directed by Mr. De Mille.

PROGRAM READER

What kind of a wife should a man choose, the pretty little flower who holds up her head and inspires her husband with sweet glances and charming vanities, or the practical, brainy girl who cooperates with her husband in his various enterprises and helps him to overcome his obstacles? Sir James M. Barrie makes it quite plain which kind of love is the most enduring in "What Every Woman Knows," the new Paramount picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— as a William De Mille production featuring Lois Wilson and Conrad Nagel. The picture is said to carry the delightful Barrie charm quite as well as the stage play and it abounds with quaint touches of character and romance. Remember next ————. Don't miss it.

"THE GUILE OF WOMEN"

(Goldwyn)

Rogers, Good Story and Clever Titles Make This Fine Entertainment

EXCEPTIONAL story material both in plot and development and homely old Bill Rogers in a role eminently suited to his particular talents makes this very fine entertainment for audiences appreciating something that gets away from the orthodox.

The star is presented as a "squarehead" sailor who has found his way to San Francisco's waterfront, there to become disillusioned of women including his Swedish sweetheart to whom he had sent money for the journey across the sea, to join him.

Without Rogers, "The Guile of Women" would probably be just a picture. With him as "Yal" it becomes one of the most human and unusual stories ever presented on the screen. Rogers has an opportunity for a display of his particular brand of comedy, but also is provided with some emotional scenes that eclipse anything in screen pathos which he has as yet attempted. He plays with a finesse and skill worthy of emulation by the greatest stars and depends less on his particular tricks and mannerisms than in any picture in which he has previously appeared.

Mr. Rogers is aided by a strong cast of which Mary Warren as the Swedish emigrant girl, is entitled to special credit. The picture has been photographed amid splendid atmospheric surroundings, San Francisco's water front, and Mr. Badger's direction aided by clever titles, written in dialect, has told the simple story clearly.

While the story of "The Guile of Women" needed Rogers to make it big, the production is by no means a vehicle in the accepted sense of the word. There are several good roles. Bert Sprotte scores as "Skole," another Swedish sailor who places little faith in the feminine sex. Doris Pawn also has a good part in "Annie." The picture should be ranked as a comedy. There are some dramatic moments, but for the most part it just breezes along as entertainment, depending on its incident, humorous captions and likeable characters to get it across. Should make Rogers new friends and be a hit with people who have liked this star in previous productions.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Yal	Will Rogers

Story by Peter Clark MacFarlane.
Directed by Clarence Badger.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Homely old Bill Rogers in "The Guile of Women," a story of a "squarehead" sailor and his Swedish sweetheart, is the feature picture offering at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' showing beginning ————.

In the offering Rogers has one of the best roles of his career as "Yal," who has come to America to make his fortune and who invests his first savings in a delicatessen store only to lose it. The picture has plenty of the brand of comedy which has made the star famous and also delivers some emotional acting that reveals talents which no one had suspected he possessed.

In the supporting cast is Mary Warren as "Hulda," "Yal's" Swedish sweetheart, Bert Sprotte, Lionel Belmore, Nick Cogley and other well known players. The locale of the production is along the water front of San Francisco and the company was taken to the actual scenes for the filming of the story. The story of "The Guile of Women" is by Peter Clark MacFarlane, author of many popular Saturday Evening Post sea stories. The direction is by Clarence Badger.

PROGRAM READER

If you liked "Jubilo," "Honest Hutch" and the other feature pictures which Goldwyn has produced with homely Bill Rogers in the leading role, you will be especially pleased with "The Guile of Women," Rogers' latest starring vehicle which comes to the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

In "The Guile of Women" Rogers plays the role of a "squarehead" sailor who has come from Sweden to San Francisco to make his fortune before sending for his sweetheart, "Hulda."

How his plans go wrong in this connection, and also in others notably when he invests all his savings in a delicatessen store, makes a story of strong heart interest and also furnishes oodles of comedy of the brand which has made the star popular. Mary Warren plays "Hulda," while others in a strong supporting cast are Bert Sprotte, Lionel Belmore, Charles A. Smily, Nick Cogley and Doris Pawn. The picture is an adaptation of Peter MacFarlane's Saturday Evening Post story. The production was made in the actual locale of the story, San Francisco's water front and many beautiful scenic shots have been secured as backgrounds as well as authentic some fine sea stuff. Clarence Badger was the director.

SUGGESTIONS

For newspaper advertising we would use good scene stills in big space with the humorous titles of the film to explain them. The title would not enter in our exploitation any more than necessary. We would rather give the billing to Rogers and the story with stress on the comedy angles. Mention should be made of the author and his Saturday Evening Post story, with emphasis on the offering as a story of the sea taken in the actual locale called for. For a prologue Swedish songs and dances given with a stage setting showing the 'Frisco water front, with your characters dressed as sailors would be appropriate. Lobby displays should have the sea atmosphere also.

CATCH LINES

Bill Rogers is "hong-konged" in this humorous story of a squarehead who came to America to make his fortune.

"THE OFF-SHORE PIRATE"
(Metro)

Not Enough Substance for Picture Entertainment

VIOLA DANA is aiming at a pretty high mark, what with the good impressions of her last previous release, "A Chorus Girl's Romance." Compared with her present offering "The Off-Shore Pirate," it emphasizes the difference between a great entertainment and a poor one. F. Scott Fitzgerald, the author of both stories, hasn't been so inspired with the current release. It is really of single-track proportions and does not contain enough variety of incident—enough crisp action to warrant giving it feature length. It may be considered as an exceedingly mild offering colored by some good touches here and there but for the most part developing its naive story with scarcely a sign of sustaining highlight.

Credit must be given the scenario writer, Waldemar Young, for incorporating the hokum of the colored crew—a crew which didn't appear in the original. Were it not for the dusky sailors with the huge dice and their manner of carrying on the burden of the plot the picture would have sagged so badly that even Viola Dana and her vibrant personality couldn't have saved it. The scenarioist has kept it moving, however, with these incidental interludes—interludes which must be accepted as pure hokum, but which spell the only note of entertainment. The idea, itself, is founded upon the rich and independent girl who is determined to have her own way—even in matrimonial matters. So she is kidnapped by the very man she wishes to avoid, without suspecting his identity. From the kidnapping episode in the second reel to the conclusion when she is rescued the picture is dependent on the jazzy crew.

The star does not have much opportunity to give color to her individual expressions. She is locked up; ditto the young skipper; ditto the white crew. There is much scanning of the sea through binoculars and much nautical talk. The subtitles are breezy enough and really bolster the picture in the weak places. The story being frail in the original, it has devolved upon the scenario writer and the director to put action and incident in it. This they have done and it makes better reading via the silver-sheet than the magazine page. The star has an ensemble of suitors who make love via a deep plunge in the waters or via a canoe. During their proposals, the spirited heroine is cutting up didoes—according to the regulation custom—splashing, winking and all that sort of thing. The really humorous parts of the picture are found in the hokum of the crew and the snappy titles. The technical details are first rate.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

By F. Scott Fitzgerald.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Viola Dana, she of the buoyant personality and delightful ways, will be the star at the ———— theatre on ———— when the Metro picture, "The Off-Shore Pirate," is shown. This is an adaptation of the Saturday Evening Post story of the same name by F.. Scott Fitzgerald, the well known fiction writer, and the author of "The Chorus Girl's Romance," the previous Viola Dana picture. The star is said to give an ideal interpretation of Ardita Farnam, the young heiress whom friends have had captured by a pirate so as to save her from the plotting of a sinister scheming foreigner. The pirate in question is not the regular orthodox, Captain Kidd specie; he becomes one for a matter of convenience to save her from the wily Russian in search of a rich wife.

Ardita's life has been just one proposal after another and she is bored until the Russian comes and wins her with his polished maners. While on a short cruise she is accosted by a pirate with a gang of cut-throats—and then the fun begins. Much praise is due to the finished acting of the supporting cast. The story is adapted skillfully by Waldemar Young, one of the ablest scenario writers of the day. Dallas Fitzgerald directed. The picture is declared to be a most entertaining romance which uncovers undeniable charm and novelty.

PROGRAM READER

"The Off-Shore Pirate" is a romance of youth with dainty Viola Dana as the star. F. Scott Fitzgerald, the author, is acknowledged to be the leading fictionist of the day—an author whose stories are in wide demand. It was in a previous Fitzgerald story, "A Chorus Girl's Romance," that Miss Dana scored a great hit. "The Off-Shore Pirate" is a tale of a modern Captain Kidd and a girl who outwits him at his own game. She is an independent girl, used to having her own way in everything. And she is determined to choose her own husband. How she does it is told in five charming reels—a picture which moves with unbounded humor. Miss Dana is supported by an adequate cast. The picture was excellently adapted by Waldemar Young and directed by Dallas Fitzgerald. At this theatre next ————.

SUGGESTIONS

The title is a corker and can come in for some good exploitation. You can also take advantage of the author's name. F. Scott Fitzgerald is a recognized short story writer and doubtless many of your patrons are familiar with his novel, "This Side of Paradise" and his humorous magazine stories. You can mention that he was responsible for "A Chorus Girl's Romance," a previous Dana feature. Present stills of the scenes. Use compo boards with red skull and cross-bones for art display for your frames. You can stage a miniature prologue after the manner of a pirate ensemble. You can use the skull and cross-bones idea for stimulating interest in several ways. Tell them "The Off-Shore Pirate" is coming. Treat your copy in a humorous fashion.

CATCH LINES

How could a man win her? With love? That was funny. With wealth? She had enough for a foreign loan. With position? Hardly. She treated the boys—well, like bell-boys. Then how? See Viola Dana in "The Off-Shore Pirate."

"ALL DOLLED UP"
(Universal)

Pleasing Offering With the Star in an Ideal Role

UNIVERSAL has hit upon an appropriate formula for the expression of Gladys Walton's abundant charm and talent. The "rags to riches" idea proved an acceptable background in a previous release, "Rich Girl, Poor Girl," and there is no doubt about the entertaining quality of her present picture, "All Dolled Up." There is very little variation on this Cinderella theme. It has served long and faithfully and scenario writers will continue to use it till the millennium. Perhaps a few of the discriminate will object to the regulation methods of the director in shaping his action and incident. He hasn't varied to any extent from orthodox channels. The cop who chases the toughs of the neighborhood and the employment of strong-arm tactics by the heroine to frustrate the villain—these touches are anticipated and, sure enough, they appear.

Yet "All Dolled Up" has enough on its credit side to please any type of patron. The spectator will find entertainment in the manner in which the star emerges from rags to riches. In recovering a stolen necklace for a customer in the department store of which she is an employee, she is reimbursed with a wealth of milady's finery. The hero doesn't make his introduction until the third reel, but once his appearance is made the obviousness of the story becomes apparent. The heroine wants what she terms a "swell guy," and little dreams that a good looking chauffeur is a member of his profession. A flirtation develops into a romance with the young people living up to false pretensions. There is a melodramatic flair to the picture which gives it the necessary balance, although it somewhat strains credulity. It has to do with the blackmailing tactics of a swindle sheet. Naturally the heroine is compromised but she saves her honor through the employment of a good right arm and the rough-house style of her escort.

The picture sustains the interest because of the sympathetic note and the fact that the scenes are presented with color and are gauged in the right tempo. The action never drags—not even when it becomes obvious. There is a chance for a surprise twist in the feature which would have given it a touch of novelty. The hero's identity might have been left to the imagination. Instead you guess that he comes from the same lowly environment. Miss Walton is more at ease in "All Dolled Up" than in a previous release. There is none of that straining to be original or unduly colorful. A first class program feature, it should satisfy wherever played.—Length, 5 reels. —Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Gladys Walton, the pretty and charming Universal star, is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in "All Dolled Up," written by John Colton and directed by Rollin Sturgeon. This feature is considered the most entertaining in which the vital and vibrant Miss Walton has ever appeared. Her personality is ideal for the role of the department store clerk who dreams of romance and longs to be the wife of a rich gentleman.

As Maggie Quick she is well versed in the art of self-defense. Indeed, there isn't anyone who is willing to court any trouble. Due to her resourcefulness she is able to save a rich customer some valuable gems and is promptly rewarded with a fine wardrobe. One day she happens to have a flirtation with a young man driving a huge motor car. She never dreams that he is only a chauffeur—not until he makes a confession that he was brought up in the same neighborhood. The picture is crammed with human touches and the humorous note is well emphasized. Considerable local color adds tone to the production and provides a fitting atmosphere.

PROGRAM READER

She clerked in a department store but just because she had the interest of the store at heart she saved one of its customers from being robbed. As a reward she was given a rich wardrobe which enabled her to carry out her fine dreams. Some day she might meet the young man of her heart—that is if she was dressed for the occasion. He saw her in her finery and thought her far above him socially. She thought the same of him. In reality he was a chauffeur. How they met—how a romance developed—how each discovered that the other was a pretender—this is all told in five most enjoyable reels in the Gladys Walton picture, "All Dolled Up," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. It is a human and humorous feature which is rich in acting, color and atmosphere. Don't miss it.

SUGGESTIONS

Gladys Walton is rapidly making a name for herself as a star with a decided personality. She has developed a following due to her charm, talent and good looks and the fact that Universal has given her some good pictures. So play up her name, telling that she is coming to your theatre next ———— in her best picture—a picture ideally suited to her personality. There is a corking title to this picture which can be exploited in a novel manner. You can put on a prologue after the Cinderella idea. Or a novel scene with two girls—one attired in up-to-date fashion, the other in rags, singing from frames in a backdrop. Use catch lines.

"YOU AND I"
(Swedish Biograph-Radiosoul)

Wonderfully Impressive Drama; Well Produced and Acted

IT is to be regretted that more of the Swedish Biograph productions do not reach the American screen. There is a thoroughness—a simplicity—a rugged honesty about its offerings which might well be emulated on this side of the Atlantic. Whether it is because they are more kin to the soil or that they are realists, first, last, and all the time—there is no doubt that they get right down to the bedrock of humanities and express them in terms of fidelity and beauty. "You and I" is a fitting successor to "A Man There Was" and it presents Victor Seastrom again as star and director. The picture is the adaptation of Sigur Johnston's powerfully dramatic play, "Eyvind of the Hills," which is being enacted in New York this season.

The story is simplicity itself and revolves around a theme of a woman's self-sacrifice. In fact the idea is really based upon the power of love, yet it moves with such compelling force, the scenes building to heightened climaxes that one is overwhelmed with suspense. Truly one loses all sense of time and environment, so impressive are the rugged story of these Norse lovers and the marvelously picturesque backgrounds. The picture has been staged among the fjords, mountains and table-lands of Iceland and is mostly told with exteriors. The interiors present a quaintness, a rich atmosphere as of a world apart. But enchanting as the grandeur of its scenery, it is the vivid and stark drama which dominates—a drama which progresses with remarkable clarity, straight to its logical climaxes. A refugee from the hills enters the valley and falls in love with a wealthy land-owner. He is recognized by the constable and in a tense scene in which he is being persecuted the lovers make their escape to the hills.

This part of the picture presents a lapse in the dramatic sequences—but it is only a lapse, as if one is allowed time to take a long breath. Here is where the photographic appeal comes in for appreciation. Clouds are discerned far below—far in the backgrounds are towering crags and mountains, all beautifully tinted. Vivid is the scene where a friend is torn between love and lust. The hero's life is in the balance as he hangs to a sapling on the cliff. Again the climax is overwhelming when the sanctuary of the lovers is discovered. They make their escape, but being hounded so consistently brings them to tragic consequences. So they perish in one another's arms. The picture is marred by an utterly irrelevant prologue and epilogue which should be dispensed with immediately. It has no place in advancing the drama and really spoils the good impressions of the picture. Seastrom is an actor thoroughly grounded in his art. His support is exceptional.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.
